10. This Binius would fain conceal; and accordingly in the title of that Council of Frankfort, was willing to anticipate the Reader's judgment, by telling him that theſe 300 Biſhops there convened [f] Confirmed the Acts of the Council of Nice in the matter of Images. [f] Acta Nicani Concilii II. in cauſa imaginum confirmant. Concil. Tom. 6. p. 163.

11. For this he * afterwards gives his reaſons ſuch as they are, but acknowledges that both the great Cardinals Bellarmine and Baronius, were of the contrary mind. To them therefore, and to the evidences, whereby they were convinced, I may be allowed to appeal. * p. 118.

12. And indeed [g] Baronius is ſo far from doubting it, that he ſolemnly profeſſeth by undeniable teſtimonies to put it beyond all queſtion, and ſo he doth, out of Walafridus Strabo, Amalarius, Hincmarus, Anaſtaſius, and many others. [g] Tom. 9. p. 539. An. Ch. 794. n. 27. Tantum abeſt ut negemus Nicænam ſecundam Synodum eandémque ſeptimam Oecumenicam dictam damnatam dici in Francofordienſi Concilio, ut etiam augeamus numerum teſtium id profitentium, & quidem haud dubia fidei aut authoritatis.

13. What he determineth concerning the invalidity of that Council of Frankfort, is not now pertinent to examine; my concluſion is ſufficiently evinced without that inquiry, viz. That that Council of Nice was no Univerſal Teſtimony of Tradition Apoſtolical, or indeed of the whole Church of that age, when it was ſo far from being received and approved by all the world, that as ſoon as the News of the Acts thereof came to the ears of the Council, then aſſembled at Frankfort (three hundred Biſhops, of Germany, France and Italy, ſaith Surius, others add, out of Spain alſo) the Council ſolemnly oppugned and refuted them.

14. Of this the Reader may have the cleareſt proſpect in ſeveral places of the Works of G. Caſſander, both in his † Conſultation, and eſpecially in his * 19 Epiſtle, where he gives Joh. Molinæus a full account of the iv. Books written by the authority, and under the name of Charles the French King, and approved by that whole Council of Frankfort, and ſo ſent to the Pope againſt the Decrees of the Council of Nice in the matter of Image-worſhip, pronouncing both of thoſe Books, and that Synod, and other eminent perſons of that age, of the ſame ſenſe with them, [h] that they never were condemned, nor, as he thinks, will ever be by thoſe men that are in their wits. † Pag. 977. * Pag. 1103. [h] Qui libros hoſce damnandos aut reprobandos putet, idem neceſſario & ipſam Synodum Francofordienſem, & alios inſignes eâ ætate ſcriptores damnandos eſſe fateatur, quod neque factum eſt unquam; neque futurum certè à ſanis hominibus puto. Ibidem pag. 1104.

15. Some queſtion I know there is made by others; whether this Council of Frankfort rightly underſtood the Decrees of that Council of Nice, and whether thoſe iv. Books compiled, as it is probable, by Alcuinus and approved by that Council, did not confound the two Seventh Councils, the true, that at Nice, and the falſe, that of the Iconoclaſta at Conſtantinople.

16. But neither are we concern'd in either of thoſe queſtions. For ſtill it remains certain, and unqueſtioned, that the Council of Nice (whether by their miſtake, or otherwiſe) was not by all men univerſally received. The CCC. Biſhops at Frankfort received it not, but profeſtly oppoſed it.

17. And

17. And if the Canons of Frankfort were not approved by the Pope (as 'tis again ſuggeſted) yet ſtill this is a ſufficient prejudice to the Univerſality of thoſe Nicene Canons (without the Pope's being one of thoſe that condemned them), which cannot be Univerſal teſtifiers, whilſt they want Univerſal conſent, and are oppugned, and diſclaimed by Charles the King, and the three hundred Biſhops which were there convened at Frankfort, and by as many, as adhered to the ſentence of thoſe Biſhops in oppoſition to thoſe but CCCXXX. which were aſſembled at Nice.

18. And indeed we that in this matter approve of the Doctrine of the Frankfort Decrees, as that is ſumm'd up in thoſe few words, which the [1] Books in Charles's name deduce from Pope Gregory, in his Epiſtle to Serenus Biſhop of Maſſilles, viz. That Images are neither to be broken nor worſhipt, that they be lawfully uſed in the Church, but muſt not by any means be adored, can never be blamed for rejecting the Doctrine of any General Council. For if that of Nice, which is deemed ſuch, define not for adoration of Images, then it is not rejected by us; and if it do define for it, then was it rejected by Frankfort, and if ſo, then was it no General Council. The Dilemma is concludent herein without any farther inquiries, either it is not rejected by us at all, as teaching no more than we profeſs to acknowledge, or elſe it may be lawfully rejected by us, becauſe we have this evidence on our ſides from the oppoſitions of the CCC. Fathers at Frankfort, and of many more, as hath been ſaid, that it was not Univerſal.

SECT. XI.

Of the Eighth General Council.

1. AS to the Eighth and laſt of that number, to which the Pope's profeſſion extends, I deſire the Reader will paſs his judgment of it, by that which he will find in the [k] Sixth Seſſion of the Council of Florence in the year of Chriſt, MCCCCXXXIX.

[k] Concil. Tom. 8. p. 598.

2. There in the paſſages between Marcus Epheſius, and Julian the Cardinal about the Ancient Councils, the Cardinal deſired a ſight of the Acts of the VIII. Council, and complains that the Book was denied him. Marcus anſwers that it was not eaſie for him to give him the Book, but if it were, there [l] was no neceſſity that they ſhould number among the Oecumenical Councils one that was [m] not approved, but rather reprobated, or annull'd; for this Synod, ſaid he, had Acts againſt Photius, in time of Pope John and Pope Adrian, and after it there was another Synod [n] which reſtored Photius, and annull'd that former Synod; that this Synod called alſo the Eighth, was under Pope John, who wrote Epiſtles for Photius, and thoſe ſtill extant that they (the Romans) were not ignorant (he believed) either of that Synod or of thoſe Epiſtles: And ſeeing [o] the Acts of that Synod were abrogated, it was not reaſonable that they ſhould ſeek for it, but rather for that which was after it, which from that time to this very day, (of the Florentine meeting) was read in the great Church of Conſtantinople, in theſe words, Let all that hath been written or ſpoken againſt the holy Patriarchs, Photius, or Ignatius be anathema. Wherefore, ſaith he, it is not fit that thoſe, [p] Acts which were abrogated, ſhould be produced.

[l] Οὐκ ἔχομεν ἀνάλυτα ἵνα συναριθμῶμεν ἢ οἰκουμενικαῖς συνόδοις ἄλλην συνόδον ἥτις οὐδὲ ἀσύγχυτος (it ſhould be, I ſuppoſe, ἐστὶ σύγχυτος) ὅλως ἀλλὰ μᾶλλον ἀκυρωθεῖσα. Ib.

[m] So Jeremias Patriarch of Conſtantinople in his cenſure of the Germans, ſtill mentions but the ſeven General Councils, ſee p. 6. Ex ſanctis & univerſalibus ſeptem Synodis, &c. and p. 13. Nicana, & Conſtantinopolitana, reliquæ etiam Univerſales quinque Synodi——

[n] Ἀνωθῶσι τὸν Φώτιον, καὶ ἀκυρῶσι τὴν πρώτην συνόδον. Ibid.

[o] Ἠκυρώθησαν τὰ τῆς συνόδου ἐκείνης.

[p] Ἅπερ ἀνέλεγκτα οὐδὲ πρέπει ἵνα ἔλθωσιν εἰς τὸ μέσον.

3. To this full Declaration and recognition of Marcus, appealing to the Romaniſts own knowledge for the truth of it, the Cardinal's anſwer is very ſhort, in theſe words, I will, ſaith he, free you from this fear that any thing ſhall be read from the VIII. Council: We deſire that the Book which we demanded may be brought, that we may conſult ſome paſſages out of the VI. and VII. Council, and of [q] the VIII, We ſay nothing.

[q] Περὶ τῆς ὀγδόης οὐδὲν λέγομεν.

4. Here 'tis evident, 1. That the VIII. Synod was ſoon retracted again: and ſo not univerſally received, or approved: 2. That the Greek Church from that time to the Council of Florence, i. e. for the ſpace of almoſt DC. years, received it not, but the contrary, viz. that which abrogated it. 3. That this being vouched in a Council to the Romans, could not in any part be denied by them, and therefore the matter was wholly waved if not confeſt. And then ſure I need ſay no more concerning the no-authority or obligingneſs of that Council.

5. But then to this I ſhall add, that this Council being convened on purpoſe for the cenſuring and depriving of Photius Patriarch of Conſtantinople, not for any heretical departure from the Faith, ſo much as pretended againſt him, but for ſome other (as they are called) exceſſes, of which his enemies deemed him guilty, eſpecially becauſe from a Senatour, and ſo a Lay-man, he was [r] immediately advanced to that Patriarchate (though very much againſt his will, as his Epiſtles ſufficiently teſtifie) the Faith of Chriſt is little concerned in the Decrees of this Council, here being no teſtimony of the Church to be found either for or againſt any Doctrine pretended to be derived from the Apoſtles.

[r] Vide Anaſtaſii Hiſtor. VIII. Synodi, Concil. Tom. 6. p. 706.

6. The arguments which Anaſtaſius Bibliothecarius offers for the proving the Univerſality of this Council, where, as he ſaith, he was preſent, will hardly prevail with any.

7. Firſt, ſaith he, 'tis Univerſal, becauſe the Catholick Faith and holy Laws, which ought to be reverenced not onely by all Prieſts, but by all Chriſtians, were in it uniformly defended againſt the enemies thereof: which if it had any force in it, then ſure every Orthodox Aſſembly, were it never ſo particular, a Provincial Synod of the Biſhops of any one Province, or a Dioceſan of the one Biſhop and Presbyters of that Dioceſe, as long as they be in the right, or are by the Romaniſt ſuppoſed to be ſo, (as indeed that VIII. Council † profeſſeth to retain and obſerve the Laws delivered in the Catholick and Apoſtolick Church, not onely from the Apoſtles and all Orthodox Councils both Oecumenical and Provincial, or Topical, but even from any divinely ſpeaking Father, Doctour of the Church) muſt paſs for a General and Oecumenical Aſſembly, juſt by the ſame Logick, that the particular Church of Rome doth paſs with them for the whole Catholick Church of Chriſt.

† Τὰς ἐν τῇ Καθολικῇ καὶ Ἀποστολικῇ ἐκκλησίᾳ παραδοθέντας θεσμοὺς ὄφελόν τι ὑπὲρ ἀγίων καὶ πανσεβάσμων Ἀποστόλων, ὄφελόν τι ὁρθοδόξων συνόδων οἰκουμενικῶν τι καὶ τοπικῶν, ἃ καὶ ἐκεῖς πᾶς ὁ θεοφόρος παρὼν, διδασκάλια τῆς ἐκκλησίας, πρεσβεύειν καὶ φυλάττειν ὁμολογοῦμεν. Act. 10. Can. 1. Concil. Tom. 7. p. 977.

8. Secondly, ſaith he, 'Tis an Univerſal Council, becauſe ſeeing Chriſt hath in the Church placed as many Patriarchal Sees, as there are ſenſes in man's body, if all thoſe conſent, there wants no more to the Generality of the Church, than there wants to the motion of the body, when all the five ſenſes are intire in it.

9. To which I anſwer, 1. That if this were true, then the ſecond Council of Epheſus was a valid General Council, for there were [t] perſonally the Patriarchs of four Sees, and Julian as proxy of the fifth. 2. It muſt then follow that a Synod of five men (for ſuch are the V. Patriarchs) to which no ſixth perſon in the world was ever ſo much as invited or ſummoned, may go for an aſſembly of the whole world. 3. That when one of the five Patriarchs was here depoſed, and never conſented to his own depoſition, 'twill be very hard to find the conſent of theſe five Patriarchs to all the Acts of this Council, and conſequently to defend the perfection of it from the forementioned analogy with that of the body of man, unleſs when one of the five ſenſes is ſhut out by the other four, the remaining four be either ſufficient to repreſent the fifth alſo, which is caſt out (and never conſents to this Law of repreſentation) or to ſubſtitute another ſenſe in the place of that fifth. 4. That this ſame Authour in his very next period tells us, that ſoon after the exaltation of this Photius, Solomon alſo a Lay-man was made Patriarch of Jeruſalem, and then it is no-way probable, that this Solomon, or whatſoever other Biſhop of that See, which was another of theſe five ſenſes, ſhould ever conſent to thoſe Canons, which are ſo contrary to that practice, and muſt infer the depoſing of that Solomon, as well as it did of Photius.

[t] Concil. Tom. 3. p. 61.

10. The truth is, in the ſubſcriptions of the ſeventh Act, there is no name of any of the five Patriarchs, ſave onely of Pope Adrian, and the Archbiſhop of Perga in the name and ſtead of Ignatius the depoſed, but now by this Council reſtored Patriarch of Conſtantinople. And though in the tenth Action we now have the names of Proxies to all the reſt of the Patriarchies; yet ſure ſomewhat there was in it, that after the naming of them and the Emperour's Proxy, Binius [v] thinks neceſſary to inſert an Annotation, leſt, as he ſaith, the Reader obſerving the paucity of ſubſcribers ſhould be ſcandalized at it, and therefore by way of prevention he offers an account of it from the multitude of Photius's favourers, who, he confeſſeth, were all excluded from this Council, and ſo the [x] Subſcribers fit to be compared to Chriſt's little flock, which ſure is a competent prejudice to the univerſality of it.

[v] Concil. Tom. 6. p. 853.

[x] Hac paucitas gregi illi pro ſua juſtitia comparatur cui Dominus dicit, nolite timere puſillus grex. Ibid.

11. And ſo likewiſe Anaſtaſius's ſage obſervation by which he backs his argument in that place, viz. That of the five Senſes the Biſhop of Rome is proportionable to Viſus the Sight, which [y] hath, ſaith he, the preeminence of all the other Senſes, being acuter than they, and having communion with all as none of the reſt have] is a ſhrewd intimation of his ſenſe, that it was the [z] Single authority of the Pope, that both condemn'd Photius, and gave the whole Univerſality to this Council, and then we have a very fair account of a General Council, rendred ſuch by the bare virtue of one perſon therein, and then I doubt not good ſtore of Univerſal Councils may be found in the world, even as many as there have ever been Aſſemblies or Conclaves, wherein Viſus, the moſt eminent Senſe, i. e. the Pope hath had any efficacious influence by himſelf, or his proxy.

[z] See Solocovius's Annot. on Jeremias Patriarch of Conſtantinople, p. 10. *In octavo Concilio evidentius quam in aliis omnibus declaratum eſt quam poteſtatem & autoritatem Rom. 12. To which purpoſe it may deſerve here to be remembred what type or Copy of celebrating a Council the learned Cardinal Baronius conceives himſelf to have found in the New Teſtament (and [a] requires the Reader of Annals to ſtop and take notice of it, as of a thing moſt worthy of his obſervation.) Such as wherein [b] S. Peter (and from his example the Biſhop of Rome his ſucceſſour) in a cauſe of the greateſt moment, ſo delivers his opinion, that he defines the matter in debate, and teaches and decrees what all muſt think, and conſtitutes a Canon or Rule of Faith which muſt remain for ever, ſo that, as he ſaith, there is almoſt no need to conſult the reſt of the Apoſtles, or ask their ſentiments or opinions, it being ſufficient for Chriſt, that Peter ſpake, and determined what was to be reſolved in point of Faith.

[a] An. 33. n. 17. Hic pedem ſiſtat atque paulum attendat diligens lector rem animadverſione dignißimam.

13. Here indeed is a fair foundation laid of a moſt Magnificent Structure, S. Peter's privilege in a Council of all the Apoſtles, Ut Sententiam ipſe definiat; that he, without conſulting of any other, ſhould give the definitive Sentence.

14. Onely it was a little unhappy, That Chriſt himſelf ſhould be preſent there, and one of the interlocutours in this Council (if ſuch it were) for it is he that propoſeth the queſtion which Peter anſwers, and if in the one 'twere a type of celebrating a Council, ſo 'twas in the other alſo, and then here were two conciliar Offices, the one of propoſing doubts in Councils, the other of anſwering them; the firſt belonging to Chriſt, the ſecond to S. Peter, and certainly the latter a place of more eminence.

15. 'Tis ſtrange, what ſubmiſſions learned men are forced to, that are reſolved to ſerve their Hypotheſis. I ſhall onely demand why the very next parcel of diſcourſe betwixt Chriſt and his Diſciples, wherein again S. Peter was the onely ſpeaker, v. 21, 22, 23. of this Chapter, Matt. 16. was not as ſignal a type of celebrating a Council, as the former? And yet there, in two very eminent branches of the Chriſtian Faith the Paſſion and Reſurrection of Chriſt, the ſame S. Peter, whoſe ſucceſſour the Pope pretends to be, differed in opinion from Chriſt himſelf, took him and began to rebuke him, and ſure delivered a very uncatholick ſentence, no other than the denial of both of thoſe grand Articles, not onely in words of averſion, which are not enunciative, the [Far be it from thee Lord,] but even in plain form of definition or decree, ἃ μὴ ἔστω σοὶ τοῦτο, This ſhall not be unto thee.

[Far

16. What Chriſt there returns unto him, that he was an offence unto him, and ſavoured not the things of God, but thoſe that were of men, may well ſerve for concluſion of this matter, that in an Aſſembly where Chriſt himſelf was preſent, S. Peter, and ſo his pretended ſucceſſour, may, if he be not very carefull to adhere to the word of Chriſt, fall into errour alſo, but is not in any reaſon then to be deemed the repreſentative of the whole Church.

17. This inſtitution of Councils in the Church of Chriſt, the great [c] Cardinal had ſo fanſied, that afterward he refers the original of them not to the Apoſtles Synod at Jeruſalem; but, by all means, to this of Chriſt, asking his Diſciples, Whom ſay men that I am? Onely the unhappineſs of it was, he had there forgotten the principal thing, which had recommended this pattern unto him, S. Peter's peculiar privilege, Ut ſententiam ipſe definiat, for there he is pleaſed to reſolve on another form, viz. [d] That every Father's Suffrage ſhould be asked, and the decree made in an holy and Canonical manner, by the common votes of all, and not onely of S. Peter; which I ſhould hope, concludes it his opinion, that the former courſe of definiat ipſe] was neither legal, nor holy.

[d] In unum Patres coirent, ſicque ſimul collectis, ſingulorum ſententia rogaretur, ac denique quod ab omnibus ſervandum eſſet, ſanctè ac legitimè communibus ſuffragiis firmaretur. Ibid.

18. His third argument for the univerſality of this Council, is becauſe * Seeing Photius had by his ſo many exceſſes blotted the univerſal Church, an univerſal cure was uſed, that all might be cured where all was blemiſhed. But ſure there is little force in this argument, which renders a reaſon, why it was ſo; but doth not offer at any evidence, that ſo it was; and is founded in a ſuppoſition that the cure (as the diſeaſe) was univerſal, which was the thing he ſhould have proved. And even for the univerſality of the diſeaſe we have here no farther offer of proof, but onely that ſoon after Photius's aſcending from the Senate to the Patriarchate, one Solomon a Laick was made Biſhop of Jeruſalem. And ſome Laicks at Conſtantinople lived vertuous lives; onely, as he will have it ſuppoſed, that thereby they might aſpire to the Patriarchate: Both which might be allowed to be true, and yet this eighth Council of CII. Biſhops be far from being thereby concluded to have been a General Council.

* Cum Photius tot exceſſuum ſuorum morbo univerſalem Eccleſiam maculaverit, univerſalis curatio adhibita eſt, ut totum curaretur quod totum fuerat maculatum. Concil. Tom. 6. p. 706.

19. The ſhort is, Anaſtaſius Bibliothecarius, who was, as he ſaith, preſent at this Council, and ſo may be allowed to have kindneſs to it, doth alſo dedicate his Hiſtory of it to Pope Adrian, who was the principal Actour in it, and a bitter enemy to Photius. And then his authority in this matter will be of as little weight, as his arguments have appeared to be, even no more than a teſtimony given to an intereſſed perſon by a very partial friend, and party.

20. If there were force in ſuch witneſſes, there would be as much credit due to Photius himſelf, Epiſt. 117. deſiring Theodoſius [f] not to wonder that profane perſons ſit ſuperciliouſly in judicature, and the illuſtrious High Prieſts of God are convented before them, that they judge who are themſelves condemned (for ſo was Ignatius the depoſed, but now reſtored Patriarch) but that [g] the innocent were judg'd being incompaſt with Swords, leſt they ſhould dare offer to ſpeak any thing in their own defence, giving him ancient examples of the like judicatures, that of Annas and Caiaphas and Pilate and the Sanhedrim, by whom Chriſt was condemned; and ſo alſo Stephen and James the Biſhops of Jeruſalem, and Paul. And ſo in many other paſſages of his Epiſtles, which demonſtrate him to have been another manner of man, than Baronius, An. 871. n. 24. pretends him.

[f] Τί θαυμάζεις, εἰ σεμνόθηλο μὲ ἐξωφρυώμενον τὸ ἀνίερον, παίσαντο δὲ τῶ Ἀγγελρίων διὰ τὸ σπιθῆναι, καὶ κείσθαι μὲ ἐλέγελο τὸ κατέχειν;

[g] Κατεδικάζετο ξίφεσι πεπεδημένος, ὑπὲρ τοῦ μηδὲ φωνὴν ἀφεῖναι, τὸ ἀνδιθιον.

21. But I need not ſuch fallible teſtimonies as theſe, to confirm the point in hand, That one of Marcus in the Council of Florence, conteſted to Cardinal Julian, and not denied by him, is ſufficient.

22. And it was but neceſſary wiſedom in Binius (that knew it well, and could not but diſcern what a juſt prejudice it was to the Univerſal reception of this Council) that he purpoſely omitted to give us any ſtory of that Council, as of others he accuſtomed to do, diſcreetly deſigning Anaſtaſius's Preface to Pope Adrian, to ſupply, as he [h] ſaith, the place of it. For as Anaſtaſius would not probably reveal this ſecret, nor could foreſee what Marcus would ſay in the Council of Florence; ſo Binius that publiſhed one as well as the other, could neither be ignorant, nor yet with any ſafety take notice of it, there being no poſſible way left but this of ſilence, to ſalve this Objection, or ſupport the reputation or univerſality of that Council, which was ſo nearly concerned in it.

[h] Non proponitur; ut in aliis factum, hiſtoria VIII. Concil. quod eam Anaſtaſii Præfatio complectatur. Concil. Tom. 6. p. 602.

SECT. XII.

Of the reſt of the Councils which the Romaniſts call General; particularly that of Trent.

1. I Shall not now, as I ſaid, need to deſcend to a view of the other Councils by the Romaniſts ſtyled Oecumenical, or defend our practice in not accepting them as ſuch. And that for theſe few, among many, reaſons;

2. Firſt, Becauſe, as we ſaid, the Pope's profeſſion, which muſt in reaſon be ſuppoſed to extend to the whole Faith, to every part of Apoſtolical Tradition, duly teſtified; yet doth not extend to all theſe, or to any more than Eight of them.

3. Secondly, Becauſe thoſe parts of them, which agree not with their pretenſions, are freely and Univerſally diſallowed by them, as is notorious by the inſtances of the Council of Conſtance, and of Baſil (and even of the fourth great Council, that of Chalcedon) each ſtyled in their Collections Oecumenical Councils, and yet each ex parte reprobatum, in part rejected and reprobated; and then why may not the Greek Church by the ſame law reject the Council of Florence, and both the Gallican Church, and ours, the Council of Trent, if we find it not a faithfull reporter of Tradition Apoſtolical?

4. Third-

4. Thirdly, Becauſe when ever any Council hath by them been thought to fail, they have made no ſcruple to affirm it was not a lawfull Council.

5. Thus we know it was in that at Ariminum, where, as [i] St. Hierome ſaith, the whole world almoſt admired to ſee it ſelf become Arian, and yet this I hope hath no authority with them.

[i] Dial. cont. Lucif.

6. So likewiſe the II. Council of Epheſus, though it were General, though honoured with the preſence of all the [k] five Patriarchs, four in perſon, the fifth by his Proxie, and [l] pertinaciouſly maintain'd by the Emperour Theodoſius: yet becauſe it confirmed Eutyches's Doctrine, it is juſtly rejected by them.

[k] Vide Act. 1. Concil. 1. Chalced. Concil. Tom. 3. p. 61.

[l] Ὁ Λ Θεοδόσιος ἀντέγραψεν αὐτῷ (Imperatori Valentiniano) λέγων, ὅτι ὁ παῖς ἄλλως σύνοδον, καλῶς γὰρ ἔλεγεν ὁ Διόσκορος. Leontius de Sect. πρεξ. p. 511. A.

7. And then why may not the ſame reaſon hold for us, and authorize our queſtioning the Legitimacy of thoſe Councils, whoſe Decrees with reaſon we allow not? nor diſcern any teſtimony of the truth of their Doctrine, or delivery from the Apoſtles.

8. Fourthly, Becauſe in the Council of Trent the Popes themſelves, as many as lived in the time thereof, would never conſent, though it were earneſtly deſired of them, that that Council ſhould be affirmed to repreſent the Univerſal Church; foreſeeing prudently, that if that were granted, (as in the Council of Conſtance it was, to the Popes coſt) the Council, being the whole, would put off its ſubjection, and depend no longer on him that was but a part of it. From whence I conceive this Dilemma muſt have irreſiſtible force in it, Ad hominem, being produced to a Romaniſt.

9. Either the General Council before the Papal confirmation is the repreſentative of the whole Church, or it is not: If it be the repreſentative of the whole, then it needs not the confirmation of the Pope to render it, what it was before. And again, whenſoever the Pope hath refuſed to confirm the Decrees of any ſuch, I muſt in charity to him ſuppoſe that thoſe Decrees have been erroneous, and as ſuch repudiated by him, and then the univerſal Church repreſentative may err. And then who can have any ſecurity in believing or relying on it?

10. But if it be not the repreſentative of the whole Church, then is not the teſtimony of an Oecumenical Council the teſtimony of the whole Church, nor conſequently qualified for any belief upon that ſcore of univerſality.

11. Having given the Romaniſt this account, which he hath obliged himſelf not to diſlike, of our not obliging our ſelves to the belief of all thoſe Councils, which he calls General, I ſhall not need add, what hath been ſo fully done by others, the many eminent nullities of ſome of them, eſpecially of that of Trent, which is moſt magiſterially impoſed upon us.

12. The matter is clear, There can be no colour of pretence that that was an Oecumenical Council. It had not ſure, at the time, that integrity of the five Senſes, which Anaſtaſius told us of, nor yet after it was promulgate, the approbation and reception of the whole Chriſtian World, not of the Eaſtern Church, nor in the Weſt, of the Gallicane and Britannick, and many others. And then how can it be any univerſal teſtifier of Apoſtolick tradition, or in any other capacity bind all to the imbracing of it?

13. This therefore is the one (but that very ſufficient) prejudice to a Council pretending to deliver to us Apoſtolick traditions and matters of faith, and exacting them to be received as ſuch, that it is not indeed what it pretends to be, an univerſal Council; and conſequently that it is not duly qualified, by Vincentius his rules, to give a valid teſtimony of matters of Faith, or Doctrines truly Chriſtian. To which it is but proportionable and regular that we that imbrace, and uniformly accept all Apoſtolical tradition, ſufficiently, i. e. univerſally teſtified to be ſuch, do not think our ſelves obliged to receive that, which is not thus teſtified.

14. If therefore, as hath hitherto appeared, Hereſie be to be thus defined by the oppoſition to the Faith of Chriſt, ſufficiently revealed and teſtified to us, if univerſality be one qualification of the teſtifier, and if the Romaniſts Oecumenical Councils do evidently fail of that univerſality, then cannot our non-reception of all their Councils thus evidenced not to be univerſal, or of thoſe their Doctrines which have no other ſurer Baſis, than that of the definitions of thoſe Councils, be any way competent to charge or affix the note of Hereſie upon us.

15. Nay on the contrary, we that never disbelieved any word of God, written or unwritten (by any means made known to us to be ſuch) particularly never queſtioned any voice or teſtimony of the whole Church concerning ſuch word, but are ready to believe that to be Apoſtolical, which ſhall be to us univerſally teſtified to come from the Apoſtles, and perſwade our ſelves that God will never permit any ſuch univerſal Teſtimony concerning the Faith to conſpire in conveying errour to us, and upon the ſtrength of that perſwaſion, as we have never yet oppoſed any univerſal council, nor other voice of the whole Church, ſuch as by the Catholick Rules can be conteſted to be ſuch, ſo for the future we profeſs never to do, are by our grounds thus far ſecured from all Heretical pravity, that unleſs we deſtroy in the retail what we have built in the groſs, and untill we ſhall be proved, by the particular view of our doctrines, to have thus failed in ſome particulars, we cannot with any juſtice, or without great uncharitableneſs be accuſed of it.

SECT. XIII.

Of the inerrability of a General Council. That it is no matter of faith.

1. OF the laſt part of this our profeſſion, it is now meet, that I add ſome few words, viz. what our opinion is of the inerrability of a General Council, truly ſo called, and qualified as hath been formerly deſcribed.

2. And 1. we have learn'd to diſtinguiſh between Theological verity, and Catholick Faith: ſome things we believe to be true, which yet pretend not to be any part of that neceſſary Fundamental doctrine, which was once delivered unto the Saints, but are offered to our belief upon grounds of reaſon, which, Suppoſitâ fide, carry great weight of probability with them, for which yet we neither have, nor pretend any Divine revelation. And ſuch, I conceive, this propoſition to be, [A General Council, cannot or ſhall not err.] For that this is no where either affirmed by the word of God written, or unwritten, or regularly deduced from thence, may eaſily appear by a view of the very few places, which are by the Romaniſt pretended to conclude it.

3. Firſt, thoſe words of Chriſt are pretended for it, Matth. 18. 20. Where two or three are gathered together in my name, there I will be in the midſt of them.]. But 1. thoſe words do not in any peculiarity belong to Councils convened to define, but more generally to any Aſſemblies that come together to hear or pray to God, or more particularly in that place, to excommunicate an offender. 2. If they belong to Councils, they would equally belong to the moſt particular, as to the moſt Oecumenical Council; for none can be more diſtant from Catholick, than that where no more than two or three are met together. 3. That Text belongs onely to thoſe Aſſemblies, which are truly convened in God's Name, with hearts ſincerely bent to the honouring of him; whereas many aſſemblies among men have been, and ſtill may be convened with mixtures of worldly and carnal intereſt, and then no part of the promiſed preſence belongs to them. 4. Chriſt may by his power and illumination, and even directive grace be preſent, and in the midſt of thoſe, who yet through the corruption, and blindneſs, and obſtinacy of their own hearts, do not make uſe of his guidance to the finding out of truth, but oft reſiſt the conviction and light which is offered them by Chriſt. And ſo there is not the leaſt colour of force in that argument.

4. Secondly, That place is produced of John 16. 3. That when the Spirit of truth is come he will guide them into all truth, and again, that he ſhall abide with them for ever. But neither hath that any propriety to General, or indeed to any kind of Councils. Every particular Chriſtian, ſince the deſcent of the Holy Ghoſt is as much rendred infallible by theſe Texts, as any the moſt numerous Aſſembly; for to each of thoſe this promiſe made to the Apoſtles is as regularly appliable, as to any of theſe. And the matter is notorious, that before there was ever any Oecumenical Council in the world, the Church of God was led into all truth: The greateſt foundations of Faith being by the Apoſtles preaching, from the very firſt plantation, long before the Council of Nice, depoſited in every Church.

5. Thirdly, They produce the form of the Conciliar Decretal Epiſtle, Acts 15. 28. It ſeemed good to the Holy Ghoſt and to us. But that can be of no force in this matter: 1. Becauſe the Apoſtles, that certainly did not err, and were ſo Aſſiſted by the Spirit, that they ſhould not err in the diſcharge of their office Apoſtolical, can be no preſident to every, or any other humane Aſſembly. 2. Becauſe this Decree of theirs belonging to matters of practice, not of belief, that form of it can no farther be imitable to other Councils, than that in like matters of practice, ſuch are rites and ceremonies and uſages in a Church, they aſſume authority of defining, and commanding, and deem that backt by the Holy Ghoſt, who hath given them their authority, but in matters of Faith they muſt have nothing from themſelves. And accordingly this hath been the practice in the Church, as hath [m] formerly appeared from [n] Athanaſius, to prefix to their Canons of Order and Rites this form [Viſum eſt] It ſeemed good to us, or ἔδοξε τὰ ὑποτεταγμένα, theſe things ſeemed good to us; but for matters of Faith, ὅτως πιστεύει ἡ Κ. Θεολικὴ ἐκκλησία, ſo the Catholick Church believes; neither inſerting mention of their own judgment, nor yet pretending to any other Revelation from the Holy Ghoſt, than what was from the beginning found to have been in the Church. To which purpoſe alſo was, I ſuppoſe, the ſecond Verſicle in the Doxology (the Orthodoxal form of acknowledging the Trinity) Sicut erat in principio, As it was in the beginning, as it ſtood by Original Tradition Apoſtolical, is now and ever ſhall be world without end. No new Doctrine ever to be brought into the Church by whatſoever Council, but onely that which the Apoſtles had delivered.

m Sect. 9. n. 10.
n de Syn. p. 873.

6. Fourthly, Some places they bring, and apply to Councils, which the Scripture delivers onely of the Church in general, as, that the Gates of Hell ſhall not prevail againſt it, — which can no-way belong to this matter, unleſs all the members of the Church were met together in that Council; for if there be any left out, why may not the promiſe be good in them, though the gates of hell ſhould be affirmed to prevail againſt the Council? The firſt Nicene was by the acknowledgment of all an Oecumenical Council, yet was not the whole Church of God convened in that Aſſembly. In caſe all the cccxviii Biſhops which were there aſſembled, had in one minute been taken up to Heaven, or by any violence of the Arian party maſſacred; could it with any truth be ſaid, that the whole Church of God had then been deſtroyed? Infallibly it could not; and no more could it be ſaid, in caſe a major part of them had agreed in any errour, that the πύλαι ᾅδου, the power or gates of hell, or death, or deſtruction had prevailed againſt them; becauſe, as it is clear, there were many thouſands of Biſhops and Presbyters, many Millions of Brethren or believing Chriſtians, without the walls of that Council, which had not been involved in that errour. And indeed the very ſuppoſal, that the Council aſſembled repreſents the Church diffuſive, and was never intruſted by them to define any errour at their convention, is an evidence that there is without the doors of that Council an univerſal, which thoſe few there preſent were deſigned to repreſent. And thoſe that have given their Proxies for certain uſes, are not imagined ſo to have put their lives or ſouls in the hands of thoſe Proxies, as that by the death of the Proxies they ſhall be ſuppoſed to die alſo.

7. And as there is no evidence from the written word of God whereon this may be grounded, as a matter of Faith, that a General Council cannot err, ſo neither is there any part of the Apoſtles Depoſitum intruſted to the Church, from which the Concluſion can with any ſemblance of reaſon be inferred, or that is by any Romaniſt, that I know of, made uſe of to that purpoſe.

8. The main thing that is pretended, is the Conciliar practice and cuſtome of annexing Anathema's to their definitions, which it were not reaſonable for them to do, if they did not verily believe their definitions, were infallibly true. But to this the anſwer is obvious, 1, That they may think themſelves infallible which are not, and ſo their own belief is not argumentative. 2. That they that knowing themſelves fallible, do yet perſwade themſelves that they have ſucceſsfully ſought out, and found the truth in ſome particular, may think it uſefull to propagate this truth to all their flock, and ſecure the peaceable poſſeſſion of that doctrine by denunciation of Cenſures Eccleſiaſtical; and, that is the meaning of Anathema's. 3. 'Tis ſuppoſeable, that in this, or that doctrine, the Council hath had ſo clear a diſcovery (viz. from the uniform conſentient teſtimony of all Churches with which they have conſulted) that they do find reaſon verily to believe that that particular definition is tradition Apoſtolical. And ſo in that they may define dogmatically, not from any any opinion of their own universal inerrableness, but from a duly grounded perswasion, that for this time they are in the right. Lastly, It may well be noted as an excess in many later Councils, to be thus forward with their Anathema's, or to affix them to any other their definitions, but such as are undoubted branches of that Apostolical doctrine, which was preached to all, those δόγματα ἐυσεβείας in the Apostles 37 Canon, the disbelief whereof may obstruct, or hinder good life here, and Salvation hereafter.

SECT. XIV.

That it is one of the Piè credibilia, That a General Council shall not err.

1. THis then of the inerrableness of General Councils being thus far evidenced to be no matter of Faith, because not founded in any part of Scripture, or Tradition (nor consequently the contrary any matter of Heresie) the utmost that can be said of it, is, that it is a Theological verity, which may piously be believed.

2. And so I doubt not to pronounce of it, That if we consider God's great, and wise, and constant providence, and care over his Church, his desire that all men should be saved, and in order to that end, come to the knowledge of all necessary truth, his promise that he will not suffer his faithfull servants to be tempted above what they are able, nor permit scandals, and false teachers to prevail to the seducing of the very elect, his most pious, godly servants; If, I say, we consider these, and some other such like general promises of Scripture, wherein this question seems to be concern'd, we shall have reason to believe, that God will never suffer all Christians to fall into such a temptation as it must be, in case the whole Church representative should err in matters of Faith, by way of Ellipsis (define against, or leave out of their Creed any Article of that body of Credenda, which the Apostles delivered to the Church) and therein find approbation, and reception among all those Bishops and Doctours of the Church diffused, which were out of the Council.

3. And though in this case the Church might remain a Church (and so the destructive gates of Hades not prevail against it) and still retain all parts of the Apostles Depositum in the hearts of some faithfull Christians, which had no power in the Council to oppose the Decree, or out of it to resist the general approbation, yet still the testimony of such a General Council so received and approved, would be a very strong argument, and so a very dangerous temptation to every the most meek and pious Christian, and it is piously to be believed, though not infallibly certain (for who knows what the provocations of the Christian world, of the Pastors, or the Flock, may arrive to, like the violence of the old world, that brought down the deluge upon them?) that God will not permit his Servants to fall into that temptation.

SECT. XV.

A Recapitulation and Conclusion of this matter concerning Heresie.

1. 'TIS time now to draw to a conclusion of this whole matter; and from the premisses to complete and abbreviate that plea, which will, I doubt not, secure the Church of England from all colourable charge of Heresie: For that

2. First, It confestly receives the whole word of Christ, the intire Canon of the New Testament.

3. Secondly, It retains intire the Symbol of the Apostolick Faith, as that was delivered to the Churches in all the Apostolick plantations.

4. Thirdly, It understands both Scripture and Creed, according to that Traditive interpretation, which the first Four, or, if you will, Six, or indeed any of the Oecumenical Councils, truly so called, have discovered and declared to be the sense of all the Apostolick Churches in the world, and were universally received by all Churches in such their declaration.

5. Fourthly, That we never rejected any Catholick Testimony (offered in behalf of any Doctrine) nor Council, but such as even our Enemies grant, or evidence of the matter proclaims, not to have been Oecumenical.

6. Fifthly, That we do not believe that any General Council, truly such, ever did, or shall err in any matter of Faith, nor shall we farther dispute the authority, when we shall be duly satisfied of the universality of any such.

7. Lastly, That we are willing to proceed, and inlarge all this, from the Church collected in a Council, to the Church diffused, or the principal Pastors thereof, out of Council, and are ready to receive, and acknowledge as doctrine of Faith every proposition, which the Fathers that lived in any competent distance from the Apostles, do uniformly, or without any considerable dissent, deliver down to us, as the truths of God, Traditions Apostolical.

8. Herein I may not now fitly enlarge, by proceeding to a view and defence of all, or any such particular doctrines, nor indeed can I without the spirit of Divination, not knowing what one doctrine, denied by us, any Romanist will assume to assert upon these terms (contest by these measures of universality, antiquity and consent) to be Apostolical Tradition.

9. As for the authority of the present Roman Church, which is by them so much insisted on, as we cannot deem that sufficient to impose upon all Christians any new book of Scripture; so neither can we by force of any Catholick rules (such as Vincentius is confest to have furnisht us with sufficiently) receive from that sole testimony of theirs (which is but the testimony of one part, and of one age of the Church, and not of the universal Church of all ages) any part of Christian doctrine, though by them never so earnestly contested to be Apostolical.

10. The ſure way of judging aright in any particular debate, muſt be by appealing to the Fountains, Apoſtolical, Original Doctrine, and Tradition, and for that, to thoſe that are competent teſtifiers in the matter, to Councils univerſally received, or to ſuch other teſtimony as is truly univerſal. And as by this one teſt we profeſs to deal with every adverſary of the Faith, whom we ſhall dare thus to accuſe, and not to deem any perſon an Heretick, whom we cannot demonſtrate to be ſuch by this ſure [illegible], (and therefore are not forward to judge every Romaniſt to be ſuch, who maintains the whole Faith, and errs onely in his Superaddition) ſo we are moſt willing to ſubmit to this way of judgment our ſelves, and whatſoever we ſhall be convinced to be diſagreeable thereto, we ſhall moſt willingly and explicitly renounce, for the glory of God, and for the reſtoring of the peace of the Church, and do ſo already implicitly, by binding our ſelves to be judged, and concluded by theſe Rules, by unfeigned prayer to God for his light and guidance in his path; and by exacting of all Chriſtians in the world that fraternal debt of neceſſary charity to our ſouls, in admoniſhing us, either 1. What particular there is, maintained by our Church, which is not found to have truth: or 2. What disbelieved, which is able to approve it ſelf, being judged by theſe Rules: or 3. What is defective in theſe Rules, in order to our judging aright, what is by a Chriſtian to be believed, or imbraced as de Fide, and ſo as the disbelieving thereof will be chargeable upon him.

11. And if, after all this, and without the charity of any ſuch admonition, we ſhall ſtill by unrelenting adverſaries be cenſured and condemn'd, as Hereticks, (and upon that account caſt out as refuſe-branches, and unchurched members; and ſo that unity and communion, which Chriſt hath commanded to continue among his Diſciples, become unattainable by us] herein we complain of great unkindneſs and injuſtice in the Church of Rome, and in thoſe that joyn, and adhere to her in that ſentence, which by Papal Bull was long ſince ſent out againſt us; and upon theſe premiſed grounds we reſolve ſtill to retain that degree of charity to our moſt implacable enemies, as to pray for them, and to admoniſh them of the eminent danger of their uncharitableneſs, in caſe thoſe hindrances be not upon due judgment removed on their part, which obſtruct the union and peace of Chriſtendom. It being moſt unreaſonable that among them which communicate in every branch of the one Apoſtolical Faith, that ſacred band ſhould yet be violated, upon vain and empty pretences of diverſities of opinion or uſages in ſuch matters, which are far removed from the great foundation of Apoſtolical doctrines, and practices, or which are not ſufficiently teſtified to come from them, who yet are juſtly preſumable to have delivered carefully (and appointed the Church to preſerve faithfully through all ages) all thoſe things, which are fundamentally neceſſary for a Chriſtian to believe or practiſe to his Soul's health.

12. If reaſon herein will not be heard, to the repairing of breaches and demoliſhing the μεσότοιχον φραγμὸν, that Sept or Wall of Separation, which was once in the Temple ſet up betwixt Jews and Gentile worſhippers, but received its decretory ſentence in the death of Chriſt, never to be re-edified among Chriſtians, If that enmity that was nailed to his Croſs, muſt be revived, and quickened to a life immortal among his members. If whilſt we faithfully retain the whole Faith of Chriſt, we muſt ſtill be lookt on, as Traditours and mutilatours of it. 'Twill yet be manifeſt to all that conſider the premiſſes, that this is to be numbred among our calamities, not our guilts, that the darts of the tongue were not directed at us, with any ſpecial aim, or judgment (we might have been called Magicians as well, and ſo baniſhed out of Rome, upon the Old Edict, Contra Mathematicos, with as much [illegible]riety as upon the new, Contra Hæreticos) and in fine, that the objection hath received its anſwer according to the utmoſt improvement, of which it is capable, whether as the low ebb of our preſent perſecuted eſtate, or as our pretended departure from the Catholick Faith, is, or can, with any colour of reaſon, be ſuggeſted to have unchurched us.

CHAP. VI.

A third difficulty, raiſed from Acts 4. 19. and 1 Cor. 9. 16. ſatisfied.

Sect. 1. AFter this ſo large a ſurvey of thoſe two ſorts of Objections from others, there remains a third, which our own breaſts are ready to ſuggeſt, by way of ſcruple; whether the words of Saint Peter and Saint John, Acts 4. 19. and of Saint Paul, 1 Cor. 9. 16. be not of ſome force, to lay obligation on us Miniſters of the Goſpel at this time, and how we ſhall quit our ſelves of that obligation.

Sect. 2. In the former Text verſe 6. and 15. When the Sanhedrim called thoſe Apoſtles, and commanded them not to ſpeak at all, nor to teach, verſe 18. their anſwer is in theſe words, Whether it be right in the ſight of God to hearken unto you, more than unto God, judge ye; For we cannot but ſpeak——where ſure the phraſes of hearkening unto God, obeying him, and, we cannot but ſpeak,—— noted an obligation lying upon them from God to ſpeak and to teach, ſuch as no countermand from the Sanhedrim could take off from them.

Sect. 3. And ſo in the latter Text a neceſſity is acknowledged by Saint Paul to lie upon him, a moral neceſſity (and that ſure denotes an obligation) and wo is unto him, if he preach not the Goſpel.

Sect. 4. For the anſwering of this, ſome (of the many) differences muſt be obſerved, which at firſt ſight offer themſelves, betwixt the condition of the Apoſtles then, and thoſe now, which are under this interdict. A firſt difference may be diſcerned in reſpect of the matter of their preaching, which was then ſo indiſpenſably required of the Apoſtles: What that was, will appear by the Commiſſion given to the Eleven, Matth. 28. 19. Go therefore and teach all Nations, baptizing them in the name of the Father, and of the Son, and of the Holy Ghoſt; teaching them to obſerve all things whatſoever I have commanded you. As for Saint Paul, though he were none of this number, yet his aſſumption to the Office Apoſtolical, expreſt by his being a choſen veſſel unto Chriſt, to bear his Name before the Gentiles and Kings——Acts 9. 15. and the command of the Holy Ghoſt, to ſeparate him to that work, Acts 13. 2. did doubtleſs bind the ſame bands on him, and ſo this ſame ingagement of publiſhing the Chriſtian Doctrine through all the world to thoſe that were ignorant of it, of receiving Proſelytes, all that ſhould come in to that Faith of Chriſt, and of building them up in it.

Sect. 5. Here then to thoſe as to a ſelect number of שלוחים Apoſtles, or Proxies of Chriſt on earth, was a commiſſion given, and therein a command to publiſh the Goſpel over all the world; and had they neglected it willingly, or by any terrours been affrighted from it, that meſſage (which Chriſt came in ſo ſtupendious a manner from Heaven to publiſh) had conſequently never been revealed to the world, and then this ſo pretious talent depoſited with them, being thus laid up unoccupied, would have brought on them regularly the guilt, and wo of wicked, as well as unprofitable ſervants. And this is the ground of that obligation, that lay on them, and is expreſt in thoſe two Texts in the objection.

Sect. 6. But the Biſhops of our Church, and the Inferiour Officers, the Presbyters under them, though they are in ſome degree the Proxies of thoſe Proxies, the ſucceſſours of thoſe Apoſtles; yet the Commiſſion to go and preach, belongs not to them, in the ſame extent, as it did to the Apoſtles, nor to all the ſame purpoſes: Our Commiſſion is limited, and ſo the obligation incumbent on us is limited alſo.

Sect. 7. The Goſpel being long ago by the Apoſtles travels ſolemnly preached over all the world, and either received by Faith, or rejected by Obſtinacy, or caſt off by Apoſtaſie, there was a period, and concluſion of thoſe travels, their Doctrine being depoſited in all their plantations, and in the written word conſigned for the perpetual uſes of the Churches, it was no longer incumbent ex Officio on every ſpiritual perſon, to trace all the ſteps of thoſe, that thus travelled for the firſt planting them. 'Tis ſure the Indies and Chinois are none of our Province now, though they once were of ſome of the Apoſtles.

Sect. 8. Nay, even in thoſe firſt times we reade of ſome, whom they fixt in Settled Stations, παραλιπόντες καταμεῖναι appointing them to abide, and καταλείποντες leaving them in ſuch or ſuch a Province, 1 Tim. 1. 3. and Tit. 1. 5. beyond which they were not obliged to journey, but as the ſame Apoſtles directed them upon emergent occaſions.

Sect. 9. Nay, the Apoſtles themſelves at length made an end of their travels, ſate down, Saint John at Epheſus, Saint Peter at Rome—— And after them in the words of the 15. and 16. Canons Apoſtolical it was ſoon forbidden, that any man ſhould ἑτέρα παροικία ἐπιπηδᾶν, or ἐπιπηδᾶν, go or meddle beyond his own line, move out of that circle, wherein he was fixt. And yet certainly obedience to thoſe Canons, though not written by the Apoſtles, but by the firſt Biſhops, Apoſtolical men, and ſo (in the words of that Text, wherein the objection is founded) a hearkening unto men, will never be deemed an offending or ſinning againſt God; If it were, all order and unity would ſoon be baniſhed out of the Church, as by this ἀλλοτριεπισκοπία we ſee it in ſome Churches at this time.

Sect. 10. Here then is a firſt difference, in reſpect of the matter of their preaching, and their immediate miſſion to that work, which brought the Ve ſi non; They were by Chriſt obliged to promulgate the Goſpel; we, that are come into their labours, where it is promulgate already, are not under the ſame cauſes, and ſo neither under the ſame ſtrictneſs of that obligation. The engagements that now lie upon us ariſe from ſome other heads, the deſignations, and truſts of our ſuperiours in the Church, the wants of the flock over whom we are placed, or the opportunities of Charity, which offer themſelves to us, but not the Preceptive Commiſſion of Chriſt of going, and preaching the Faith to all Nations.

Sect. 11. But if this were the intire anſwer, ſome farther objection would lie againſt it. For the Apoſtles task being not onely that of witneſſing the reſurrection of Chriſt, and ſo the whole Chriſtian Religion, confirmed by it, but particularly that of calling unreformed ſinners to repentance (as we ſee their Sermons ſumm'd up in the Goſpel, as John Baptiſt's and Chriſt's alſo were, Repent for the Kingdom of Heaven is at hand) it is obvious thus to inforce the former argument, that the ſins of theſe Nations, and our impenitent continuance therein are ſufficient to remove this difference, there is now as much need of Sermons of Repentance, as there was then of preaching the Faith of Chriſt; and why then ſhould not the obligation lie as indiſpenſably upon us, as it then did upon the Apoſtles?

Sect. 12. To this Objection the Anſwer muſt be, not by denying the truth of the ſuggeſtion in either of the premiſſes, for it is certain, that was the ſtyle of the Baptiſt's, of Chriſt's, of the Diſciples, and ſo afterwards of the Apoſtles preaching; and 'tis indeed hard to conceive how or when there ſhould be greater need of preaching reformation, and of employing all our ſpiritual artillery, the keeneſt weapons of our warfare for the demoliſhing of ſtrong holds, of bringing down obdurate hearts to the obedience of Chriſt, than there is moſt viſibly in theſe Nations at this time; But by examining the force of the conſequence, which from thence infers the neceſſity of our withſtanding the preſent interdict, and continuing to preach. That this conſequence is moſt irregular, ſoon appears by ſurvey of the premiſſes, which neither ſeverally nor jointly have power thus to infer, or to make up any regular Syllogiſm, of which this ſhall be the concluſion. The faireſt Syllogiſm that the matter is capable of will be this. The Apoſtles by Chriſt's command preached Repentance to impenitent ſinners, But the people of this Nation are impenitent ſinners, Therefore, the Miniſters here are obliged not to give over preaching, whatever interdict, or menace of violence reſtrain them from it. But this is far from a regular Syllogiſm, not capable of being reformed, or reduced, to any figure or mould of reaſoning, artificial, or inartificial, neither of the premiſſes having any influence upon the concluſion, nor indeed connexion within themſelves. Chriſt's precept of preaching repentance to impenitent ſinners, even then when it did oblige, did not oblige them never to intermit, or give it over, whatſoever the conſequences were. When they had preached, and were not received, but perſecuted, they were allowed to leave ſuch obſtinate impenitents, to ſhake off their duſt againſt them, and ſo to denounce judgments by departing from them, to preach moſt loudly, by not preaching.

Sect. 13. And for impenitence, ſure that lays not obligation, where Chriſt's command had laid none, i. e. where it is obſtinate againſt light, and means of reformation. It was our Saviour's ſpeech put by him into the mouth of Father Abraham, They have Moſes and the Prophets, let them hear them: And if they hear not them, neither will they repent or be perſwaded though one ſhould come to them from the dead.

Sect. 14. When ſins have been committed, and are gone on in, for want of light, there preaching of repentance, and convincing the ignorant world of ſin, is the Goſpel-method, and be their ſins the greateſt in the world, and the moſt unnatural, ſuch as the Gentiles were, yet God can ὑπεριδεῖν ſo far look over, or not

ſee ſuch rebellions, as to ſend out his Heralds of peace, and command them all every where to repent, yea, Acts 17. 30. and ſometimes to work miracles for the opening ſuch mens eyes, who, as Saint Paul ſaith of himſelf, being 1 Tim. 1. 13. blaſphemers, perſecutours and injurious, yet are diſcerned by him that knows the ſecrets of hearts, to doe it ignorantly in unbelief.

John 3. 19. Prov. 1. 22. Sect. 15. But when it is not thus imputable to ignorance, but reſiſtence of the light, to loving and coveting of darkneſs, to the ſcorners delighting in that trade, and the fools hating knowledge, it may then be ſeaſonable with God, and not contrary to duty in man, to let them alone, no longer to importune them, who will not receive inſtruction.

Sect. 16. And this is too viſibly the preſent condition of this people, our ſins have not the Apology or extenuation of ignorance, our deeds of darkneſs, that have clothed themſelves in the thickeſt cloud, and deepeſt ſecrecy, are of all others moſt unqueſtionably ſins againſt light, and knowledge, and conſcience. And our riots, and oaths, and perjuries, and prophanations, in a word, all our ſorts of pollutions both of fleſh and ſpirit, are certainly ſuch; and thoſe are they that denominate us an impenitent people, on ſuppoſal of which the inforcement of that argument was founded.

Iſa. 43. 8. Acts 28. 27. Sect. 17. And to ſuch blind people that have eyes, which βλέποντες ὐ βλέπουσι, ſee very perfectly, but will not perceive, that have ſteel'd their foreheads againſt reproofs, it were but regular, and that which we learn from the Apoſtles practice, as to ſhake off duſt againſt them, ſo to mark and avoid, and not to have fellowſhip with ſuch, much leſs to purſue them with the importunity of more Sermons, but rather to forſake them, without being driven from them; there being no reaſon, why they ſhould hear, any more than preach God's Word, take his covenant into their ears or mouths, who thus deſpiſe inſtructions, and hate to be reformed.

Sect. 18. And if it be interpoſed, that ſure all men and women among us, are not to be put into this forlorn Claſſis of hopeleſs impenitents, there being many thouſands now, as in Elias's days, that are not ingulft in the corruptions of the times, I reply by a moſt willing, joyfull confeſſion, and onely require it be remembred, that then there was no ſtrength, as far as concerns theſe, in that inforcement of the argument, which took riſe onely from the conſideration of the unreformed impenitent ſinners, which exacted our Sermons of repentance.

Sect. 19. As for thoſe then, that are in a middle and more improvable eſtate, to whom the exerciſe of our functions are, or probably may be, real charity; there, I ſhall acknowledge the Miniſters of the Word to lie under engagements, not ſuch as ariſe from Chriſt's command to his Apoſtles, To go and preach, wherein the objection was founded; but on other heads, eſpecially thoſe of charity, and miniſtring to the wants of ſouls. And though the example of [a] Gregory Nazianzen, that great and pious Biſhop, might juſtifie ſome other reſolution, who in ſuch evil times, being without any pretence of crime removed out of his Biſhoprick, [b] Reſiſted many importunities, took his leave of the Emperour, retired to Arianzum, and in [c] reſt and divine poeſie ended his days; yet I ſhall not lay hold on that advantage, but in compliance with the intereſts of charity rather than with any other of any meaner allay, I ſhall deem this account moſt Chriſtian, that we oblige our ſelves never to be wanting to them, that are thus capable, in any duty of neceſſary charity, that no fear of men, or other worldly conſideration, deter us from ſuch performances, that whenſoever our Miniſtery be called for, by the real and preſſing wants of the meaneſt of Chriſt's little ones, like Cræſus's dumb Son, in an important exigence, we ſtretch the ſtring of our tongues, ruſh through any obſtacle, and reſolve with the Apoſtle in the objection, We cannot but ſpeak——.

[a] So Narciſſus Biſhop of Jeruſalem, famous for the miracle of turning Water into Oil (Euſeb. Eccl. Hiſt. l. 5. c. 9.) in the vigils of Eaſter, being falſely accuſed by three men, each under an execration on themſelves which accordingly befell them, αὐτὸς μὲν πάνυ ἀρχαίων μιμήσεως ὑπομνήσεων μοχθηρίας, καὶ ἄλλως ὢν μακρῷ τῆς φιλοσόφου ἀσκήσεως βίον, διαδρὰς πᾶν τὸ ἐκκλησίας πλῆθος, ἐν ἐρημίαις καὶ ἀνάντεσιν ἀγκῶσι λασιόνων πλείστοις ἔτεσι διήγαγεν. [b] Πολλοὶ τῶν λαῶν συμῤῥέοντες δεκρύοντες, ἱκετεύοντες, ἀντεκολύνοντες ἐλεῆσαι τὸ ποίμνιον, ὁ πόνοις τε καὶ ἱδρῶσι πολίταις ἐξεθρεψάτο τε καὶ ἤυξησι. Greg. Naz. Vit. N. 3. [c] Ἀναγκαῖον οὖν ἐν Ἀελαίζοις ἡσυχάζων, μᾶλλον τῶν ὑπερεχόντων καὶ σχολὴν διὰ πραγμάτων ἀπαλλαγὴν ἀγαθὸν τὸ ἄμεινον. Ibid. N. 5.

Sect. 20. So that ſtill the reſolution of conſcience muſt be by levelling the particular caſe according to the Rule or Square that belongs to it, the command of our Great Maſter, incumbent on us. And though that lay not obligation to preach, Ratione Officii, yet if it lay oligation of charity to miniſter to the neceſſities of any Chriſtian's ſoul, in whatſoever inſtance, our love will prove very imperfect and maimed, if it do not caſt out fear, ſet about its work, whatſoever the dangers be. And ſo generally our direction muſt be not by that which is moſt ſafe, but moſt charitable; and by attending to that, we ſhall have advanced a good ſtep toward the ſolution of the difficulty.

Sect. 21. But then, ſecondly, a farther difference there is obſervable betwixt the Apoſtles caſe, and ours, in reſpect of the occaſions and circumſtances of delivering the words. For the words in Saint Paul, 'tis evident they lookt not on perſecution, but onely want of wages for his preaching, and the utmoſt importance of, or inference from his words is, that though he have no kind of ſubſiſtence from his auditours, no part of their offertory, ver. 13. yet he is (under a ſad Væ ſi non) obliged to preach to them. And then if we by any outward diſcouragements, the no reward for our labours, the not reaping of carnal things, be thus cooled in diſcharge of our duties, and diſpenſing our ſpiritual things, then are we with ſome reaſon to apprehend the Væ denounced by Saint Paul on this neglect, which that it cannot by analogy be extended to this other caſe of forcible interdict, appears by the expreſs words of Chriſt even while he requires perſeverance in his Diſciples, Matth. 10. 23. When they perſecute you in this City, flee ye to another, and is exemplified by Saint Paul, 2 Cor. 11. 32.

Sect. 22. And though ſtill the other example of Saint Peter and John ſeem contrary, yet certainly that muſt be capable of ſuch an interpretation as ſhall be reconcileable with theſe two, the expreſs words of Chriſt, and practice of their fellow Apoſtle.

Sect. 23. For ſure there is ſome more than ſhew of difficulty in this, how thoſe two Apoſtles ſhould be under a command of God, obliged not to give over preaching in Jeruſalem, when they were thus interdicted and threatned by the Sanhedrim, as that ſignifies perſecuted from that City, when yet the Diſciples are allowed by Chriſt, in that caſe of perſecution to remove to ſome other City, i. e. to obey that unchriſtian interdict ſo armed with force; and when Paul upon the like occaſions profeſſeth once to have been let down by a basket and,

and by flight (and ſo preaching no longer in that City) to have eſcaped their hands, 2 Cor. 11. 33. And at another time to have been for a time withheld, or kept from the Theſſalonians, 1 Theſſ. 2. 16, 17, 18. by the violent oppoſitions, and interdicts, of his adverſaries. And what anſwer ſoever ſhall be thought ſatisfactory to this, will, I doubt not, be applicable to our preſent caſe.

Sect. 24. For Firſt, If the account ſhould be, that this was an Heroical act of zeal in thoſe two Apoſtles (παῤῥησιάζεσθαι and ῥιψοκινδυνεῖν, to imitate Chriſt ſo far as to adventure the utmoſt dangers for his ſake) yet not under divine precept, and ſo not part of ſtrict duty, then that abſolves us from being under ſuch duty, and leaves it onely an act of Chriſtian magnanimity, when the circumſtances of the action render it truly ſuch, i. e. whenſoever the great ends of Charity may beſt be ſerved by our preaching and ſuffering; and thus much is willingly acknowledged.

Sect. 25. But the truth is, this ſeems not to come home to Saint Peter's words of [hearkning to God] and [we cannot but teach ——] which ſeem to ſuppoſe ſome command of God binding on their ſhoulders an indiſpenſable neceſſity of doing what they did.

Sect. 26. Secondly then, If the anſwer be, that the threatning them at that time was viſibly but an empty terrour, being joyned with a releaſing them out of cuſtody, verſe 3. and 21. and ſo but an expreſſion of their diſlikes, and their fear of them, rather than a perſecuting them, and that in that caſe the duty of propagating the Goſpel, and beginning that at Jeruſalem, was in full force incumbent on them at this time, Non obſtante the diſpenſation granted them, Matth. 10. 23. of flying when they were perſecuted; Then likewiſe will it be in force by analogy to us, that we ſhould not be amated by empty terrours, but purſue the diſcharge of our functions, as far as violence will permit us; not feigning Mormoes to our ſelves, or making the fancy or ſhadow of the Lion in the way, the motive or excuſe of our real ſloth, or neglect of our callings.

Sect. 27. Or thirdly, If it be anſwered, that that advice for flight in perſecution was given to the Diſciples, Math. 10. before their receiving their Apoſtolical Charge and Commiſſion, Matth. 28. Joh. 20. and ſo that theſe Apoſtles might be now under precept of not yielding to this violence, though the Diſciples were not, Then again, though that will not be made good by any grounds of Scripture, nor prove reconcileable with the practice of Saint Paul at Damaſcus, who was an Apoſtle alſo (having already queſtionleſs his miſſion from Heaven to that office) yet will that be of uſe alſo to our preſent difficulty, for then all officers, howſoever intruſted by Chriſt, are not preſently under the ſame obligations, that Saint Peter, and thoſe other Apoſtles were, and ſo their example is not farther to be extended, than other Scriptures, and examples, and the conſideration of all circumſtances give reaſon to extend it.

Sect. 28. Of one of theſe two Apoſtles, Saint John, the Scripture tells us that he was at length baniſhed to Patmos an Iſland, for the teſtimony of Jeſus: It was not certainly any fault, or but πάτμα in him, that he did not reſiſt this Edict, but yield to that force which executed it upon him. And yet when he was there, we find not that he had opportunity for any office of his Apoſtleſhip, ſave that of praying and communicating in the tribulations and patience of the kingdom of Chriſt, and receiving and writing of Viſions; and nothing contrary to duty in this, the violence that carried him to that Iſland, was his very reaſonable account, that he laboured not now in the Word and Goſpel. Rev. 1. 9.

Sect. 29. The like may be ſaid of Saint Chryſoſtome, twice baniſhed from his Patriarchate of Conſtantinople, and of many others in all evil times, diſ-ſeiſed of their Chairs and Functions, for no other cauſe, but as John, διὰ μαρτυρίαν Ἰησοῦ, for the teſtimony of Jeſus, and their deprivations were one way of teſtifying of Chriſt, as their preaching had (and if they might have enjoyed that liberty, ſtill would have) been another.

Sect. 30. Some diſparity there is indeed between theſe examples and the caſe, which is now before us; John was actually tranſported to that Iſland, and we are onely interdicted under the penalty of the like tranſportation, which being yielded, it yet muſt follow, that either the whole weight of the objection muſt be founded in this diſparity, or elſe that it will receive its full anſwer by this conſideration.

Sect. 31. This diſparity, if it have any real weight in it, it muſt be on one of theſe two accounts; either, Firſt, That what is now threatned, ought not to be feared, till it be preſent, and that this remoter fear is not Metus qui poteſt cadere in virum fortem, ſuch as is incident to a valiant man; or elſe, Secondly, that thoſe performances which will now actuate the threats, and bring that puniſhment upon us, are, or may probably be of ſome conſiderable weight, or benefit, to the glory of God, or good of ſouls.

Sect. 32. For the former of theſe; 1. That is not a queſtion of duty, but of prudence, and ſo lays not obligation till the queſtion of prudence be firſt ſtated: 2. For the prudential part, there are no grounds on which to eſtabliſh that. 'Tis not (without the Spirit of prophecy) within our reach to comprehend, how likely, or unlikely it is, that this puniſhment will be really inflicted; none but God can know the hearts of the interdicters, or reſtrain their power, and he hath not revealed to us, either that they will not, or ſhall not execute their laws, and ſo it is neither cowardiſe nor imprudence, not [d] puſillanimity but rational foreſight, to expect, that they who have been ſo ſevere to promulgate this interdict, may not be ſo kind as to reſcind, or ſuſpend the execution of the penalties denounced by it. Or if any man have reaſon to think otherwiſe, he may then be obliged to act by that reaſon, but not to impoſe it, Sub periculo animæ on every other man, who diſcerns no cauſe for ſuch perſwaſion.

Sect. 33. For the ſecond, It is viſible in the interdict on one ſide, that the firſt ſingle exerciſe of our functions brings impriſonment; the ſecond a ſecond impriſonment, and the third the deportation parallel to that which was Saint John's portion: But the advantage on the other ſide is not viſible; For 1. There is no duty of piety in our proſpect, no confeſſion of Chriſt (which was wont to innoble the Primitive Sufferings) our not preaching for a while is by no kind of interpretation a denying of Chriſt. Nor 2. Obedience either to any command of Chriſt's (as I ſuppoſe hath already been cleared) or yet to the truſts or commands of thoſe that have committed any part of God's flock unto us, for all thoſe truſts and commands reſerve place for outward accidents, for ſickneſs, for urgent avocations, &c. Nor 3. Obligation or motive of charity; It is not diſcernible what real advantage it will bring to any of our brethren, that he that hath preacht a thouſand Sermons already, ſhould preach two Sermons more, which may not be equally provided for, by ſome other ſafer means.

Sect. 34.

Sect. 34. And then as the Apoſtles repeated exhortation hath its place, ſo that is expreſt to be, in ſuch πονηραὶ ἡμέραι, evil days, or times, viz. that we ſhould ἐξαγοράζεσθαι καιρὸν, gain or buy out the ſeaſon: [e] Saint Chryſoſtome interprets it by the contrariety to περιττοὺς κινδύνους ἀναιτίους καὶ κέρδους οὐκ ἔχοντας, undergoing unneceſſary and gainleſs dangers, ſuch as no obligation exacts nor charity invites, and [f] Plutarch paraphraſes it by ὠνεῖσθαι τὸν καιρὸν ἐπ' ἀσφαλείαν, buying the ſafety of the time, i. e. avoiding the preſent danger, and reſerving our ſelves for opportunities of more profitable ſervices.

Sect. 35. Such opportunities as theſe, are as gifts of God, and it cannot be either wiſe, or pious, or charitable to forfeit or ſell them for no price: That we ſhould ſet ſome valuation upon them we have Saint [g] Cyprian's example, and that commended, as a ſpecial act of generoſity and ſelf-denial in him, that having in his proſpect ſome ſervice which he might perform to God by living, he made choice of longer life by ſubducing himſelf in time of danger, rather than of the Martyr's Crown when it was fairly offered him.

Sect. 36. Beſide theſe, there is alſo a competent number of preſent employments for our Chriſtian and Miniſterial talents ſtill remaining to us notwithſtanding the preſent interdict: I ſhall not need enumerate them, but onely mind my Brethren, that continual prayer for all men, and particularly for our unkindeſt enemies, is one ſeaſonable part of that task; and though that might be performed alſo in Patmos, yet others there are, of which a ſtrange land or wilderneſs is not capable; and between theſe we may profitably and comfortably divide this vacancy, and buſily and charitably, and to very excellent purpoſe, exerciſe our ſelves, till God ſhall in mercy return our wonted tasks, call us back to the conſtant labour, and full buſineſs of his vineyard again.

Sect. 37. And if herein we be not ſcandalouſly wanting to theſe opportunities, which how improbably ſoever they look at a diſtance, God can convert, and hath certainly in his wiſedom deſigned for the greater advantages of his ſervants, and to more abundant fruit to our account. This will be matter of full ſatisfaction, and more than ſo, even of comfort and joy to conſcience, and ſuperſede all neceſſity of farther anſwer to this ſcruple.

CHAP. VII.

The beneficial uſes of our preſent condition.

SECT. I.

Firſt, Contempt of the World.

1. THus far I have proceeded by way of retroſpect, or reflexion on the ſad matter of our preſent condition, and endeavoured to foreſee and foreſtall thoſe ſcandals, to which it is principally liable, that no man may be enſnared, or offended, or ſo much as diſcouraged by it.

2. 'Tis now time, that I look forward on ſome few of the many great uſes, we are to make of this ſtate, the beneficial exerciſes, which ſeem moſt peculiarly apportion'd to it; that ſo we may according to Saint Paul's direction τοῖς ἔμπροσθεν ἐπεκτείνεσθαι, give a ſtretch forward to the things which are before, and ſo διώκειν, make that a latter ſtage in our preſent courſe toward the great βραβεῖον, the prize (of all, and ſo) of our preſent agones.

3. And the firſt ſtep, that we advance, as it cannot miſs to furniſh us with an armature againſt all the vaſteſt changes that this mutable world can ſubject us to, with an O paſſi graviora, giving us an aſſurance, that what next ſhall come cannot be more ſtrange, and unexpected, leſs within the diviners power to foreſee, or indeed much more vaſt and horrid at the neareſt approach, than this which we already diſcern that God hath choſen for us; ſo it may be very proper to wean us, and mortifie in us all fondneſs to that, which hath now nothing left that is lovely or deſirable in it.

4. We know David's Unicum petii, Pſalm 27. 4. the one thing that he counted worth deſiring of the Lord, and without which all the reſt had no reliſh in it. And this hath God ſeen fit to rend from us at this time, that we may have never an hoſtage left to ingage our kindneſs to the world.

5. When all that deſerves to be rejoyced in, in this life, is moſt ſtrictly warded from us (ſuch ſure are the fruits of that Paradiſe, from which we are now exiled) what Chriſtian Spirit of the courſeſt mould, that hath moſt of allay in his compoſition, can in earneſt ſolicite a reprieve of the ſevereſt ſentence, court this world, or dread a final parting with it, when by any farther ſummons he that hath caſt him into theſe briers and thorns, ſhall mercifully call and invite him out of them?

6. The Eremite or Anchoret that hath paſs'd ſo great a part of his journey towards heaven, as to be come within a pace of his non ultra (like Simeon Stylita in Theodoret, immured in his pillar, and become already but his own Statue and monument, as it were) and hath but the patience of one ſtep more required of him, to conclude his travel, to lodge him in Abraham's boſom, were ſurely very unkind to heaven and treacherous to his own aims and intereſts, if he ſhould then ſtop, or ſtart, or think of a retreat.

7. And the like contradiction were it to our own greateſt concernments, when we are deveſted of all the vivendi cauſæ, the comforts or cauſes of living (the chief of which is that gladſome news in the Pſalmiſt, when they ſaid unto him, let us go up to the houſe of the Lord, whereupon he could revive himſelf out of any dumps with this one cordial, My feet ſhall ſtand in thy gates, O Jeruſalem, and Jeruſalem is as a City at unity within it ſelf) when, I ſay, we are caſt out of this preſence of the Lord, this comfortable, though but ambulatory tent of his, where for a time he hath allowed us an acceſs unto him, to tremble at the ſight of that Officer, which comes but to return us to our home and joys, and to ſecure the firmneſs of our future abode, that it ſhall be aſcertain'd to us for ever.

8. Scham-

8. Schammatha and Maranatha we know were the significative titles of the Jewish excommunications, and the interpretation of them the approach of destruction from the Lord; The Sanhedrins casting out of the assembly, was, saith Josephus, the frequent forerunner of that other out of the land of the living. And the like abode was thought to attend the Druids censures, when they interdicted any man the liberty of sacrificing, quæ pœna apud eos gravissima est, saith [a] Cæsar, the heaviest punishment that could befall the Gauls or Britains. And though this of ours be no parallel, yet it may be usefull thus far to mind us of our duty, to prepare us so, as not to be surprised, whatsoever God shall next send. [a] De Bell. Gall. l. 6.

9. Meanwhile one comfort this of ours is capable of, above any real, though meekest Censures of the Church (ἐπιτιμίαι and νουθεσίαι the reproofs or admonitions Ecclesiastical) that it is not Futuri judicii præjudicium, in [b] Tertullian's phrase, hath no inauspicious influence on our future weal, the binding us on earth, though it never be rescinded here, will be far from interdicting, or excluding us from heaven: there was, I hope, never more truth in [c] Origen's resolution, Qui ante non exiit nihil lædituꝛ, unde interdum fit, ut ille qui foras mittatur, intus sit, He that was not gone out before, is not harm'd by this interdict, he that is cast out, is still within. [b] Apol. c. 39. [c] In Levit. Hom. 14.

10. Let us by the help of God, and in obedience to these, and all other his gracious chastisements, retain, or timely get our clean nuptial garments about us, and then though we be gathered up from the Lanes and Hedges, we shall have no reason to doubt of our call to, and reception at the marriage.

SECT. II.

Secondly, Universal Reformation.

1. BUT then, Secondly, as in the Censures of the Church, those last methods of Apostolical and divine Charity, designed for the ransome and redemption of the most inthralled captive, and obstinately bent to bring him home to God, though it were by the ministery of Satan himself, there was no peace to be hoped, or obtained from this importunity, no truce from these mercifull scourges, these wounds of the perfectest friend, whilst there remained one excess unhumbled, one lust unpurged, one rage unmortified, one ὀχύρωμα, be it high or strong hold, pride or habit of sin, unlevelled, or unsubdued; so must we reckon of it at this time, while we are under these shadows and false images of it.

2. The rebukes of Heaven that are now upon us, are as inexorable as his unwearied love of souls can make them, we must not in kindness to our selves beg their remove, till they have finish'd the saving work for which they are as surely sent, as Christ came into the world upon the same errand; and then what an inauspicious Symptome must it be, if the application shall increase the Paroxysms, if the sins that brought these judgments to chastise them, should make a shift to thrive under them, if the fruitfull parent should become also the incestuous birth of its own progeny.

3. The intimations which Scripture gives us of such charitative severities (such certainly are God's now unto us, designed wholly to ends of mercy) all look this way; Bishop Titus's rebukes must be whet, till they advance to the ἀποτόμως, to be sharp and cutting, and never lose the edge, till they have obtain'd their design (ἵνα ὑγιαίνωσιν) till they have by lancing fetcht out the very core of the Imposthume, the dregs and sediment of the disease. Tit. 1. 13.

4. The Apostle elsewhere expresses it by very comprehensive phrases, by καθαίρειν λογισμὸς, subduing and bringing to nothing the very thoughts, disputes, or reasonings in the breasts, πᾶν ὕψωμα, every elation, or unevenness in the heart, that doth but ἐπαίρεται, lift it self up against the knowledge of God or Christian practice, πᾶν νόημα, every conceit or notion, and in fine ἐκδικῆσαι, to act revenge, to punish capitally (so as it never revive again) πᾶσαν παρακοὴν, every not hearkening or disobedience; and till this be done effectually, Timothy must not be too hasty to impose hands, absolve, or loose those censures, lest he bring upon himself the guilt of those sins which it was the duty of his censures to reform in others; the ἐπακολουθοῦσαι ἁμαρτίαι, consequent sins, those that are still continued in after the hand of discipline is upon a man; have a fearfull aggravation belonging to them, that of thundering back against heaven, the most unagreeable return to the utmost charity, the most prodigious anomaly, or irregularity in the world. 2 Cor. 10. 5, 6. 1 Tim. 5. 22. Verse 24.

5. We know the dress that belonged to the excommunicated person, both in the Jewish and Primitive Christian Church, the same, that of the strictest profoundest Mourners, and all the Assembly were to accompany him in the same dolefull habit; Saint Paul expresses it by God's * humbling the very Apostle that inflicts it, and his † coming ἐν λύπῃ, in a mournfull guise unto the offender. And in this also the parallel may hold, the mourning weeds in many respects very well become us at this time. And shall he that is a mourning for himself, a celebrating as it were his own obsequies (and should in reason begin the θρηνῳδία, the dolefull Elegy to others in an accent of exemplary sorrow) forget the business in hand so prodigiously, as to mistake an oath or execration for it, to aim that shaft against Heaven, that should have been designed at his own breast, bewail his excesses in new riots, and as the deluge to the old world, overwhelm the sinner, instead of purging away the sin? * 2 Cor. 12. 21. † 2 Cor. 2. 11.

6. Were this tolerably fit to be the return but to humane discipline, to him that speaketh (though it be Oracles, so χρηματίζων signifieth) on earth; yet it were most intolerable madness thus to turn away from him that speaketh from heaven, and that is our case at this time. Heb. 12. 25.

7. 'Tis vain to question the instruments, when by its being fallen upon us, we know the Counsel and hand of God προώρισεν γενέσθαι, hath preordained it shall be done, not onely permitting it thus to fall, but also designing it charitatively to our greatest good, the mortifying every sin, that still lives among us. And if we do not now qualifie our selves for our return to this glorious kingdom of his on earth (into which there is no regular entrance for any thing that defileth, or that worketh abomination, or lye, I mean either for carnality or hypocrisie) just as we would think our selves obliged to doe for our admission into the kingdom of heaven, that Rev. 21. 27.

viſion which may not be approacht without all kind of purity, we are ſtill fitted for ſeverer methods, and cannot without a kind of ſacrilege covet, or wiſh a liberty of acceſs to God's holy things, which cannot be injoyed without being defiled alſo, and prophaned by us.

8. What is here ſaid thus generally, ought to be as diſtinctly and particularly applied to every leprous ſpot, or plague-ſore in each unreformed ſinner's heart among us, as if I had delivered by retail the moſt perfect catalogue of them. Let us ſearch and try our ways, and now if ever perfect our vows of returning to the Lord.

Lam. 3. 40.

9. And this muſt be indeavoured by all the moſt probable remaining means, that may any way be ordinable to it, ſure not by mens taking advantage of the times, and caſting off all even form of Godlineſs; this is the ſad fruit of the reprobate Soil, the forerunner of curſe and burning. But the more deſolate our condition is, the more ſolicitouſly to endeavour to gain God to our ſociety and aſſiſtence, to keep cloſe to him in conſtant frequent returns of converſe on our knees, or on our faces (to that our Cloſets are much better accommodated, than our Churches, or more publick Aſſemblies, and our excluſion from them may well mind us of that poſture either of Chriſt, Matt. 26. 39. or of the θεομαλαίους or howling penitentiaries in the Primitive times) talking with him, and receiving both aids and directions from him, handling him and ſeeing him in his word (and thoſe much more faithfull means of converting ſpiritual food into ſpiritual nouriſhment, than the Ear hath been experimented to be) and ſo with more advantage filling our ſelves out of the Ocean, without repining that the drop of the bucket is taken away from us.

Heb. 6. 8.

10. 'Tis poſſible we may be found to have ſomewhat by us in ſtore, that may prove food, when the famine hath Cookt it for us; That Prayer which Chriſt gave us (as once God by Moſes did Manna, from heaven) may, when 'tis better conſidered, than our plenty ever yet permitted it to be, prove an help to all our infirmities, that one plate of pure Gold be beaten out into a great deal of Wire, increaſe like the Widow's Oil and Meal, by a deliberate effuſion (as I have heard of a pious man, that made it his whole private office) not by giving it the number of the Romaniſts Roſary, but by impreſſing on his own heart firſt, and from thence pouring out to God, the weight and full Commentary (as far as his and his brethrens known wants ſuggeſted) of every petition. And I doubt not but it may prove like Manna in that reſpect alſo, agreeable to every good Chriſtian's taſte, and proper to his ſtomach, if he come now with a vigorous appetite to make uſe of it.

11. And if but the ſeveral Articles of the Creed might be uſed as they were meant, to inforce on us the many great ingagements of ſincere reformation, and to mind us of the mercy of the ſecond Covenant, the merit, and example of his ſufferings, and the power and bleſſed influence of his reſurrection, &c. we ſhould need no more outward aids (though there be innumerable ſtill ready at hand for any that could have received benefit by thoſe, which are now taken from us) but thoſe which 'tis very hard for us to miſs, the ſeveral branches of our duty, very legible in the moſt perſpicuous parcels of Scripture, the Decalogue and the Sermon in the Mount, to direct us in that way, wherein, by God's help, inſtantly implored, we may be ſecure from ſtumbling.

12. However, if a truſty guide may add either to the comfort or ſafety of this journey, there are ſuch now at leiſure, that may be had without hire, 'tis pity (if they may be employed to thy benefit) they ſhould be ſuffered to be idle, being indeed never more proper and profitable in any caſe, than in this of overlooking thy performances of this firſt branch of Repentance, in the duties of mortification.

SECT. III.

Thirdly, Fruits of Repentance. Among them, Firſt, Perfect contentment: Diſcernible by two trials.

1. BUT for the looſing of ſinners, and reſtoring them to the peace of the Church, the bare mortification is not ſufficient. The reſcuing from the jaws or Gates of Hell doth not preſently ſecure us of our right to Heaven. There muſt be the building of Houſes and planting of Orchyards (ſaith S. [d] Hierome on Jer. 29. 5.) taking Wives, and begetting of Sons and Daughters, Cum ex Jeruſalem, i. e. Eccleſia ejecti fuerimus, When we are caſt out of Jeruſalem, i. e. the Church. There muſt be the καλὰ ἔργα πολλὰ, good works in the plural, (ἐπανορθώσεις the penitential Canons uſually ſtyle them, the living in more than one ſingle trade of goodneſſes) and thoſe manifeſt or diſcernible (there being in that caſe no rule given for the concealing, but rather publiſhing them) before it can be ſeaſonable with God or profitable for us to have his diſcipline removed.

1 Tim. 5. 25.

2. Some of theſe that have moſt peculiarity of agreeableneſs to our preſent condition, may not unfitly be ſpecified.

3. Firſt, that of a perfect contentment and unfeigned ſubmiſſion to the good will and choices of God, with what ſharpneſs ſoever they come mixt to us: In the words of Micha, which S. Hierome recommends to him particularly, * on whom the cenſures of the Church are fallen, Micha 7. 9. I will bear the indignation of the Lord, becauſe I have ſinned againſt him ('tis ſure we have ſins enough to own this, or whatever worſe thing ſhall happen to us) untill he plead my cauſe and execute judgment for me.

* Si de congregatione fratrum & domo Dei ejicimur—in Ezec. ca. 17. Tom. 4. p. 381.

4. To this plenitude of chearfull contentment, beſide many others, one eminent motive ſuggeſts it ſelf, by conſidering, that when we were ſo richly furniſht with variety of infamous matter, any leaſt of which might fitly have own'd, as having moſt juſtly provoked, the fierceſt of God's revenges, and, if he had ſo pleaſed, made us doubly miſerable, once under the ſmart of his rod, and a ſecond turn under the reproach of the ſcandalous ſin, which it ſignally was directed to point out, and viſit; God hath given to us (ἐκαίσιον) out of his ſpecial undeſerved favour vouchſafed to us to ſuffer for well doing, at leaſt not for evil doing (and that that [f] such shall not lose its reward, the examples of Job and Lazarus will secure us) and so to bear in our bodies no other (στιγματα) brands, or marks, but onely those of the Lord Jesus. This, I say, if applied, and brought home by every man to his own individual, and the foulest sins he hath at any time been guilty of, and might have been surprised in, will found more than a contented acquiescence in God's present choices for us, even oblige us severally (as Saint Peter thought most just upon consideration) to sanctifie the Lord God in our hearts, to magnifie the mercy, not repine at the severity of his methods towards us.

5. And for the judging of this, whether it be sincerely what it ought, it must be observed, First, Whether we have any very unkind reflexions on those that are the instruments of it. Abishai that would have had David's displeasure break out against him that cast stones at him and all his servants, did not look through David's Optick; if he had, he would have discerned what David did, that possibly the Lord had said unto him, curse David, and who shall then say, wherefore hath he done so? It is as sure as any thing can be in the world, that God meant no real curses or mischiefs to David at this time, yet because David had sins enough, for which this, and much more might justly be permitted by God to fall upon him, and by his not withholding Shimei, 'twas evident God had thus chosen to permit it, the holy man is forward to take it as coming directly from God, and quarrels nothing but the impatience of Abishai, What have I to doe with you ye sons of Zerviah, so let him curse, because the Lord—— Sam. 16. 6. Verse 10.

6. The pious man under God's discipline hath impatience to none, but those that would have him impatient, as our Saviour, that expresseth not the least displeasure to the instruments of his death, to Caiaphas, to Pilate, to the Souldiers, to Judas, to the Devil himself, doth yet rebuke Peter's kindness that would have averted his suffering it: He is the onely Satan that would rob him of his chearfull, and joyfull submission to the Father's will, for the accomplishing of which Satan himself is but a kind of Disciple: Judas and he doe him a very acceptable service; the former is styled friend, and called upon onely to make haste, in thus ministring unto him. John 13. 27.

7. Secondly, the sincerity of the contentment may be judged by the quiet and stilness and constancy in that posture, into which God hath cast us. An uncontented mind is always removing and tossing upon the bed, from one side to the other, as in a continual posture of the greatest uneasiness: And so is he, that hath any inward regrets to the condition, that God hath placed him in; whereas the pious man can be content to wait [g] God's leisure, and with steadiness of fixed eyes to look for him, till he shall please to discover his face.

[g] Εἰ βουληθείητε εἶναι ἡγναίωσε, κᾶν ὀλίγοι ἢ δεινῶν ἦτε, πειράσεται σὸν πλειόνων σὸν ὅσῃ καιρὸς καλλωπιζομένων. Chrys. Ep. ϛμη'. Tom. 7. p. 173. l. 27.

8. Such indeed are wont to be times of temptation, wherein as false Prophets are wont to arise, so they have many advantages, by the assistence whereof to deceive many, and the greatest and most prevalent of those is the reproach of our solitude. He that is cast out will be ready to hearken to any that tenders him an hospitable reception, and those that have least reason to produce for his entring into their society, will be most forward to make use of such an advantage, which may supply the place of argument. Matt. 24. 11.

9. And thus an errour that hath but the luck to be gotten in fashion, may by the pomp or φαντασία of many followers, probably enough get his company, that finds himself left alone, and is not very well pleased with the state, and satisfied of the reasons of his solitude.

10. This therefore is the second trial of our contentment, if being cast out by men, we can satisfie our selves with God's company (and the man that was born blind will yield us a good omen in this matter; when the Jews had cast him out, presently Jesus heard it and found him) if being in the wilderness we be not one of those Reeds there, which our Saviour tells us are shaken with the wind. John 9. 33.

11. This were the way to cast our selves out indeed, and so to have that character of real Hereticks or Schismaticks, in Saint Paul, so far as to be αὐτοκατάκριτοι, condemned by our own sentence, which is much worse than to be more severely handled by other men; and nothing but the grace of God and a contemplation of his wisedom, and an acquiescence in his choices (which sees persecution fitter for some servants of his, than the greatest calm or grandeur of the most prosperous profession) can secure us (if temptations chuse their seasons) from being thus shaken.

SECT. IV.

Secondly, Peace with all men.

1. OUR second vital employment, very fitly apportion'd to our solitude, is our ardent desires of, and Prayers for the peace of Jerusalem: We know what was required of the captive Israelites, when they were carried into a strange land, to seek the peace of that City, whither they were carried away captive, and to pray to the Lord for it. And we now know, I hope, assuredly; whither it is that we are banished, even just thither, where we were before, into the bosome of the holy Catholick Church of Christ. Jer. 29. 7.

2. And therefore as those, that serve God in an Hermitage, have not thereby their thoughts confined to that narrow compass wherein they corporally move, but intercede hourly for the most common concernments of all others; so must our Oratories be now designed, like Daniel's Chamber in Babylon, with our windows wide open toward Jerusalem, our devotions and bended knees (his three times a day at least) ingaged in that one great interest of Christians, the glory, i. e. the peace and true piety of that new Jerusalem, which is come down from Heaven; that like that which remains there, it may be at unity within it self. Dan. 6. 10.

h Ἐπήχει μὲν ὁ λόγον ἡ μνήμη τὸν ἀνωφελῆ χαρδίας, καὶ ἐκπίπτον τὸ δάκρυον ἢ φωνὴν ὀνικῶσι, ὅταν ἐνθυμηθῶ ὅτι ἀχάπητε καὶ εἰσὶν ὑμῖν θεὸς Κυρίου καταλελοφθείσης ἡ ζητῆμεν τὸ καταλεφθέν.

3. There cannot be a more h amazing dismal prospect in the world, than that vast rupture and chasm betwixt the East and West (the effect of that wind, those tormina, of pride and ambition, and aëry speculation, gotten long since into the bowels of the great body, and causing this Ecclesiastical σεισμὸς, this Earthquake first, and thence this Hiatus or aperture, which could never have the skill to close again) and the many Subdivisions, lesser rents and fractures, which are multiplied infinitely in this one Western part of it, a new carnificina or act of cruelty to the mystical body of Christ; first, cut asunder in the midst, and then so much life secured to each moiety, as to make it capable of the Rack and Torture in every limb of it, and of continuing for ever howling and laughing at once under those torments, till at length it cannot without fits of the most phrenetick rage be besought to come out of this condition.

Mr. Basil. Hom. xxix. Tom. 1. pag. 620.

4. 'Tis a strange Romance, and to any that partakes but of ingenuous nature, an incredible Fable, that the one Heir of the Othoman Family, having possession of so great a part of the world, far greater than any other Potentate, should therein reign a Sullen, Solitary Tyrant, consecrated first in the blood of all his Brethren, and then thriving and prospering into a vast bulk by keeping himself to this one Canibal diet, (full hausts of the blood of men) receiving this tribute from his own, as well as others subjects, all his vassals living to no other design, but of killing and dying at his direction, and to secure them of the continuance of this trade, the Christians not deemed sufficient, his fellow Mahomedans (if they do but differ from him in the question of [who is the right successour of their great Prophet] and affirm Hali to be the man) become as unsufferable enemies, as lawfull prize, as necessary to be invaded and overrun with his hosts of Locusts, as any. And all this while no news of the one design, and business of power and dominion, distribution of justice to others or examples of it in himself: As if all the rest of the world, but he that hath the luck to strangle his brethren, were born to no other purposes, but those of the Gladiatours in the Roman Theatre, onely to fight and die, with their heart-blood, yea and their souls also, to minister to his ambitions, or rages, or frantick devotions, paid to his sanguinary Prophet, to pass through the fire to this Moloch, to run like mad doggs through the world, sowing death, whersoever they come, till at last they fall themselves.

5. And for all this there is certainly no other account to be given, but that the Dragon, the old Serpent, the Devil and Satan being according to prediction let loose for a time, this their Epileptick Prophet was pitcht on for his General, entertain'd, and inspired by him, to prescribe this course for the prosperous managing of those Battels, which are mentioned, Rev. 20. 8. And accordingly it hath succeeded.

6. But that in the Polity of Christ, that real Theocraty, wherein God personally and visibly descended to settle (and to preside in) it himself, the fundamentals whereof were laid in a grand pacification betwixt earth and heaven, the Statute-Laws first and last (the Old and the New Commandment) the very same, for our loving one another, and the whole body or Codex most exactly conformable; first peace, then mercy, then patience, and long-suffering, then bowels of compassion, loving and laying down the life, a tribute of that love, extending to affections, to actions, toward brethren, toward strangers, towards enemies, both our own, and God's enemies, toward heathens, toward all mankind, never projecting other contentions or victories, but that one of abounding in goodness, and overcoming evil with good: That, I say, in a Government thus establisht upon such principles and by such rules as these, there should yet be so much of the contrary temper, nothing but wars and fightings among Christians, eternal feuds among children of peace, that the whole host of Angels of light should transform themselves into legions of darkness; that the Mahomedan, that is otherwise impregnable, should be onely thus conquered by the Christian, that this hath more wars a managing than he, and those wars more cruel, reaching to the Soul, anathematizing of brethren, casting out the Greek Church, the whole East, for Hereticks, upon no other quarrel, but the Filióque; and a great part of the West (without pretence of any word in the Old Creeds) for not accepting the Trent Articles, or differing with them about their one Monarchick Successour of our great Prophet: That all Religion should be placed in the belief of those Doctrines, which if they were true, are no least part of the Christian Faith: That all those things, whereon certainly our eternal state depends, Judgment, and Mercy, and Faith, should, by consent of parties, be left out of the Scheme; little or none of our zeal laid out on them, or for them, but all mis-spent on that, which is not bread, that brings no vital nourishment to any. Lastly, That those that rebuke Tyranny, and bitterness in others, under no meaner a charge than that of Antichristianism, should out-go all these patterns themselves, proclaim liberty to the Captive, to get the cross off from their own shoulders; and when they have done so, inslave, and bind it fast on the shoulders of all others, and (after all these contradictions both to Religion, and reason, and but ingenuous nature, to the goodness and joyfulness of brethrens living together in unity) men that are guilty of all these, proclaim God the inspirer or favourer of all, transform the Prince of peace into the Inciter, or friend of Confusion: These are a whole Chaos of prodigies, a Landskip of wild appearances, above all that the African Merchants, or Scriptores Mirabilium have ever furnisht us with, and yet make up but a part of those Monsters and fish-heads, which adorn our Maps of Europe at this day.

7. And then what Armies of Votaries can be sufficient to keep off that wrath of God, that threatens no less than all Christendom, for that one unchristian piece of her temper; what Flouds and Rivers of tears, to slake the rage of this one sin, which is more probable, than all the powers of darkness beside, to bring it low to the πύλαι ἅδου, which yet we have assurance shall never wholly prevail against it?

8. How can we at such a vacancy as this, be more profitably employed, than in learning and practising our postures in this sacred Militia, in wrestling and combating with Heaven for this one blessing, this comprehensive donative, this grace beyond all other graces (* the greatest of these is charity) this duty above all other duties († above all things have fervent charity among your selves) this utmost pitch of celestial joy, this Divinity it self (God is love, and he that dwelleth in love dwelleth in God, and God in him) the blessing of Catholick unity, universal peace; and with Jacob never give over the combat, till we have prevailed with God for this blessing?

A Form of Prayer to this purpose the Reader will find at the end of the Treatise of Fundamentals.

9. And

9. And that it may not be ἐναίσχυντος ἀυχὴ, in Hierocles, or Muliebre ſupplicium, in Portius Cato, an unactive prayer, or Womaniſh ſupplication, that our hearts and hands, our utmoſt endeavours may herein be ſemblable to our tongues and prayers, 'tis very much our duty firſt to cleanſe our own hearts from every degree of this pollution, not to leave alive in us one animoſity either to any Perſon, or Society, or portion of Chriſtians in the world, to reſolve with the Fathers in their dealing with the Donatiſts, that thoſe ſhall be our brethren, which will not admit us to be their brethren, and according to this beginning, to ſet out induſtriouſly, and indefatigably, in the ways of peace, every man to contribute his Symbolum toward ſo good a work, and every man, as God ſhall enable him, to doe it freely and chearfully (for in nothing more than in this doth God love the chearfull giver.) Saluſt.

10. And would we but take the Apoſtle's counſel herein, * φιλοτιμεῖσθαι ἡσυχάζειν, be as emulous and ambitious, and as zealouſly ſolicitous in our contention for quiet (i. e. never contend with any but the implacable and unreconcileable) as the moſt paſſionate broiler or boutefeu is wont to be for his μᾶλον ἐμὸν his beloved ſtrife and contention, that brings him in no other reward but blows and woe, a Tophet here, and a Hell hereafter, I ſhould not doubt but ſome valuable contribution might be made to this ſacred treaſury at this time by the poor widow Church of England, with her few mites: which if they cannot hope for thanks from men, have yet a full aſſurance of being not deſpiſed or unrewarded by him, who ſtill ſits looking what is caſt into the treaſury. * 1 Theſſ. 4. 11.

SECT. V.

Thirdly, Frequency of Synaxes.

1. IT is not my purpoſe to enumerate all the ſeveral parts of duty, which this Seaſon exacts from us. Yet one muſt not be omitted, which in ſuch times the Apoſtle very diligently warns us of, that of the μὴ ἐγκαταλείπειν τὴν ἐπισυναγωγὴν ὑμῶν, not giving over the aſſembling our ſelves together, as oft as we can gain opportunities for them, holding up the Synaxes, how thin ſoever they are fain to be. Heb. 10. 25.

2. And this in reaſon now more zealouſly and [i] frequently than ever, for that I conceive ſome part of the deſign and importance of the Apoſtle's addition there, ἀλλὰ παρακαλοῦντες, but calling upon one another, minding of the neceſſity and benefit of this duty. And though the enſuing [καὶ τοσούτῳ μᾶλλον, by ſo much the more] be there expreſly founded on the approach of their expected deliverance, yet among the Primitive Chriſtians the continual expectations of their dangers appears to have had the ſame effect, putting them upon their conſtant [k] daily Synaxes, as not knowing how long they ſhould live to enjoy them.

[i] Σπουδάζετε τὴν πυκνότητα τῶν συνάξεων ποιεῖσθαι τῆς εὐχαριστίας τοῦ Θεοῦ, καὶ εἰς δόξαν, ὅτε ἂν ὁ πυκνὸς ἐπὶ τὸ αὐτὸ γένηται, καθαιρεῖται πᾶσα αἱ δυνάμεις τοῦ Σατανᾶ, καὶ λύεται ὁ ὄλεθρος αὐτοῦ ἐν τῇ ὁμονοίᾳ ὑμῶν καὶ πίστει. Ignat. Ep. ad Epheſ. Ἀφόρητα καὶ Ἀσίαν κατέλαβε κακὰ, καὶ ἔτι ἐρεῖ δὲ πόλεις καὶ ἐκκλησίας· ἄπερ ἀφιεὶς τὸ καθὸ ἕκαστον λέγειν, ἐκεῖνο μόνον ἐρῶ, ὅτι εὐχῶν πολλῶν χρεία, καὶ δήσεων ἐντεῦθεν. Chryſoſt. Ep. ρμέ. T. 7. p. 172. l. 20. Εὐχῶν μόνον τὰ παρόντα δεῖται πράγματα καὶ ὑμετέρων, καὶ πολλὴν ποιοῦ τὴν Θεὸν παῤῥησίαν κεκτημένων· Μὴ διαλείπητε οὖν ἐκτενεῖς ποιούμενοι. 3. The quality of the ſin, and the judgment that is there threatned to thoſe that voluntarily neglect ſuch opportunities, is very conſiderable. It is there, Firſt, ſet oppoſite to holding faſt the profeſſion of our hope, v. 23. and ſo is it ſelf a degree of renouncing the Chriſtian's Anchor, a wavering (as is implied in the ἀκλινῆ, v. 23.) and a drawing back, v. 39. and that noted to be very dangerous and deſtructive. And accordingly we ſee in [l] Pliny, that they, who quitted the Hetæriæ upon the Emperour's prohibitions, were by the Heathen Inquiſitours thought capable of mercy, as well as they that denied Chriſt. Secondly, It is there included in the number of the ἑκούσια, the voluntary or wilfull ſins, in them (I muſt ſuppoſe he meant) who having the opportunities, whether more or leſs publick, wholly withdrew from them. Thirdly, It goes for an ὑπαναντίωσις, v. 27. a branch of ſecret contrariety to God and piety, a preferring the world before either. Fourthly, 'Tis of the nature of thoſe ſins for which there remains no ſacrifice, and hath its part in thoſe other aggravations, and fearfull expectations that there follow in that text.

[l] Affirmabant hanc fuiſſe ſummam culpæ ſuæ, quod eſſent ſoliti ſtato die ante lucem convenire—— quod ipſum facere deſiiſſent poſt edictum meum, quo ſecundum mandata tua hetærias eſſe vetueram——Dilata cognitione ad conſulendum te decurri. Plin. l. 10. Ep. 97.

4. The obligation that the Primitive Chriſtians conceived themſelves under, in this reſpect, is viſible by the frequent mention of thoſe Hetæriæ, and Antelucani Conventus, and Cryptæ Arenariæ, meetings in upper rooms, in ſuburbs, in priſons——in times of the Heathen perſecutours. And ſo alſo when Hereſie, or Schiſm prevailed, and drave the Orthodox Obedient maintainers of Catholick Truth and peace, out of the Churches. For though in theſe caſes they abſtained from the publick aſſemblies, and indeed thought it ſtrict [m] duty to doe ſo; [n] (The Epiſtle of S. Baſil and others to the Biſhops in Italy, and France, and S. Hilary's diſſwaſives in the former, that of proſperous Hereſie, and the practice of [o] Holy men in the caſe of S. Chryſoſtome's depoſition, doth, for the latter, make that clear) yet the [p] aſſembling of the Orthodox, and the more [q] private offices were not to be neglected. And [r] S. Cyprian, that adviſes the prudent and cautious managery of ſuch, doth it expreſly on this deſign, that they might be more ſure not to be kept from them.

A LETTER of RESOLUTION TO SIX QUÆRES, Of Preſent Uſe in the CHURCH of ENGLAND.

SIR,

SInce you have upon ſome conſideration made choice to call for my aſſiſtence to the truth in theſe particulars, and expreſſed your ſenſe, that the perſpicuous and brief ſtating of them, is all that is neceſſary to be offered toward the reſolution of them, I ſhall moſt willingly pay my obedience in the method which you have propoſed to me; and being confident of your clear perſwaſion, that I ſhall ſay nothing to you, but what I believe my ſelf, and of which I ſhall, when I am required, be able to give a competent account to a Chriſtian gainſayer, I ſhall firſt thank you for the advantage which the order of your Quæres hath given me toward the deciſion of them; The firſt being ſo neceſſary, and ſo proper to expedite the reſolution of the reſt, that as that hath fallen under the heavieſt diſpleaſure, to the overwhelming of the reſt with the ſingle weight of it; ſo the prejudices againſt that being once removed, the conſequence will be eaſie and natural (and by way of reſultance) that the reſt ſhould return to the ancient liberty, which they have always enjoyed in the Church of God, free from all encounters and jealouſies in the practice of them. For certainly, as in thoſe things of which we have not ſufficient advertiſement from one ſenſe, we are wont to call in the aids of the other; and when we want the more valid authentick Teſtimony of our own eyes, we ſupply that by the eyes and Teſtimonies of other men, and being to ſatisfie our ſelves of things diſtant from us, are content to make uſe of ſuch Perſpectives and Otacouſticks, as theſe (the beſt in every kind, of which the matter is capable, though none of them perfect or infallible) So having all reaſon to reſolve, that ſuch Doctrines and Practices of the Apoſtles times, (and ſo of the Jewiſh Church) which are not plainly ſet down in Scripture, are ſolely to be learnt from the Primitive, and moſt authentick Records of thoſe times, preſerved for our uſe by the Church of God, (as the way to interpret difficulties in ancient Authours, is by acquainting our ſelves with the Hiſtories of thoſe times wherein they were written) there can be no reaſonable demurr to the Concluſion, that ſuch, when fairly produced, are readily to be admitted, and all contrary conjectures of theſe later ages (how plauſible and probable ſoever they make a ſhift to appear to us) profeſſly diſclaimed and renounced in this compariſon; which being once ſaid, muſt be allowed to have its due weight and influence on the enſuing particulars.

Resolving Controversies.

The First QUÆRE.

Concerning the way of Resolving those Controversies which are not so clearly stated and resolved in the Scriptures.

FOr the answering of this first Quære, I shall need but to demand this one thing, (which will, if not granted, be easily demonstrated, and the Contradictory to it appear to be little less than Blasphemy) that whatever hath been delivered by God, is equally of infallible truth; and, if a Precept, of infallible obligation to those, to whom it is given; whatever hath been the method to deliver it, whether by the Dictates of Nature, or by Voice from Heaven, or by Writing with the finger of God in Tables, &c. And consequently that the onely thing required to secure our faith, that it be not placed on a fallible, in stead of an infallible object, is the assurance which we have, that the thing proposed came from God, and not the particularity of the way, or sort of the conveyance. Sect. 1.

For the illustrating of which, it may be expedient to recount the several ways, that men have had of receiving things from God. These, beside that of the law of Nature, the Jews have reduced to four heads, the Voice from Heaven, the Urim and Thummim, the holy Spirit, and Prophecy. Sect. 2.

To begin with that of the law of Nature. It is the known style of that, to be νόμος ἄγραφος an unwritten law, put in man's heart by God at the first creation, (λόγος φύσει νόμος, Reason, which is by nature a law, saith Arrianus Didymus, ἐνσπειρόδ᾽ τοῖς λογικοῖς ζώοις, planted in the essence of every reasonable nature, saith Hierocles on the Golden verses) and so, as the Apostle saith in another case, graven in the fleshly tables of mens hearts, not ἐν πλαξὶ λιθίναις in any tables of stone or wood, &c. 2 Cor. 3. 3. And of this I suppose there is no question, but that as it is in some measure delivered down from man to man with his very soul by traduction, so the infallibility of God's speaking by this inarticulate voice (this ἄνθρωπος ἐν ἑκάστῃ ψυχῇ κάλουκῶν, as [a] Philo calls it, this man that dwells in every soul, and that man [b] ἡγεμὼν ἀνθρώπου, a prime commander within us, ἔφορος θεῖος, a guardian Angel, that will not permit us to be wholly ignorant of our duty, nor to transgress it without some admonition and check, nay, saith Theophilus Μόνος θεὸς, the onely God of those Atheists, which acknowledge no other Deity, and the certainty of the obligation of it upon all mankind, even upon those that have no eyes to see any other engrossing of it, nor ears to hear it proclaimed or promulgated more articulately, is as great and irrefragable, as any other written Revelation or image of God's Will of any other kind, or of this it self, when it was afterward, in several branches, committed to Books or Tables. For if the writing of the several branches of this in the Tables of the Mosaick Law, were that one Necessary, which satisfied men of the obligation to observe it; then 1. they that lived before that time of writing it, must have wanted the means of satisfaction: and 2. the obligation must have equally extended to all, that was thus written, and so to every circumstance of the Judaical Sabbath, as well as to the acknowledgment of the one God, &c. Nor can this obligatorineſs be assigned by us to any former supposeable writing of it in Adam's or Noah's time, it being uncertain to us now, whether there were ever any such so anciently written, much more whether what was written, was, as the Tables of the Law, by the finger of God, or such as could truly pretend to his appointments: It being very probable, that what was before Moses written in that kind, was written by men on their own suggestions and choice, whether as conclusions, and deductions from the Law of Nature, or whether as transcripts of Positive Laws given to the Fathers by God, which were thus thought fit to be conserved by their posterity, but neither of these by God's immediate appointment, or inspiration, or command for the writing of them. To which it is necessarily consequent, that the obligation of such Law was precedaneous to such writing, and did not follow it, or depend upon it. Sect. 3. Of the Law of Nature.

Next then for the first of the Jewish ways of Revelation, the Voice from Heaven, styled by them, בת קול the daughter of a Sound, whether a Wind, or Thunder, which used to usher it in; 'tis certain that in the former ages of the World, God commonly declared his Will by this means, or, which is all one, by appearances of Angels signally and irrefragably testified to be such. Thus did he to Adam, לרוח היום, ἐν τῷ δείλῳ τῆς ἡμέρας, saith Aquila, in the wind of the day, most probably in a rushing wind, as to Elias, 1 King. 19. 11. and Act. 2. 2. And in some like manner to Noah, to Abraham, to Moses, &c. And what hath been thus spoken by God, hath been by the Writers of the Old Testament thus far onely mentioned unto us, that God did thus reveal his Will to them, and speak divers things, of which some few, not all, are recorded by them. Sect. 4. Of the Voice from Heaven.

Of which notwithstanding it is 1. unquestionably true, that those that are not recorded, were as truly delivered by God, as those that are: Those that are recorded, having been delivered many years before they Sect. 5.

were recorded, and nothing differing (in reſpect of their coming from God) now that they are, from what they were, when they were not recorded. In like manner, as of the Acts of any Emperour, it is evident, that they were as truly done by him, when there was no diary kept, nor Commentaries or Story written of them, or before either of thoſe were actually engroſſed, as now they are known to be, after the writing or engroſſing of them.

Sect. 6. And 2. that thoſe that were not recorded, were as obligatory to thoſe to whom they were given, as if they had been written in Tables or Books, or ingraven on Pillars, and ſo delivered to them. Thus 'tis evident in the inſtance of the forbidden fruit, a prohibition given by voice from Heaven, without the help of writing or ingraving, and yet obliging ſo ſeverely, that all the death that hath involved Adam, and all his poſterity ever ſince, hath been acknowledgedly the puniſhment of that tranſgreſſion of a particular, perſonal, poſitive, unwritten Law.

Sect. 7. The laws to the Sons of Adam. And as that Law was given to Adam perſonally, ſo the Jews with one conſent tell us there were ſix heads of Laws given to his ſons, the firſt על עבודה זרה, of ſtrange worſhip, or renouncing all manner of falſe worſhip: the ſecond, על ברכת השם, Of the benediction of the Name, i. e. adoring, praying to, and praiſing the true God: the third, על הדינים, Of Judgments, erecting of Magiſtrates, and requiring adminiſtration of Juſtice: the fourth, על גלוי עריות, Of diſcloſing Nakedneſſes, ſetting bounds to luſts, and prohibiting Marriages within ſuch degrees of propinquity: the fifth, על שפיכת דמים, Of ſhedding bloud, or againſt homicide: the ſixth, על הגזר, Of Theft or Rapine, and of doing to all, as they would be done to by others. And of theſe Laws it appears not to us, that they were ever given to them in writing; or if they were, that ſure was onely as a memorative to preſerve, not as an inſtrument to give an obligingneſs to them.

Sect. 8. And of Noah. And of Abraham And when beſide theſe ſubſtantial precepts, there was in the repeating the fifth of them (that againſt Murther) an additional mound caſt up, or hedge ſet, a Ceremony preſcribed to Noah and his ſons, on purpoſe to deter them from this ſin, and keep them at a full diſtance from it: But fleſh with the life thereof, i. e. the bloud thereof, ſhall ye not eat, Gen. 9. 4. (In like manner as afterwards to Abraham, for the fortifying them againſt all the aſſaults of the luſts of the fleſh, ſo abominably indulged to by the corrupt world, the Ceremony of Circumciſion was inſtituted) And this, and the ſix former diſperſed and ſcattered among the heathen, ſo that Phocylides gives us a touch of them, Αἷμα δὲ μὴ φαγεῖν, εἰδωλοθύτων δ' ἀπέχεσθαι, Not to eat bloud, and to abſtain from the Idol-Sacrifices, yet were none of theſe committed to writing in a long while after, and conſequently had no part of their obligingneſs from Scripture.

Sect. 9. The Ten Commandments. Thus again in the Story of Moſes, being with God in the mount, 'tis evident, that the Ten Commandments, Exod. 20. together with many other Precepts, chap. 21, &c. (leſs weighty in reſpect of the matter of them) were together delivered by God, but at that time none of them written; and that afterwards, when the former part was graven in Tables (ten chapters after, c. 31. 18.) and delivered to Moſes in that form, to be brought down by him, and the latter alſo, in proceſs of time, written by Moſes in thoſe Books which are called by his Name: yet this graving, or that writing, was but ſubſequent ſtill, and ſo extrinſick and accidental to the delivering of them.

Sect. 10. The New Teſtament. And thus alſo in the times of the New Teſtament, beſide God's ſpeaking to Chriſt, and teſtifying of him from heaven, and the condeſcenſion and preſence of that ὁ λόγος, the eternal Word of God among us, we know that by word of mouth he revealed his Father's Will unto men in long continued diſcourſes and ſermons, in occaſional ſpeeches, and anſwers and parables, making them his continual task for three years or four together; none of which were, till after his Reſurrection ſome years, ſet down in writing: and then ſo ſmall a part of what was in all that ſpace delivered by him, that Saint John cannot expreſs the proportion betwixt the number of the things ſaid and done by him, which were committed to writing, and thoſe which were not, in any calmer ſtyle, than of [I ſuppoſe the whole world would not contain the books that would be written, John 21. 25.

Sect. 11. The Urim and Thummin. The ſecond way of revealing the Will of God, was among the Jews called חשן the Pectoral of the High Prieſt, wherein, ſay the learned of the Jews, there were ſo many words written (the names of Abraham, Iſaac, and Jacob, and the twelve Tribes, with this addition, כל אלה שבטי ישראל All theſe are the Tribes of Iſrael) as contained in them all the letters of the Alphabet, and by the prominency and ſhining of thoſe letters, the reſponſes were received, and communicated to the people. And all theſe were certainly the reſponſes, or Oracles of God, and are ſo called Rom. 3. 2. though very few of them are at all communicated to poſterity by writing. And for thoſe that are (as the reſponſe to David about the men of Keilah, &c.) they continued ſome competent time unwritten, before they were ſo communicated.

Sect. 12. The holy Spirit. A third way there was known among them by the title of רוח הקדוש the holy Spirit: which is thus defined by them: that a man being awake and in his full ſenſes, ſpeaks and acts like another man, but the Spirit of God (ſpiritus excelſus) excites him, and ſuggeſts unto him words, that he ſhall ſay. According to that of Saint Peter, 2 Ep. 1. 20, 21. that Prophecy is not ἰδίας ἐπιλύσεως, of the man's own incitation, or motion, (or ſtarting, and letting looſe, as it were) but men of God ſpake φερόμενοι ὑπὸ πνεύματος ἁγίου, acted, or carried by the holy Ghoſt. Where as the ordinary, ſecret working of the Spirit, is by illumination of the underſtanding, and guidance of the affections in the known ways of God, revealed to all, ſo the men of God, Prophets and the like, were extraordinarily moved and carried by this Spirit, and ſpake as they were thus incited by God. Anſwerable to this is, under the New Teſtament, the holy Ghoſt, not onely deſcending viſibly upon the Apoſtles (as before on Chriſt) and teaching them all things belonging to their Office, but the ſame Spirit, by ſome miraculous gifts, evidencing it ſelf in others, without that viſible deſcent, as in thoſe on whom ἐπέπεσε, The holy Ghoſt fell, Act. 10. 44. and they ſpake with tongues, &c. and of whom 'tis ſaid, that by impoſition of the Apoſtles hands they received the holy Ghoſt, Acts 8. 17. And certainly many things have thus been ſpoken by, or from the holy Ghoſt, which were never regiſtred by the pen of any, and many more, which never came to our hands as ſuch.

Sect. 13. Prophecy. Their laſt way was that of נבואה Prophecy, and that of two ſorts, Joel 2. 28. in time of ſleep (κατ' ὄναρ, by dream) or waking (but being caſt into a trance or ecſtaſie) by way of viſion. And many of both theſe ſorts are not mentioned, but referred to, both in the Old and New Teſtament, eſpecially that ὑπερβολὴ ἀποκαλύψεων, abundance of Revelations afforded to Saint Paul, 2 Cor. 12. 7. of which there is little more recorded to us in Scripture, than that there were ſuch.

Of

Of the many matters made known to men by all theſe means, this one thing will be generally obſervable, that the books of the Old and New Teſtament were never meant by God to be ſo full and ample Regiſters of all facts or ſtories, as that in them all theſe ſhould be recorded. A truth which (to omit all other ways of evidencing it) may appear by Scripture it ſelf, there being many things intimated and referred to in Scripture, as known and acknowledged among men, which yet are no where elſe ſet down in Scripture, but where they are thus obſcurely touched and intimated. Sect. 14.

And thus thoſe Precepts forementioned of the ſons of Adam and Noah, which are no where ſo much as hiſtorically ſet down in the Old Teſtament, (ſave onely that of not eating of bloud, Gen. 6.) are referred to, Acts 15.20. but that ſo obſcurely, that were it not for the Traditions of the Jews, (their writings which were never in the Canon of the Scripture among them or us) we, that are now ſo removed from thoſe Nations and times, ſhould never know to what that reference belonged; But by comparing of this with them, and with that breviate of them in Phocylides, (which, though it named but two, abſtinence from bloud, and Idol-ſacrifices, was an intimation, and reference to the reſt of them) we have a clear view of the whole matter, and of the reaſon of that part of the Apoſtles decree in that place, if that were not too long to be here inſiſted on. Sect. 15. The Canon of the Council at Jeruſalem.

So when the Authour to the Hebrews mentions it as an act of faith in Moſes's parents, that they hid their child, becauſe they ſaw him fair, Heb. 11.23. or, as Philo ἀστειότερον ὄψιν ἢ κατ' ἰδιώτην, a greater beauty, or majeſty of countenance than could belong to an ordinary perſon, we have reaſon to conclude, that there had been ſome Revelation, (a foundation of that faith) that a deliverer ſhould about that time be born to them. And by Saint Stephen we are clearly told, Acts 7.25. that it was early revealed to Moſes himſelf, that he was to be that deliverer, He ſuppoſed that his brethren would (at that time) have underſtood, how that God by his hand would deliver them; and yet neither of theſe revelations is ſet down in the ſtory of this matter in the Old Teſtament, but muſt be conceived to have come to Saint Stephen (and the Authour of that Epiſtle) by the ſame, or the like Tradition, by which he knew that Moſes was skilled in all the wiſedom of the Ægyptians, Acts 7.22. and that he was forty years old, at that point of the ſtory, when he went to viſit his brethren, ver. 23. (which is not to be found Exod. 2. or any where elſe in the Old Teſtament, but is in the Jewiſh Records. See Midraſch Rabba Bereſith) or by which Saint Paul knew the names of the chief Magicians (not named in Exodus) to be Jannes and Jambres, 2 Tim. 3.8. viz. out of the Cabala, or Tradition of the Jews (as we now find in the Chaldee Paraphraſe of Jonathan, Exod. 7.11. and 1.15. that they are ſaid to be Princes, or chief of the Magicians; and in the Talmud are called Jochanne and Mambre, and in the life of Moſes, Jane and Mamre, and in Tanchuma, Jonos and Jombros) and not out of any part of Holy Writ: Or by which Saint James had learnt, that it was by Elias's prayers, that the drought was brought, and continued for the ſpace of three years and ſix months, and then removed from the land, Jam. 5.17, 18. which is not to be found in the Hiſtory, any otherwiſe, than that there ſhould be no rain for theſe years, but according to his word, 1 Kings 17.1. So ſaith Theophylact on Heb. 9.4. that when the pot of Manna and Aaron's rod are ſaid to be laid up in the Ark; and there is no ſuch thing found written, but the contrary 1 King. 8.9. there was nothing in the Ark ſave the two Tables of ſtone, &c. it is moſt probable, that Saint Paul being taught by Gamaliel, had this ἐκ παραδόσεως, by tradition; for, ſaith he, οἱ νῦν οἱ φαρισαΐζοντες τῶν Ἑβραίων σωτηδεύονται τοῦτο ἔχειν, the Jews of his time that were followers of the Phariſees, acknowledge it to be ſo, but that it was not ſo from the beginning, but when the Ark in Jeremie's time was to be hid. Thus far Theophylact. Sect. 16. De vit. Moſ. Moſes a deliverer. His skill. The Magicians names.

So though it be certain that Baptiſm was inſtituted by Chriſt, and his Diſciples very early appointed to receive believers or Proſelytes after that manner, and conſequently in John Baptiſt's time it is ſaid, that Chriſt's diſciples baptized more than he, whoſe title it was to be the Baptiſt; yet is not the ſtory of that inſtitution ſet down, either at the ſending out of the Diſciples, Matth. 10. or elſewhere, till, at his departing from the World, the Commiſſion is enlarged to all Nations, and the form particularly preſcribed, In the Name of the Father, and of the Son, and of the Holy Ghoſt, Matth. 28.19. which is rather an evidence that it was before inſtituted, than the hiſtory of the inſtitution. And the like might be ſaid of Confirmation, the practice of which we find in ſome places, (and the Ceremony uſed in it, Impoſition of hands, in others) but the Inſtitution of it we do not find in the New Teſtament. Sect. 17. Baptiſm. Confirmation.

And the reaſon of theſe, whether Omiſſions, or Obſcurities of Intimations, is clear, and may here fitly be mentioned, before we proceed any farther. Becauſe in thoſe times wherein (and among thoſe, for whoſe preſent uſe) the Scriptures of the New Teſtament were written, theſe things were already ſo exactly known in their Originals, and in all other circumſtances of them, that any larger deſcription of them was perfectly ſuperfluous, ſome things being inſtituted in their times, other by known Records delivered, and by daily diſcourſe or practice made familiar to them. Thus in Chriſt's firſt ſermon to his Diſciples, there was no neceſſity that he ſhould command them the obſervation of thoſe three great parts of Religion, Alms-giving, Prayer, and Faſting, being all of them by Jewiſh Laws and Uſages ſufficiently known among them. And therefore when Mat. 6. he gives rules for the regulating the circumſtances of theſe, he doth rather ſuppoſe them already practiſed among his Auditours, than give any Commands for the practice of them, When thou doeſt alms, v. 3. When ye pray, v. 7. and When ye faſt, ver. 16. And then if this acknowledgedneſs of ſuch particulars, was the reaſon of making no larger, or clearer mention of them, how unreaſonable would it be from that Negative argument of their not being expreſly mentioned in Scripture, to conclude that they were not Inſtituted, or to make doubt or queſtion of the inſtitution of them? And whereas it may probably be replied, that the Scriptures were written for our inſtruction, and not onely for them in whoſe age they were written; the anſwer will be moſt ſatisfactory, that although it be with all thankfulneſs to God acknowledged to be ſo, in reſpect of thoſe things which are largely ſet down in Scripture, and even of thoſe, in ſome degree, which are not, but onely intimated and referred to there, yet that mercy of God's is not leſſened to us, but improved by the addition of this other, that for thoſe things, which are not at large ſet down there (and ſo may uſefully be explained to thoſe, that at this diſtance are not able to reade that darker character) the ſame God had graciouſly provided a competent ſupply by thoſe Records of Primitive and pure Antiquity, that are by the good hand of Providence happily preſerved to us. Sect. 18. The reaſon why ſome things are not ſet down clear in Scripture.

What

Sect. 19. The Nazaren Goſpel.

What hath been thus inſtanced in Baptiſm and confirmation, will on occaſion of the ſubſequent Quæres be farther exemplified. Mean while it is evident, that not onely the Nazaren Goſpel, which is not admitted into the Canon, doth yet record to us many ſpeeches of Chriſt, which we find not in our Goſpels (as that excellent one of, Nunquam læti ſitis, niſi cum fratres in charitate videritis, that his diſciples ſhould never be merry, but when they ſaw the brethren live lovingly together, and ſome other the like, of the truth of which there is little reaſon to doubt, though we have no Canonical Writer to teſtifie them) but even the Goſpels themſelves record each of them many things (but eſpecially that of Saint John) which are not ſet down by the reſt, and (which is more to our preſent purpoſe) Saint Paul ſets down in the Acts a ſpeech uſed by Chriſt, when he was here on earth (viz. that It is more bleſſed to give than to receive) which in none of the four ſtories of Chriſt had been recorded, and probably had been loſt, certainly had not come to us on ſuch Authority Apoſtolical, had not ſaint Paul incidentally made uſe of it, and accommodated it to his purpoſe.

Sect. 20. Chriſt's tears on the Croſs.

So Chriſt's tears upon the Croſs are by the Authour of the Epiſtle to the Hebrews diſtinctly mentioned, Heb. 5. 7. and by their conjunction with the ſtrong cries, (or his crying with a loud voice, Matt. 27. 50. Mark 15. 37. Luk. 23. 26.) determined to the particular time, in which they were ſhed, viz. when he delivered thoſe words [Father, into thy hands I commend my Spirit.] And yet in all the four Goſpels there is no mention of them.

Sect. 21. Chriſt's appearance to James.

So the appearance of Chriſt to Saint James after his reſurrection, being not mentioned by the Evangeliſts is yet related by St. Paul, 1 Cor. 15. 7. And although to the work of his converſion, and the Goſpel which he was appointed to preach, and the Commiſſion which he had thereto, he truly affirmeth, that he neither received it, nor was taught it by man, Gal. 1. 12. yet there is no reaſon to doubt, but that ſuch particulars as theſe, might be communicated to him by them which had knowledge of them, and not be parts of Chriſt's immediate Revelations to him.

Sect. 22. The Apoſtles.

So again of the Apoſtles, whoſe preachings, and doctrines, and inſtitutions are ſo owned by Chriſt himſelf (by the Commiſſion he gave them, John 20. 21. and by the Spirit he promiſed them, which ſhould lead them into all truth, and by his interpreting mens hearing and receiving of them, to be the hearing and receiving of Chriſt himſelf) that what is truly Apoſtolical, is immediately, and by neceſſary conſequence, divine and infallible alſo, theſe things will, to this preſent purpoſe, be obſervable, 1. That there is no authentick or Canonical Record of their journeyings, and practices, and inſtitutions, and words, (excepting thoſe paſſages which of Saint Paul are incidentally mentioned in his Epiſtles) but what the ſtory of the Acts hath furniſhed us with: which alſo is chiefly ſpent on Saint Paul's (and that onely on the former part of his) Apoſtolacy, reaching no farther than his firſt coming to Rome (and for that which is ſaid of Saint Peter, 'tis far from being the thouſandth part of what is reaſonable to ſuppoſe of ſo zealous an Apoſtle, in the ſpace of ſo many years, as he ſurvived Chriſt.) 2. That it cannot be imagined, but that the other eleven Apoſtles which took their ſeveral provinces, and planted the faith by themſelves, or their proxies, over all the world, did or ſpake many things, of which there is no account to be expected; but what muſt be received from other Writings than thoſe which are taken in by the Church to the Canon of Scripture.

Sect. 23. Their Epiſtles.

And for the Epiſtles, 3. That 'tis evident that Paul's (all but that to the Romans, Rom. 1. 10, 11, 13. and c. 15. 22, 23. and that to the Coloſſians, Col. 2. 1.) ſuppoſe the whole Church or Churches (for the moſt part, the whole Province, conſiſting of many Epiſcopal Sees) to which they were written, to have been formerly planted by him, and after that plantation, falſe teachers and hereticks to have crept in, which generally occaſioned his ſecond journeys; and, in the mean while to ſupply that defect, his monitory Epiſtles to them.

Sect. 24.

4. That before all this could be done, 'tis neceſſary many things ſhould be ſaid and done by that Apoſtle, which will amount to a far larger ſeries of ſtory in each of thoſe Churches, than the Book of his Acts (or rather of his ſufferings) in all thoſe Churches, ſets down in all of them. And as thoſe Epiſtles relate to many other paſſages of ſtory, for which we have no other evidence from Scripture, but thoſe obſcure references, ſo is it neceſſary we ſhould borrow from other Writings the fuller underſtanding of thoſe intimations, or elſe remain in ſome degree ignorant of them.

Sect. 25. Form of ſound words.

One thing it will not be amiſs here to add, inſtead of many, that although we find by many paſſages in the Epiſtles, that there was a form of ſound words, a number of ſpecial doctrines, which were by all the Apoſtles conſent to be maintained and preached in all their journeyings and plantations, μία πίστις, one faith or ſummary of things to be believed, Eph. 4. 5. πίστις ἅπαξ παραδοθεῖσα, the faith once, or at once, or altogether (or, as the ἅπαξ may ſignifie τὸ πρῶτον, at firſt) delivered to the Saints, Jude 3. ὑποτύπωσις, a ſhort breviary of wholſome words, or orthodox doctrine, 2 Tim. 1. 13. παραθήκη καλὴ, a good depoſitum, or truſt, delivered by the Apoſtles to others, ver. 14. and in like manner a Rule for rites and practices more extrinſecal, inſtitutions and ordinances, the ſame in all Churches (though in ſome few things of lower nature, according to the different tempers of the places, ſome variety be obſervable:) Yet what all theſe doctrines, or theſe cuſtoms were, is no where ſet down, either in the ſtory of the Acts, or in any of the Epiſtles, ſave onely as they lie diſperſed in ſeveral corners, and from the preachings of the Apoſtles by the Records of the firſt times (which never pretended to be inſpired) are put together and interpreted to us. In which reſpect it is, that the pure and Primitive Church of Epheſus (and, by analogy with that, any other particular Church, and all ſucceeding ages of it, as far as they adhere to, and accord with that) is ſtiled the pillar and baſis of truth, 1 Tim. 3. 15. i. e. (by the figure ἐν δι' ἑνιῶν) a pillar firmly ſet upon its baſis (ſuch as cuſtomarily their houſes were built on, Jud. 16. 26.) and the truth of the Goſpel (depoſited by the Apoſtles, and kept in each Church by the fidelity of the Biſhops there, Timothy, &c.) ſaid to be held up firmly by this pillar, ſupported and ſuſtained by it.

Sect. 26.

Having thus far touched on ſome few of the many evidences, which are ready to demonſtrate and teſtifie this truth, that God hath done and ſpoken by himſelf, by his Prophets and Apoſtles, many things in all times which are not, nor can be ſuppoſed to be at large ſet down in the Scriptures either of the Old or New teſtament, that which is behind will be eaſily reducible to theſe three Propoſitions.

Sect. 27. The firſt propoſition, Of the authority of the Canons of Scripture.

Firſt, that the Authority of the Canon of Scripture, or the firſt ground of believing it to contain (what with all reverence it is by all Chriſtians moſt juſtly believed to do) the word and will of God, is taken from the authentick teſtimony of the Chriſtian Church of the firſt ages, and not from any other ways of probation (one or more) abſtracted from this, or not ſuperſtructed on it. Two parts there are of this Propoſition, an Affirmative and a Negative.

or

Sect. 28. Proved in both parts, the Affirmative,

2. Firſt, I ſay, the Canon of Scripture is taken from the Authority and Teſtimony of the Church: And if there were any need of confirming this, this one argument ad homines were ſufficient, That the Canon of Scripture, as it now ſtands in all the Reformed Churches, and as they differ from the Romaniſts in the aſſigning of the Books Canonical and Apocryphal, was certainly agreed on by the Governours of the ſeveral Churches at the Reformation, not from any other more particular reaſon or motive, but from the affirmations of the Ancients, that theſe, which we now call Canonical books, were, as ſuch, delivered them down by their Fathers; and, that the Apocryphal, with ſome note of diſtinction, were in like manner tranſmitted by them, as uſefull to be read in the Church, and ſo placed not among Divine, but Eccleſiaſtical Writings. The words of St. Jerom and of Ruffinus, are ordinarily known to this purpoſe; of the one, Hæc ſunt quæ patres intra Canonem concluſerunt: and, Hæc nobis à Patribus tradita, Theſe are the writings which the Fathers have concluded within the Canon, theſe are delivered to us by the Fathers. And then a Catalogue ſet down exactly concordant to what the Reformed Churches uniformly receive at this day. And of the other, Hos quidem Eccleſia legit, ſed inter Canonicas Scripturas non recipit, Theſe the Church reads, but receives not among Canonical, and alii non Canonici, ſed Eccleſiaſtici à majoribus appellati ſunt, Others have been called by our Anceſtours Eccleſiaſtical, not Canonical, adding an enumeration of all thoſe, which we call Apocryphal. And this is ſo evidently the way of determining, uſed by the Reformed Churches, that it is not imaginable, to what other motive it can be imputed, that we all have pitcht exactly on the ſame Canon. And truly if the Teſtimony of the Church (or Biſhops of Aſia, I ſuppoſe, upon whoſe entreaty Euſebius tells us, he wrote his Goſpel) annext to the Goſpel of Saint John [We know that his teſtimony is true] was of ſo much authority, as to be thought meet to have a place in the holy Canon, John 21. 24. we ſhall have little reaſon to envy the whole Primitive Church of Chriſt that honour, and dignity of being the Conſervatory of our Records in this matter.

Sect. 29. The Negative.

Secondly, as the Canon is confeſſedly received from this authentick Teſtimony of the Chriſtian Church, ſo it is not, nor can it be imagined to be taken from any other way of Probation.

Sect. 30. 1. Not from the private ſpirit.

Not from the private ſpirit, from any perſwaſion in, or of mine own breaſt, giving me that aſſurance of it: For that being confined perſonally to me, or the like, cannot be ſuppoſed of ſo much validity, as the more univerſal ſpirit, and the perſwaſion and teſtification of the whole Church. This being ſo much a weaker, as it is a more particular way of probation: And ſuch as it is, it cannot miſs being confuted, as ſoon as ever it is produced. The ſpirit of the illiterate, though pious man, being no more able to give that teſtimony of any verſe of Scripture in the original, when it were read to him, than of any period in any heathen Greek, or Arabick Authour; nor the ſpirit of the moſt learned able to diſtinguiſh betwixt the latter part of the twelfth verſe of the firſt Chapter to Titus, and what was dictated by the ſpirit of a man, a verſe in Epimenides a Greek Poet. And for the whole Canon, as ſuch, it is evident that the leaving out any integral part of that, or taking in any other part, is the changing of the whole, and conſequently, that if every man's ſpirit be left the onely judge, every ſingle perſon in thus judging, may differ from every other, (for what ſome men have done, it is ſure that all men may) and ſo by this way of proceeding, there may be as many Canons of Scripture, infinitely multipliable, as there be, or ſhall be Chriſtians to conſtitute them: which is an abſurdity as groſs, as can reaſonably be faln upon. And if all theſe inconveniences did not lie againſt this pretenſion, yet it is moſt certain, that the ſpirit of a private man is to judge for none but himſelf (for, Who hath conſtituted him a judge or diſtributer?) and conſequently that the ſpirit of ſuch an one can never judge of a Canon or Rule, which being ſuch, is to regulate others, to impoſe Laws univerſally on all Chriſtians, and not one particular onely.

Sect. 31. 2. Not from reaſon, or rational diſcourſe.

Nor 2. from the judgment of reaſon, or rational diſcourſe, from the ſtyle, &c. becauſe though it be moſt reaſonable to believe whatever appears to be affirmed by God, yet Reaſon is no judge whether God have affirmed ſuch a thing or no, any otherwiſe than by concluding it from teſtimonies, that affirm he hath affirmed it. For as to the ſubject matter of Scripture, there are many things there, which are but hiſtorical narrations, genealogies, &c. and cannot by help of reaſon be diſcriminated from the ſame, deſcribed by any humane pen: many things again which are above reaſon, the Doctrine of the Trinity, the Reſurrection, &c. the faith of which muſt come by hearing, and not by reaſoning: and many things again, of which there is no other reaſon to be given, but the will of God, which could not have been known to be his Will, had they not been revealed to be ſo. And on the contrary, many things are highly reaſonable, which yet are not the word of God. The Pythagoreans golden verſes are, almoſt all of them, eminently ſo, and Epictetus, and Arrian, and Hierocles, and Seneca, are moſt full of ſublime and divine reaſon: and thoſe writings of Orthodox Chriſtians, which have tranſcribed ſeveral truths from that great Original, are yet no part of that Canon.

Sect. 32. 3. Not from the inſpiredneſs of the Apoſtles.

Nay, nor 3. from the undoubted inſpiredneſs of the Apoſtles of Chriſt, and the promiſe, that the Spirit, when it came upon them ſhould lead them into all truth. For that, though it be, in theſi, a moſt acknowledged truth, yet being applied to this matter, is the begging of the queſtion, and ſuppoſes theſe to be the writings of thoſe inſpired perſons, which it ſhould prove to be ſo.

Sect. 33.

All which being thus inferred, and ſuppoſed, is yet as far from ſubjecting this diſcourſe to that (ſacrilegious) blame of raiſing the authority of the Church above the Scriptures, as the deſignation of John Baptiſt to his office of κήρυξ, to proclaim, or give teſtimony to Chriſt, can be thought to have elevated, and dignified him above the Meſſias, whoſe ſhoe latchet he profeſſeth himſelf unworthy to unlooſe: Or as the lowly, but uſefull miniſtery of a diſciple, can de deemed a pretenſion to (or uſurpation of) ſuperiority over the Maſter. A diſtance which cannot be rightly meaſured, but by that of one extreme or contrary from another.

Sect. 34. The ſecond Propoſition.

Secondly, that the accepting of ſo great a thing, as is the Canon of Scripture, primarily and fundamentally from this teſtimony of the ancient Church, and onely ſecundarily (and ſubordinately to that) from the inward Characters of Divinity obſervable in it, is a very great preſumption, and acknowledgement of the force of the argument drawn from the univerſal teſtimony of the firſt and pureſt ages of the Church. And conſequently that as any thing which ſhould appear to us to have been delivered from the Apoſtles of Chriſt, by the ſame or equal evidences, by which we acknowledge and receive the Canon of Scripture, could not with any reaſon be disbelieved, or without impiety be rejected by us: ſo whatſoever is teſtified to come from the ſame fountain, by thoſe evidences which approach neareſt to thoſe on which we receive the Canon of Scripture, that (ſuppoſing the Scripture to define nothing in it) is in all reaſon to be believed before the contrary, which is either teſtified by a leſs competent authority, or undertaken to be proved but by probable arguments.

Sect. 35. The third Propoſition or the Concluſion. From which Premiſſes the leaſt which, in the third place, can be concluded, is this, That whatſoever hath the concordant atteſtation of the Chriſtian Church of the firſt ages (the Scripture remaining obſcure, or ſilent in the matter) that it was the doctrine or practice Apoſtolical, there remains not to any that now lives (thus remote from thoſe fountains of ſtory, and onely repoſitories of ſuch truths) any imaginable ground of ſober or prudent doubting, or queſtioning the truth of it. It being 1. evident to any man's ſight, That this is a queſtion merely of fact, whether ſuch a doctrine were taught, or practice taken up by the Apoſtles, or no: and 2. the rule being undeniable, that, in ſuch matters, no probable reaſon, one or more, no collection, or conſpiration of ſuch (be it never ſo lucky) is in any degree competent, or conſiderable againſt that one argument, taken from teſtimony of thoſe, who cannot be imagined ignorant, nor preſumed to have conſpired to the deceiving of us: It being certain, that nothing is ever done, but 'tis poſſible any one of an hundred things elſe might have been then done in ſtead of it, (the action ſtill depending on the then free choice of the agent, and not at all dictated to him by my preſent way of reaſoning) and the addition or application of probable reaſons to a poſſible event, being merely the work of a good invention firſt, and then of prudence, and dexterity of contrivance, that what is feigned, may not betray, and confute it ſelf. And then ſeeing it is affirmed by God himſelf, that his ways are unlike ours, his methods of wiſe diſpoſal moſt contrary to thoſe which our paſſions, or intereſts, or prejudices would (if taken into conſultation) have ſuggeſted to him, the concluſion muſt be, That our way of judging God's poſitive acts, doctrines or inſtitutions, by what ſeems in it ſelf probable to us, muſt needs be of all others the moſt fallacious and improbable; and conſequently that the ſureſt means of interpreting ſuch obſcurities of Scriptures, of deciding ſuch Controverſies as theſe, which are not interpretable, and decideable by plain verdict of the Scripture it ſelf, is the teſtimony of thoſe Writers of the firſt times, which have ſet down more clearly, what is but obſcurely (in paſſing, and without occaſion of adding more) intimated or touched in the Scripture, or which record the doctrine or practice of the Apoſtles, which is not there recorded.

Judges of matters of fact.

Teſtimony of the firſt times.

Sect. 36. To which purpoſe it is obſervable, that there being two ſorts of Doctours among the Jews, the one of the Talmudiſts, who profeſs to ſuperadd the traditions of men, to the commands of God in Scripture, Mat. 15.9. the other the Karæans, or Scripturarians, which explicate the Law according to the literal ſenſe, לא תוצה לי without any addition to it; yet, according to their own confeſſion, three things they make uſe of in interpreting or deciding any Controverſie, כתיב והקשה וסבל הירושה, the Scripture it ſelf, Argumentation or Conſequence from Scripture, and the tranſmiſſion or delivering down of interpretations. So wide a difference is there between traditions of men, and Tradition, or tranſmiſſion of Interpretations from the Authours of the Scripture themſelves, or thoſe that lived next them, and beſt underſtood their meaning, that they which kept cloſeſt to Scripture, and were moſt diſtant from the former, thought it fit and neceſſary to make uſe of the latter of them.

Sect. 37. Caution. What hath been thus far ſaid, muſt be taken with this caution, that it be not extended any farther than (to what it is in the premiſſes diſtinctly applied) to the teſtimonies of the Primitive Ancients, and again to an accordance of thoſe teſtimonies (without any conſiderable oppoſition) that this or that was delivered from the Apoſtles.

Sect. 38. Bare affirmations or opinions of Ancients. The Millennaries. For otherwiſe, as in matter of doctrine, the bare affirmations and opinions of ancient Writers, are but the affirmations and opinions of men, and others as ancient (if there be no ſure ground of judging) may be, and oft are of contrary opinions, as in the doctrine of the Millennium might be inſtanced at large, where Juſtin Martyr, the prime aſſertor of it, confeſſes other Chriſtians of pure and pious intentions to be otherwiſe minded, (Cont. Tryph. p. 306.) ſo it is very ordinary for ſuch opinions of ſome few to be taken up ſucceſſively by others, as that of the Millennium was from Papias by Irenæus, &c. which is but an argument that thoſe others approved what they thus took up, and no farther confirmation of the truth of it.

Sect. 39. Singular teſtimonies of matters of fact. And ſo likewiſe for teſtimonies in matters of fact, if, being but humane, they be alſo later, or but ſingular teſtimonies, and thoſe either actually contradicted by others of equal authority with them, or elſe the force and concludency of them evacuated by comparing ſome greater authorities, it will be a very infirm argument that is drawn from ſuch teſtimonies, and that which will receive but little validity from the credulity of ſome one or two others, which have delivered them down from ſuch teſtimonies. As when Irenæus from Papias, and Papias from the pretended teſtimony of the Elders before him, that ſaw the Apoſtles, affirms Chriſt to have been near fifty years old, when he was put to death, the writings of the Evangeliſts, though they affirm not the contrary in terminis, nay are made uſe of for the founding the miſtake, Joh. 8.57. do yet afford evidences to diſprove, and thoſe far more conſiderable, than the teſtimony of one Papias to confirm the contrary to have been the tradition of the Apoſtles.

Papias, of Chriſt's age.

Sect. 40. Two deductions of uſe, for particular perſons. What hath been ſaid, might now at large be exemplified in all the particulars, which either the Socinians, or other Hereticks and Schiſmaticks have of late pretended, contrary to the doctrine or practice of the firſt ages of the Univerſal Church, upon this one preſumption of preferring their own reaſon, or private ſpirit (which is but another name to ſignifie the ſame thing) before the concordant teſtimonies of thoſe times (which are moſt competent for matters of fact) and the more univerſal reaſon, and publick ſpirit of the whole Church of the pureſt ages: which is a thing in it ſelf moſt contrary to their fundamental pretenſion, i. e. exceſſively unreaſonable.

Sect. 41. For the Church it ſelf. And from hence alſo might be deduced thoſe Rules of Chriſtian Piety and Paternal Duty, which the whole body of the Chriſtian Church of theſe latter ages, but eſpecially each particular branch of it might prudently tranſcribe, and accommodate to preſent uſes; That peculiarly of Gravity and Temper, and Warineſs, not to multiply Articles of Faith, or Canons for Cenſures or Dogmatical Determinations, above what the ancient Church of the firſt ages, which was neareſt the ſpring-head, and moſt likely to know the Apoſtles mind, did alſo think meet to determine: There being no earthly Providence ſo likely to ſecure the obedience of Children, as that of the Parents not provoking them, and the difference being not great (and the danger equal, whether that be done by too great severity of punishments, or levity of commands, the one abating the Love, the other the Reverence due to the Parent, and either of those wants much weakening the band of Obedience, on which all Religion so eminently depends, but both of them together (considered with the imperfectness of that work, which the Precepts and Profession of Christianity have as yet produced on the hearts of men, through the world) being almost ascertained to tempt that petulancy, and encourage that contumacy, which unarmed laws will not be sufficient to check.

Sect. 42. The Conclusion.

But these are so large fields, and so far extended beyond the bounds of my present design or task, that I shall rather content my self at this time with the contemplation of the Usefulness, and Propriety of these Premisses to the superstructures, which the following Quæres have squared out, and fitted for them, and therefore immediately proceed unto them.

The Second QUÆRE.

Of marrying the Wife's Sister.

Sect. 1.

IN the next place therefore, if it be questioned, by what law of God it can be defined unlawfull for a Christian to marry his deceased wife's sister, I shall offer you my resolution by these degrees:

Sect. 2. Prohibition of marrying the brother's wife.

1. That by the law of God given to the Jews, as it is now recorded, Lev. 18. this Prohibition is distinctly found, ver. 16. Thou shalt not uncover the nakedness of thy brother's wife, it is thy brother's nakedness. Where by the Positive law of God, given there to that people, it is apparent, That as there is a restraint prescribed, and from that, some boundaries by law cast up against unbridled lust, not permitting to marry those that are near of kin, and that extended to the kindred of his wife, as well as the man's own kindred, upon that ground of Scripture, that the man and his wife are one flesh, one body, and, in reputation of law, one person, Lev. 18. 8, 14. So this is directly applied to the prohibiting the marriage of the brother's wife, ver. 16. And for this there need not any farther proof be brought, than that Text, nor inquiry be made of the reason of God's doing so, than this will of his, that being reason sufficient to those to whom his Prohibition is given, till it be by him freely superseded or suspended again.

Sect. 3. The right of kindred.

But because it is reasonably to be expected, that every man that reads this Prohibition so expres, will also remember the right of kindred so known among the Jews, and derived from the will of the sovereign Law-giver, that in case the eldest brother die childless, his next brother hath liberty, and some kind of obligation lying on him, Deut. 25. 5. to take the relict to wife, and raise up seed to his elder brother: It will, before we proceed one step farther, be necessary to the explaining and levelling of our passage, to give a brief account of this antinomy, and that not by interpreting the notion of the word Brother in Deuteronomy, of [the neareſt of kin, without the prohibited degrees] (as hath been by some frivolously pretended) but by consideration of the absolute dominion of God, and consequently of his free power, as of making, so of abrogating totally, or (as far as he pleases) suspending the obligation of all Positive Laws, of what sort soever they are.

Sect. 4. Dispensableness of Positive Laws.

For though some difference be ordinarily made between Positive Law, given by God to one particular Nation, and those that are given to all mankind, and again betwixt Judicial and Ceremonial; yet 'tis both evident, That those that are given to all, may, by some subsequent act, be abrogated or evacuated to some onely, either in universum, or in some singular case, and that as fitly, as if they had peculiarly been given to those, and to none else; and that those that concern civil life, may, if God please, be as reasonably abrogated, as those that are ceremonies of our devotions. And again, that though the typicalness of some of those ceremonies, may be a more prevalent reason with God to abolish those ceremonies, when the substance is come, which the ceremonies were set to foreshadow, than we can perhaps imagine for the abrogating of other ceremonies, which are not typical; or of judicial Laws, which are not pretended to be so: Yet still that is but the reason which moves God to abrogate the one, and not the other, and is not of any force to take away the obligingness of the one, more than of the other, till they are thus abrogated by the Law-giver. And consequently the whole weight of this matter is wholly to be laid upon the will of God, to continue, or void the obligation, either to all, or to whom he please. And so there is nothing strange in this, that for the preserving the name and family of the dead childless brother, (in a Nation, whose genealogies were with such a Religious care to be observed, and transferred to posterity) that God, which gave the Prohibition, Lev. 18. should soon after give the contrary directions in one case among the same Jews, without taking off the Prohibition in all other cases.

Ceremonial or Judicial.

Sect. 5. Marriage of brothers and sisters.

Thus upon that great reason of propagating mankind at the beginning of the world, the marriage of Brethren and Sisters was allowed by God, and so that law, which prohibited incestuous conjunctions, if it were given (as it is not certain it was) to Adam himself, or to his sons, before they had any children, was to give place to that present necessity, (as Positive Laws are wont to do) and so as soon as made, dispensed with, being not to take force, say the Hebrews, till mankind was sufficiently multiplied.

Sect. 6. Law of Nature. The Law of eternal { Reason, Creation.

And to this purpose it is an ordinary distinction among the Schoolmen, from Thomas Aquinas, that the Law of Nature is of two sorts, Lex æternæ rationis, The Law of eternal Reason, and Lex æternæ Creationis, The Law of eternal Creation: The former of which is said to be indispensable, the latter dispensable. This tinkling distinction, like many other that come out of the same mint, is not, in my opinion, reconcileable with the rules of Art. For Reason being the nature of man, and the law of Nature signifying (no doubt) the law of Humane, not Animal, or Sensitive Nature, the law of Nature, and the law of eternal Reason, must needs be phrases of the same importance and latitude, and so one cannot duly be a species of the other.

And for the law of eternal Creation, if that be contradiſtinguiſhed to the law of Reaſon, it muſt needs denote a Poſitive law given by God to Adam, and all his poſterity; and if ſo, it cannot be a ſpecies of the law of Nature, but of Lex Poſitiva, Poſitive Law in general, as that contains both that which is given to all, and that which is deſigned onely to ſome part of mankind.

Sect. 7. But this impropriety of expreſſion being paſſed by, which onely renders the diſtinction inartificial, not uſeleſs, there is certainly ſo much of truth in that which is defined by the Schools, as will ſuffice to clear this matter, viz. that though the law of Nature and Reaſon be acknowledged to be deſigned by God to oblige all men, of all times, in all caſes, and ſo in his decree to be indiſpenſable; yet of any other ſort of laws, even thoſe that are given to mankind at the firſt Creation, this will not be affirmable.

Sect. 8. The indiſpenſableneſs of the Law of Nature. That the law of Nature is eternally obliging and indiſpenſable, ſeemeth to ariſe 1. from the conſtitution of man's Soul, becauſe what is the dictate of Reaſon, is of the nature of every man, as man, i. e. as he was at firſt created after God's image (in conformity to which, goodneſs doth conſiſt) and the contrary of that muſt needs be contrary to that image of God, and to that goodneſs which is in him eternally; and, unleſs the Soul of man be changed, muſt neceſſarily be reſiſted by natural conſcience, that inarticulate voice of God, and manifeſtation of that to man, which is eternally in God. And 2. from the propriety of the matter of theſe laws of Reaſon or Nature, which is eſſentially good, and conſequently the tranſgreſſion of the laws, which enact it, is evil, antecedently to their being enacted: theſe being therefore enacted becauſe they are good, whereas all other are good, and the tranſgreſſion of them evil, on no other ſcore, but becauſe they are commanded.

Sect. 9. Shedding of innocent bloud. Thus the ſhedding of innocent bloud was evil, and ſo looked upon, and adjudged by God in Cain, and by his own conſcience condemned as criminous and puniſhable, before any Law was by God or Adam promulgate to the contrary. And although God (before whom 1. no man is ſo innocent, but that by the ſentence pronounced againſt Adam's ſin, he is juſtly liable to the common fate of mortality; and who 2. is the donour of life, and may therefore take it away, when, and by what means he pleaſeth, by the Father's knife, as well as by a fever) may therefore fitly command Abraham to ſacrifice his onely ſon Iſaac, and then the doing it in obedience to that command of God, is not the act of Abraham, but of God; yet for any man, without this ſpecial commiſſion from God, to doe the like, is, and was eternally evil, and therefore was afterwards prohibited. Thus Piety, Charity, Meekneſs, Peaceableneſs are, and eternally have been good, even before any man was ever exhorted to follow them, and have therefore been in time ſeverally commanded by the Father, and Chriſt, becauſe they were always good. Nor will, nor can there ever be a time, wherein any, or all of theſe ſhall be as diſpleaſing to God, as the contraries of them have hitherto always been. It may moſt truly be ſaid, that God cannot enact a Law, whereby thoſe vices ſhall be authorized, Malice, Hatred, Cruelty, &c. and the contrary vertues prohibited.

Abraham's ſacrifice of his ſon.

Piety and Charity eternally good.

Sect. 10. Cicero's opinion herein. And accordingly this hath been acknowledged even by heathens themſelves, and diſtinctly affirmed by Cicero, de Legib. l. 1. where having premiſed, that nothing is to be counted good, but what is laudable of it ſelf, i. e. may be commended of its own accord (nihil in bonis numerandum, niſi quod per ſeipſum ſit laudabile, id eſt, ſponte ſuâ poſſit laudari) he adds, that that which is ſo, is before and without any precept, good and laudable (quod autem laudabile ſponte ſuâ, illud ante & ſine præcepto bonum & laudabile.) And the truth of this is ſuppoſed by all Chriſtians, when they aſſign the difference of the Ceremonial from the Moral Law, or the reaſon why the one is perpetually obſerved, but not the other.

Sect. 11. Poſitive Laws diſpenſable, why? But then theſe reaſons notwithſtanding, which are peculiar to the Law of Nature, It will be affirmable of all other, i. e. of every Poſitive Law (whether given to all men, or onely to one Nation of men, or whether given with an actual reſervation of ſome caſes, wherein it ſhould not oblige, (as the Sabbatick Reſt, in caſes of neceſſity and mercy, and for the ſervices of the Temple, Matth. 12. 5.) or indefinitely without any explicite or implicite reſervation) that it is freely diſpenſable and alterable by God, 1. Becauſe God is ſuppoſed to give this to man after his creation (who was therefore man, before he received it) and ſo this is but accidental and adventitious to him, and utterly extrinſecal to his nature, not implanted in him, or made a piece of his conſtitution, nor conſequently ſuch as, without altering his fabrick, may not be altered, as in the Law of Nature was ſuppoſed. 2. Becauſe this being not eternally good, but receiving the goodneſs from God's command, and conſequently that command being given in time, God may alſo give it for what term he pleaſeth, either to laſt always, or to ceaſe when he ſees fit, and conſequently whenſoever he diſpenſes with it to any particular man or men, that is a time wherein it ceaſeth to oblige him or them; and whenſoever, by any other way of revealing his Will, he ſuſpends or aboliſhes that Law to all, it again ceaſeth to oblige any, and having the beginning from his poſitive Will, it determines upon any contrary act of that.

Sect. 12. Difference between unnatural ſins and Inceſts. All which is directly applicable to the caſe in hand: For when all thoſe acts which are contrary to the natural uſe of men and women, Rom. 1. 26, 27. are to all the world (antecedently to any Poſitive command) univerſally and indiſpenſably unlawfull, and accordingly are called diſhonourable affections, ver. 24. and elſewhere, not to be named, and abominable and deteſtable; yet theſe inceſtuous conjunctions being forbidden by poſitive Law to mankind, are by God, that prohibited them, diſpenſable, and appear ſometimes actually to have been diſpenſed with, ſome to the children of Adam, this of marrying the brother's wife, to the Jews. Which laws notwithſtanding being not in univerſum repealed, or as far as concerned mankind in general, but farther confirmed either by the Law of Moſes or of Chriſt, have ſince that continued obligatory to all, to whom they were not actually diſpenſed with; and conſequently are to us Chriſtians now in the ſame force, that among all the Nations of the world they always were, i. e. as truly, (though not in the ſame kind) obligatory to us Chriſtians, as the Law of Nature is in all other things; becauſe, though they were always capable of being diſpenſed with by the Law-giver, as the Law of Nature, in the reſpects forementioned, is not, yet theſe have not to us been actually diſpenſed with, but by ſtricter precepts of Chriſt confirmed upon us.

Sect. 13. The Law of not marrying the brother's wife, farther conſidered. Having therefore cleared the Prohibition of marrying the brother's wife from that one prejudice, It will now ex abundanti be obſervable, That however this were afterward diſpenſed with to the Jews, yet 1. when it was given them, Lev. 18. 16. it was given as abſolutely as any other of the Prohibitions in that Chapter; partiparticularly, as that of taking the father's wife, which is acknowledged most inceſtuous. 2. It was enforced with this reaſon [It is thy brother's nakedneſs] i. e. by being thy brother's wife, ſhe and thy brother are ſo perfectly one fleſh, that thou mayſt no more marry her, than a ſiſter may marry a brother. The Laws of Conſanguinity, which forbad a woman to be married to her Father, or Uncle, or Brother, were on this reaſon (of the ſtrict union cauſed by marriage) proportionably enlarged to affinities alſo, to the forbidding the marriage of the Father's, and Uncle's, and Brother's wife. And 3. the reaſon of all this is clear alſo: For the principal ground, which appears, of all theſe interdicts, is the neareſt of kin, (and accordingly thoſe are the words of the general interdict, ver. 6. under which all the ſpecials are comprehended, None of you ſhall approach to any that is near of kin to him) and not any other conſideration: Not that of Reverence; For, 1. that is due onely to Parents, and thoſe that ſome way partake of that relation in the aſcending lines: and yet the father's marrying the daughter or niece, thoſe of the deſcending, to whom he owes no reverence, is the ſame foul Inceſt with the former, and ſtill where on one ſide paternal reverence is due, on the other ſide it is not due: And, 2. the reverence due from the Child to the Parent, being in a more eminent manner due from the Subject to the Prince, yet becauſe there is not the relation of Propinquity, as well as obligation to Reverence, the marriage of a Subject to a Prince is not under any interdict. And, 3. the ſtate of the wife being a ſtate of ſubjection, and ſo of performing of reverence, this would be a propriety for (of more weight and conſequence, than any objection againſt) the daughter's being married to the father, if the reverence were the onely conſiderable. The reverence, I conceive, which is ſpoken of in this matter, is the fear of approaching thoſe that are near of kin, whom, on that ſcore, and not becauſe of the reverence, God hath forbidden us to approach. And accordingly the marriage of the ſuperiour to the inferiour, the ſon's daughter, &c. ver. 10. is forbidden on this reaſon, for their's is thine own nakedneſs, the children, to the end of the World, coming from the parent's loins, and ſo being part of the parent, and ſo that a proof of the great nearneſs, (becauſe every one is neareſt to himſelf.) And ſo ſtill the Propinquity is the bar, and not onely or principally the reverence. From all which it follows, that ſeeing the wife of the father and of the uncle are acknowledgedly interdicted by the Law, the wife of the brother (who, if he be not as near as the father, is certainly nearer than the uncle, the father's brother) is in reaſon deemed to be forbidden alſo, and accordingly is by the expreſs words of that Law, Thou ſhalt not uncover the nakedneſs of thy brother's wife.

Conjugal unity the ground of Affinities.

Propinquity the onely ground of the interdicts.

Not Reverence.

Sect. 14.

This therefore being thus confirmed and cleared to have been a Law given to the Jews, and that ſtanding in force, till it was to them, as a Poſitive Law, diſpenſed with (and then the contrary either permitted or commanded for a determinate end, the preſerving the name and family of the elder brother) It now follows by laws of unavoidable conſequence, 1. That the marrying the wife's ſiſter, was to thoſe Jews forbidden alſo, and that 2. not ſuperſeded afterwards by that countermand in Deuteronomy. I ſhall briefly evidence theſe two parts of this conſequence.

Marrying of the wife's ſiſter forbidden by the Jewiſh Law.

Sect. 15.

The firſt of theſe appears by the parity of reaſon. And the Jews have reſolved in this matter, even thoſe of them (the Karæans or Scripturarians) that bind themſelves moſt to the Scripture rule, 1. That there is place for argumentation and deduction from the words of the law: and 2. That whatſoever can be deduced thence either à fortiori, or à pari, either becauſe the remoter degree is prohibited, or that which is equally remote, is to be deemed piouſly and rightly concluded. Thus when ver. 7. the Father and Mother are both named; and ver. 12. the father's ſiſter, and ver. 13. the mother's ſiſter, and ver. 14. the father's brother, yet the mother's brother is not named, nor the ſiſter's daughter, which would be equivalent with that. And yet this being the marriage of the uncle on the mother's ſide, with the niece, which is of the ſame diſtance, with the uncle of the father's ſide, with the niece, and the aunt on the mother's ſide, with the nephew, from the naming and prohibition of theſe, ver. 13. and 14. by the parity of reaſon, that which is not named is by all reſolved to be prohibited.

Prohibitions à pari.

Sect. 16.

And juſt thus it is in this matter: This of the wife's ſiſter which is not named, being directly the ſame degree of Propinquity, that the brother's wife, which is named and prohibited. And that will appear by either of the two ways of meaſuring the Propinquity, the wife's ſiſter being as near to the husband, as the husband's brother is to the wife, and the ſiſter's husband as near to the other ſiſter, as the brother's wife can be to the other brother. And accordingly the Scripturarian Jews, as well as the reſt, do here reſolve, That a man is forbidden to marry לשני שארים two, which are kin to one another, and ſpecifie in a woman and her ſiſter.

The wife's ſiſter is as near as the brother's wife.

Sect. 17.

And if by the Engliſh reading of our Bibles, Lev. 18. 18. [Neither ſhalt thou take a wife to her ſiſter to vex her, to uncover her nakedneſs, beſide the other in her life time,] it be thought that the marrying the wife's ſiſter, in her life time, be the onely thing forbidden, and conſequently that to marry her after the wife's death, is not forbidden, that will be preſently anſwered from the margin of our Tranſlation, where the Hebrew [נאשה אל־אחתה, γυναῖκα ἐπ' ἀδελφῇ αὐτῆς] is fitly and truly rendred, not [a wife to her ſiſter] but [one wife to another] and ſo is a direct prohibition of Polygamy, at leaſt, when the firſt wife is deprived and vexed by the taking in of the ſecond, (as ſhall appear in the Diſcourſe of Polygamy, Sect. 7.) but not a permiſſion to marry any that was otherwiſe prohibited. And that that is the meaning of the place, may be firſt more generally concluded from the variation of the ſtyle in this, from the former verſes. The former interdicts had been given upon the reaſon of Propinquity, and accordingly that reaſon diſtinctly mentioned, firſt in general, verſe 6. and then purſued in all needfull particulars of it, to the end of ver. 17. But the interdict here is upon a new reaſon, that of vexing, which is an evidence, that the firſt ſort of interdicts (continued for twelve perſons) is now quite finiſhed, and that another head is begun againſt more wives than one: and accordingly upon that enſue alſo divers other new and particular Commands to the end of the Chapter. Secondly, this will be concluded alſo from the nature and particular propriety of this reaſon (here annext) to that of Polygamy, viz. that of vexing, לצרר, to weary, or provoke, or exaſperate her, for which the Septuagint reade ἀντίζηλον, one that may raiſe, or inflame her rage or jealouſie. For as that is not to be feared, but in the life time of the former wife, ſo as long as ſhe is living, it will be cauſed by any proſperous rival or competitour, by admiſſion of any ſtranger into an higher degree of favour, and not oneiy, or peculiarly of the wife's ſiſter. Jealouſie we know is not wont to be confined within bounds or limits, but is equally and impartially partially common to any perſon, which is injuriouſly preferred in her life time, and thereby provokes her grief, or her rage, is matter of vexation to her. For prevention of which it was, that the Divorces were recommended in Malachi, as a more tolerable unkindneſs, as will alſo appear in the Diſcourſe of * Divorce, by the view of that place.

Objection from Lev. 18. 18.

* Sect. 13. and 15.

Sect. 18. The Karæans interpretation of the place.

And thus again the Karæi or Scripturarians (oppoſed to the Talmudiſts or Traditionals) interpret this place, that 'twas here forbidden to have two wives at the ſame time: and they render a moſt ſatisfactory account for the ſeeming difficulty of the expreſſion: becauſe, ſay they, the word Siſter in Hebrew, referring to ſomewhat that is precedent, ſignifies any other thing of the ſame kind. So Ezek. 16. 48. [Sodom thy ſiſter] is Sodom, guilty of the ſame ſins that Iſrael was, as appears, ver. 49. Behold this was the iniquity of thy ſiſter Sodom, &c. and ſo ver. 45. Thou art the ſiſter of thy ſiſters, i. e. juſt ſuch another as they, Sodom and Samaria, were. And it is an ordinary Hebrew figure thus to expreſs parity, or likeneſſes. So Exod. 32. 27. Slay every man his brother, is to be interpreted, Every man another; and accordingly when the ſons of Levi obey'd that command, ver. 28. the concluſion was, that there fell of the people that day (not of the Levites peculiarly) about three thouſand men. So Iſa. 19. 2. I will ſet the Ægyptians againſt the Ægyptians, and they ſhall fight every one againſt his brother, i. e. one againſt another. And this is ſo ordinary an Hebraiſm, that 'tis uſual when the Hebrew reads brother, for the Engliſh to render it [another] Gen. 37. 19. They ſaid one to his brother, we reade fitly, one to another, though they were brethren that are there ſpoken of; and ſo Gen. 42. 21. And where the ſpeech is not of brethren, yet the phraſe is ſo, Exod. 10. 23. They ſaw not one his brother; and Exod. 16. 15. They ſaid one to his brother; and Iſa. 3. 5. The people ſhall be oppreſſed every one by his brother. And Exod. 16. 3. it is uſed of things (of curtains) not onely of perſons. And in all theſe places we reade (as the phraſe ſignifies, not as the words literally ſound) one to another. In the ſame manner, as when the Hebrew reads a Companion, the meaning often is no more than ſimply another, as Judges 16. 20. Sampſon's wife was given to his companion, that is, to another, c. 17. 2. 6. and ſo Eſther 1. 19. give her royal eſtate to her companion, i. e. to another, for ſure the Queen had no companion. And conſequently here [a wife to her ſiſter] will be directly according to the ſacred Idiome, or the Hebrews manner of ſpeech, One wife unto another.

Brother and ſiſter taken by the Hebrews for Another.

The interpretation of other Jews.

Sect. 19. * On Lev. 18. 18. In favour of Polygamy.

'Tis true, what * H. Grotius and J. Druſius ſay, that the Peſictha reprehends the Karæans for this interpretation. And the Jews more generally affirm, That the thing forbidden in that place, is the having two ſiſters together, and not two wives together; and from thence conclude it lawfull to have two ſiſters ſucceſſively. But it is viſible what brings them into that opinion, viz. the beloved and preſumed lawfulneſs of Polygamy, which they are unwilling to have reſtrained; yet muſt acknowledge to be ſo by this Text, if thoſe words be thus interpreted with the Karæans. Mean-while it will be hard to find among thoſe Jews (who affirm from that place the lawfulneſs of marrying two ſiſters ſucceſſively) any ſhew of reaſon for either of theſe two things, 1. Why the marrying the deceaſed wife's ſiſter ſhould be there permitted, where marrying the deceaſed brother's wife is diſtinctly forbidden. Or 2. Why Polygamy, which by diſpenſation to the Jews, is acknowledged to be permitted them in order to multiplying that people, ſhould not be believed to be prohibited the Jews in general, or the prohibition of it be ſet down among thoſe Laws, which had been given to the ſons of Adam and Noah, (here put together in this Chapter) as well as the marrying the brother's wife, which is acknowledged to be permitted, nay in one caſe preſcribed the Jew, is yet diſtinctly here forbidden.

Sect. 20. The vanity of their Reaſons,

For the former of theſe, 'tis true that Abarbanel enquiring why it ſhould be prohibited the nephew to marry the uncle's wife, and not prohibited the uncle to marry the nephew's wife, refers himſelf to Maimonides Moreh Nevochim, 3. 49. where he ſaith, That God, intending the diminution of uncleanneſs, prohibited it under thoſe heavy penalties in thoſe perſons, which had the moſt continual converſation together, and ſo moſt occaſion of it, as the nephew hath more occaſion to converſe in the uncle's houſe, than the uncle in the nephew's. And again he adds it, as the opinion of one of their Divines, that the Reaſon of moſt of the prohibitions in this kind, is to be fetcht from the care of peace, and avoiding of jealouſie and contention, which is ſharpeſt, ſaith he, among perſons that are otherwiſe neareſt: Which reaſon ceaſeth, when the ſiſter of her that is married is deceaſed. But certainly there is little in either of theſe reaſons to ſatisfie any reaſonable man.

Sect. 21. Diſcovered.

For 1. can it be believed that it is indeed lawfull for the uncle to marry the nephew's wife, when the nephew's marrying the uncle's wife is expreſly prohibited? or are the Jews to be heeded in ſo ſenſeleſs an affirmation? It hath already been ſhewn, Sect. 13. That all marriages of near of kin (whether Conſanguinity or Affinity) are diſtinctly forbidden, ver. 6. and is there any imaginable colour of doubting, but the nephew's wife is as near to the uncle, as the uncle's wife to the nephew: And again, that parity of reaſon is of force in the interpreting theſe prohibitions? And what is parity of reaſon in this matter of Propinquity, but that thoſe marriages which equally partake of Propinquity, ſhould be deemed equally unlawfull?

Sect. 22.

And for the Reaſon there cited from Maimonides, it is impoſſible it ſhould be ſoberly conceived to have any thing of reaſonableneſs in it: for 1. By that reaſon Inceſt ſhould be forbidden onely to keep men from fornication, and ſo fornication be the greater, and Inceſt the leſſer ſin. As that certainly, which is therefore forbidden, that it may ſecure another Precept, is to be looked on as a lighter fault, than the breach of that Precept, as the means is inferiour, becauſe ſubordinate to the end: and as the prohibition of the eating of bloud, being deſigned to deter from ſhedding of man's bloud: and the command of Circumciſion, to keep from uncleanneſs; the eating of blood and neglect of Circumciſion, are ſure lighter offences than Murther and unnatural Luſts. 2. By this reaſon, thoſe ſevere penalties ſhould onely have been made againſt Fornication or Adultery, committed with thoſe with whom we moſt familiarly converſe, but not againſt marrying of them. For ſuppoſing that it were ſtill lawfull for brothers and ſiſters to marry, the making it capital for them to commit uncleanneſs one with another out of marriage, would as much deter them from ſuch uncleanneſs, as if it were alſo capital for them to marry. He that were ſure to be hanged for ſwearing, would be as certainly deterred from ſwearing, as if the ſame puniſhment were denounced againſt ſwearing and curſing alſo; which makes it probable, that the ground or end of thoſe prohibitions, was the leſſening of, or reſtraining from uncleanneſs, but more probably, that peace and amity might by this means be extended tended more largely, than the natural bands of relation had extended it, as both Plutarch in his 101 Roman queſtion, and Saint Auguſtin. de Civ. Dei, l. 15. c. 16. have affirmed. Or if there were no other reaſon againſt inceſtuous conjunctions, the Poſitive Will of God alone were reaſon ſufficient. But then 3. there is no reaſon to affirm or ſuppoſe, that thoſe that are expreſly forbidden to marry others, are more frequently converſant in their houſes, than thoſe that are as near, but are not forbidden. For example; the father's brother is named, and the mother's ſiſter, but the mother's brother is not named; and yet the niece may be as converſant in the mother's brother's houſe, as in the father's brother's, or as the nephew in the mother's ſiſter's, and there is no imaginable reaſon of diſparity to be pretended. And however, this cannot be applied to the point in hand; for the wife's ſiſter is as frequently in the houſe, and converſant with her ſiſter, as the husband's brother with his brother; and ſo there is no reaſon deducible from hence, why the one ſhould be interdicted, the other not.

Sect. 23. The ſecond reaſon from the ſharpneſs of ſiſters quarrels.

Then for that other Reaſon, fetcht by their Divines from the care of avoiding of jealouſie and contention, that certainly muſt extend to the interdicting of all Polygamy, or, if conſidered in earneſt, Concubinacy, where the wife doth not conſent; as well as of taking one ſiſter to another. For ſuppoſing the wife to whom he hath covenanted to cleave as long as ſhe lives, to require of him the diſcharge of this Oath, what peace can there be betwixt her, and any other (an inferiour, her ſervant perhaps) that is injuriouſly taken in and preferred before her? This is in univerſum ſo contrary to peace, ſo ſure to be vexatious, that, as was ſaid, Divorces were permitted by God, as more tolerable injuries, more reconcileable with peace, than they.

Sect. 24. A miſtake.

The whole weight of this pretended Reaſon, lies upon this, That the quarrels of thoſe that are neareſt are moſt ſharp: But if there were no injury to provoke any quarrel at all, (as ſuppoſing Polygamy abſolutely lawfull, though there would be ſin againſt the law of propinquities, yet againſt the wife there would be no injury in taking in one ſiſter to another) then ſure the nearneſs were a more reaſonable argument to ſecure their friendſhip, than to engage their cauſleſs enmity. For although the greatneſs of the former friendſhip, by enhancing the ſubſequent injury, doth fitly add to the exaſperation, and make it more unreconcileable; yet ſure without any ſuch provocation, it cannot reaſonably beget it, and therefore the old ſaying of Fratrum quoque gratia rara eſt, the kindneſs of brethren is a rare thing (which I ſee by ſome learned men made uſe of to this purpoſe) is ſure miſapplied by them, for that was never in any the moſt iron age ſo to be interpreted or extended, that the friendſhips of brethren are rarer than of any others, (unleſs by the accident of living moſt together, they may have more occaſions of quarrels, than others that live at greater diſtance. And then to counterbalance that, the length of the familiarity, and acquaintance, and advantage of converſation to beget kindneſs, and conſerve it, may be as competent reaſons to make their kindneſs exceed others, and being deeper rooted, to flouriſh the more) but that, as an expreſſion of the little love that is among men, fratrum quoque — even brethren alſo have ſeldom a conſtant agreement and kindneſs one to another. Thus certainly it is meant by the Apoſtle as a ſad character on the latter days (thoſe before God's vengeance on the crucifiers) that men ſhould be without natural affection, as Chriſt had foretold of the ſame times, that they ſhould be betrayed by parents and brethren, &c. Luke 21. 16. Mar. 13. 12. which ſignifies this to be the greateſt, and the moſt extraordinary evidence of the falling, or growing cold of Charity, Matt. 24. 12. and that which includes, and preſuppoſes the lower degrees of uncharitableneſs, between thoſe that are not ſo near; but is far from concluding, That thoſe that are thus neareſt, are thus apteſt to betray, and hate one another. It is clearly a preſumption of the contrary.

2 Tim. 3. 3.

Sect. 25.

So far is it from having any appearance of reaſon (what is pretended by theſe Jews) that the taking two ſiſters together is the onely thing there forbidden. And indeed, if thoſe two things were granted, which are by them ſuppoſed, 1. That more wives might by that law be had at once; and 2. That one ſiſter might be taken after the deceaſe of the other, the concluſion would undeniably be inferred, that the two ſiſters might be taken together, were it not for that one danger of their being more vexatious, and more unreconcileable to one another, than any others would be; which being ſhewed to be no reaſon, their whole pretenſion is vaniſhed, their double plea, 1. For Polygamy, and 2. For marrying two ſiſters ſucceſſively, is brought to nothing.

Sect. 26.

Then for the ſecond, why it may not be believed, or acknowledged by a Jew, That Polygamy ſhould be here forbidden, though by diſpenſation otherwiſe permitted the Jews, as well as marrying the brother's wife be permitted the Jew, which is here acknowledgedly prohibited, I find not any reaſon pretended, nor is it imaginable that any thing of any weight ſhould be producible by any Jew. 'Tis viſible to common ſenſe, that what would hold for one, would hold for the other, being both poſitive laws, and ſo equally diſpenſable; both given to the Sons of Adam and Noah, and from thence tranſcribed, under that head of diſcloſing of nakedneſſes, and ſo equally obligatory, till they were diſpenſed with, and to all others, who had no ſuch diſpenſation; and ſo, without any explicit interdict of Chriſt's, both prohibited to us Chriſtians. And therefore 1. it was but a ſhortneſs of diſcourſe in thoſe Jews, that thought their Charter for their beloved Polygamy ſo deeply concerned in this interpretation of thoſe words: and 2. the greater their intereſt was conceived to be, the leſs will their authority be able to perſwade others. And however, the Karaans, thoſe that profeſs, and by their name are acknowledged to keep cloſe to the letter of the ſacred Precept, are leſs likely to miſtake, by enlarging the literal ſenſe of it, than any others, who from the ſubſequent permiſſion and cuſtomary practices of Polygamy, and their known zeal in that cauſe, whereby their luſts were ſo highly gratified, have been induced to that other interpretation. And of Maimonides 'tis evident, (which of all thoſe Hebrew Writers hath the reputation of the moſt ſober and moſt ſkilfull in their learning) that in his opinion by this Chapter of Leviticus, are forbidden the conjunctions of thoſe, that are neareſt to one another, by marriage, as well as by bloud, in which number the wife's ſiſter muſt needs be acknowledged to be included, none being imaginable to be nearer. And ſo the words of the Text enforce, ver. 6. None ſhall approach to any that is near of kin to him.

The Karaans, And Maimonides.

Sect. 27. Jacob's marrying of two ſiſters.

But to all this the practice of Jacob in marrying two ſiſters before the law, is objected, both as an example of the lawfulneſs of that practice among the Nations, before the law was given to the Jews, and as a probable reaſon, why this law againſt taking one ſiſter to another in her life time, was here made, viz. to prevent the like quarrels, which had fallen out between Leah and Rachel, and ſo as a reaſon ſtill, that thoſe words ſhould be rendred [a wife to her ſiſter] and not [one wife to another.]

To

Sect. 28. Anſwered.

To this I anſwer, 1. That theſe quarrels (as was ſaid) are as incident to ſtrangers, that meet in the ſame great intereſt (in caſe of ſuch injury and invaſion of propriety) as to ſiſters they can be. If Jacob had married any other wife inſtead of Leah, it is probable that Rachel's love, and barren womb, would have been more patient of that competition. If all ſuch diſſenſions as thoſe betwixt Jacob's wives were deſigned to be prevented by this law, it is certain the law was very imperfect, and unable to attain its end, or elſe all Polygamy, againſt the conſent of the former wife, was here prohibited. And therefore 2. unleſs it otherwiſe appear, that that interdict, Lev. 18. 18. be to be interpreted of two ſiſters, that of Jacob's marrying two ſiſters, will have nothing to doe with it, being not at all referred to any part of the Context, but onely fanſied to be ſo from the caſual concurrence and agreement of the ſtory of the one, with that which is conceited to be forbidden in the other. Which indeed may probably have been a means to impoſe upon ſome, and have given them prejudices this way: but being a remote ground of conjecture, which is not ſo much as a probable argument (of which alſo there may be more than one for any thing that is moſt untrue) will have no force to interpret that Text that way, much leſs to prove that the ſixth verſe, which forbids approaching to any that are near of kin, did not forbid approaching to the wife's ſiſter, which is ſo very near; or that the 16. verſe, that forbids approaching to the brother's wife, did not à pari, forbid this which is directly equal and parallel to it.

Sect. 29. Jacob's example impertinent.

And therefore all the force that can be pretended from this objection, muſt be that, which ariſes from Jacob's example, who, it is acknowledged, did this, and was a pious man, and lived before the law, and ſo may ſeem to be a proof that this was formerly practiſed. And therefore ſome farther anſwer muſt be given to that: And it will ſoon be done, 1. By obſerving that as far as it doth prove any thing, it doth prove more than they that make uſe of it to infer the lawfulneſs of marrying the ſiſter of the deceaſed wife, do deſire to prove from it. And therefore I ſhall firſt demand, whether they can from Jacob's example think it lawfull for a Chriſtian now to have two ſiſters together? and if they think they may not, then whence the unlawfulneſs of that proceeds? If from the Jewiſh law in that verſe, Lev. 18. 18. then, it ſeems, that, which was given to none but the Jews, doth oblige us Chriſtians: which is both falſe, and acknowledged by the objectours to be ſo: If from the law given to the ſons of Adam or Noah, then it ſeems this was forbidden by that law, and then Jacob's practice muſt be directly contrary to that law, and ſo be an acknowledged tranſgreſſion in him, and not imitable in us: If onely by the Chriſtian law, then that Chriſtian law will no where appear expreſs to that purpoſe; and for any deduction which will be producible from thence, to conclude this, the like will as readily be produced to interdict the marriage of the ſiſter of the deceaſed wife. And ſo ſtill this argument from Jacob's example will not be uſefull to the objectour. But then 2. for Jacob's practice, as it concerned his individual, conſidered as a pious man, though it be moſt certain, that all the actions of a pious man are not pious; and, that Jacob's actions particularly, do not all appear to be pious, witneſs the deceiving his father, and ſupplanting his brother of his birth-right firſt, and then his bleſſing, yet it is farther obſervable to what original this action of his muſt be imputed.

Sect. 30. The original of Jacob's action.

He loved Rachel, and, by compact for ſeven years ſervice with Laban her father, was promiſed to have her to wife, Gen. 29. 18, 19, 20. and having performed the condition ſo far as to call her, and that truly, his wife, v. 21. he required to have her given him, that he may go in unto her. And the marriage-feaſt being kept, ver. 22. (all which implies and ſuppoſes them abſolutely married) Laban at night took Leah, and brought her to him, and he went in unto her, miſtaking her for Rachel, and not knowing his errour till the morning, ver. 25. which thus far being wholly imputable to Laban, and not to Jacob (who was not conſcious of it) cannot be imagined ſufficient to annul his marriage with Rachel, which was before completed (as far as compact of parents, conſent of parties, and all the ſolemnities of marriage, accuſtomed in the place, could complete it) and ſo leaves this hard neceſſity inevitably on Jacob, either to leave his own eſpouſed beloved Rachel, and take his neither eſpouſed, nor beloved Leah, or elſe to leave them both, the one whom he had married, the other to whom he had gone in (for it is not imaginable, that Laban that would not before let him prefer Rachel before Leah, would now, having a much ſtronger obligation to the contrary, permit him to doe it) or elſe to take them both, which accordingly he did. To which alſo that ſome divine diſpenſation was added, though it is not defined in the Scripture, yet, conſidering the promiſe of God to keep him, and be with him in all, whether places to which, or affairs about which he goes, Gen. 28. 15. and again the many revelations of God by dream afforded him; and yet farther, the bleſſing that enſued on Leah's off-ſpring (ſix Patriarchs, and Judah the line of Chriſt, one of them) and the cuſtome of bleſſing in her name, Ruth. 4. 11. it is (not improbably) ſuppoſeable. But I lay not the weight on that. The force of the objection was before ſufficiently evacuated.

Sect. 31. The prohibition of marrying the wife's ſiſter never ſuperſeded.

The firſt part of the conſequence being thus cleared, viz. that the taking the wife's ſiſter was to the Jews forbidden; The ſecond branch (viz. that this prohibition was not afterward ſuperſeded and diſpenſed with, by the countermand in Deuteronomy, of marrying the brother's wife) will immediately appear both by the force of the old rule, That the law of exceptions confirms the obligation of all thoſe that are not excepted, and eſpecially by the ceſſation of the reaſon for the taking away this latter, which held and prevailed for the taking away the former obligation. For whereas the preſerving of the elder brother's family, depended on the younger's marrying the relict, and raiſing up ſeed to him, which might ſucceed to his name and patrimony, 'tis manifeſt that the ſiſter's ſucceeding the ſiſter, and bearing children to the husband, would bring no ſuch advantage along with it: For any other wife, of any other family, would as probably bear him children, and doing ſo, as certainly bear up his name and family, as his wife's ſiſter could do: whereas the ſon of another family, marrying the relict of the eldeſt brother of this, would certainly beget all the children to his own name and family, and not to him, whoſe wife he married.

Sect. 32. How this law, being given to the Jews, is obligatory to Chriſtians.

All that is now behind for the bringing this home to us Chriſtians, will be beſt adapted by way of reply to one expected objection. For it being granted, that this was thus by parity of reaſon acknowledged to be interdicted the Jews; It will yet be replied, and objected, That neither of theſe two interdicts pertain to us Chriſtians, any more than other judicial laws, which were by God alſo given to the Jews, are ſuppoſed to be obligatory to us. To this I anſwer by acknowledging the force of the objection, as far as is yet pretended, For it is certain, that no law obliges thoſe, to whom it was not given, and conſequently that no law, given to the Jews (that people of one particular Nation, and not the Repreſentative of the whole world, or from whoſe loins all others were to be peopled) lays any engagement (though to them 'twere given even by God himſelf) on any other Nation, into whoſe municipal laws it hath not by the Governours been received, either by their free, prudential Choice, or by way of imitation from them, and following that pattern, which they ſee given by God to his own people. And when it is ſo received by the ſubſequent laws of any other Nation, it is their receiving it, and not the firſt giving it to the Jews, that becomes obligation to thoſe others.

Sect. 33. This law given formerly to the ſons of Adam.

Onely here it muſt now be added in the laſt place, That this law which was given to the Jews, Lev. 18. had been formerly given by God to the ſons of Adam, (either after that the way of ſatisfying the firſt neceſſity, the propagating and peopling the world, was once provided for, or before, with a reſervation of liberty in that one caſe) and from thence by Tradition to the ſons of Noah, as thoſe that repreſented all the Nations of the world, that ſhould come from them, and ſo conſequently was obligatory to all. Whereupon the Jews affirm of that interdict, Lev. 18. 6. which forbids theſe marriages, that it binds not onely the Iſraelite, but הגר the ſtranger or proſelyte, who, we know, was obliged by thoſe Precepts onely, which were given to the ſons of Noah. For though God's giving theſe laws to the ſons of Adam or Noah is not affirmed in Scripture, yet (according to the foundation laid in the former * Diſcourſe, as a preparative to what I am now to build upon it) it is to be believed by all thoſe that acknowledge Scripture, upon another ſcore.

* Sect. 7.

Sect. 34. The proof of that.

For 1. one of the Precepts of the ſons of Adam and Noah enumerated by the Jews (and therefore looked on by the Apoſtles at the Synod of Jeruſalem, as that which concerned the Gentiles as well as the Jews) is intituled, as was ſaid על גלוי ערויות Of, or, Againſt diſcloſing Nakedneſſes, and that by the Jews generally expreſſed by De inceſtu & illicito concubitu, Of inceſt and unlawfull conjunction; and every one of the forbidden propinquity, mother, ſiſter, &c. ſtyled ערוה nakedneſs or turpitude. Which therefore in all reaſon is to be extended as far as the interdict, Lev. 18. which is there intituled in like manner, The diſcloſing or uncovering of Nakedneſs, ver. 6. &c. This will farther appear by comparing theſe ſeven Precepts, as they have been ſet down from the Jews Traditions, with the ſtyle wherein they are mentioned, Act. 15. whereas the two firſt concerning ſtrange Worſhip, and the benediction of the one God, the God of Iſrael, are ſummarily compriſed under the ſtyle of Abſtaining from things offered to Idols; and that of ſhedding bloud, under [Abſtaining from bloud] and that of a member of a live creature, or eating fleſh with the bloud in it, under that of things ſtrangled, and thoſe two, of judgments, or adminiſtration of juſtice, and of theft (for which ſome Jewiſh Writers reade [doing as they would be done to] under thoſe words, (which ſome printed Books, and many ancient written Copies, particularly Beza's venerable Greek and Latine one, which he ſent to the Univerſity of Cambridge, have added, and the Æthiopick and other Interpreters retain) καὶ ὅσα μὴ θέλητε ἑαυτοῖς γίνεσθαι, ἑτέρῳ μὴ ποιεῖν, and what you would not have done to your ſelves, doe not that to any other; ſo the fourth Precept, על גלוי ערויות Of, or, Againſt diſcloſing Nakedneſſes, is rendred, ἀπέχειν ἀπὸ πορνείας, abſtaining from Fornication.

The ſeven Precepts of the ſons of Noah, Act. 15.

Sect. 35. Fornication uſed in a latitude for all luſts prohibited.

Which being premiſed, it is 2. manifeſt, that the word πορνεία, ordinarily rendred fornication, is uſed in the New Teſtament in a greater latitude than is ordinarily thought to belong to it, ſo as to contain in it, not onely Adultery, as appears, Matt. 5. 32. and 19. 9. but alſo all unnatural ſins contrary to the diſtinction of ſexes and kinds, (Κινναδὸς πόρνος, ſaith Thomas Magiſter) and alſo all breaches of the poſitive interdict of Propinquity, In a word, all unlawfull deſires of the fleſh, of what kind ſoever, all acts of prohibited carnality. Of this nature there were many ſorts ſtill remaining among the new Converts of Corinth, 1 Cor. 5. 1. and therefore his charge againſt them lies in that indefinite form, πορνεία, fornication, or perhaps in an univerſal comprehenſive form, ὅλως πορνεία, Fornication univerſally or in groſs, containing all the ſeveral ſpecies of it: And one ſpecies there named by him, is that of inceſtuous Copulation with the father's wife.

* Ὅλως πορνεία.

Sect. 36. Inceſt unlawfull among the Gentiles.

Now to bring home theſe premiſſes to the point in hand. It is there directly ſaid, 1 Cor. 5. 1. that the having (or conjugal living with) the deceaſed father's wife, is ſuch a fornication, as is not named among the Gentiles. To which I might add that ſpeech of Virgil, ——Thalamos auſum inceſtare Novercæ, calling it a bold inceſtuous fact. This was by Charondas a heathen made infamous, which is more than to be pronounced unlawfull. And when Seleucus the King would have married his wife Stratonice to Antiochus his ſon, he was afraid, ſaith Plutarch, leſt ſhe ſhould be offended with the unlawfulneſs of the fact. Of other inceſtuous conjunctions, ſuch as this was, the heathens are frequent in their expreſſions of deteſtation. Lyſias an heathen Oratour, σωφρὼν ὁ πάντων ἀθλιώτατος τὴν μητέρα, καὶ συγγαμεῖ, to marry the mother and the daughter, was an act of the moſt wretched of all men. And Cicero pro Cluentio, cries out of another of like ſort, O ſcelus incredibile, & præter hanc unam in omni vita inauditum, that it was an incredible villany; and of which in his whole life he had never heard of a precedent. And * Ariſtophanes ſpeaking of a brother lying with his ſiſter of the ſame mother, ſpeaks it with a full deteſtation.

* Νεφελ.

——ὡς ἐμίνει
Ἀδελφὸς, ὦ 'λεξίαχε τὴν ὁμομητρείαν ἀδελφήν.

O accurſed man, &c. And it is Ariſtotle's obſervation in his Politicks, that he that ſhould ignorantly commit ſuch a fact, would, when he knew it, abhor that pleaſure.

Sect. 37. Though practiſed by them.

And thus it is the conjecture of the learned Photius, That the Circumciſion of Abraham, and his poſterity was inſtituted as an embleme of reſtraint from inceſtuous copulations, The Chaldæans, ſaith he, Epiſt. σϑ'. mixed with their mothers daughters and ſiſters, ἀνοσίῳ νόμῳ, by an impious deteſtable cuſtome, gotten in among them; and therefore, that neither he, nor his poſterity, τοῖς παρ' ἑαυτῷ ἐς ἔθεσι κεκλιμακόσιν, ſhould be polluted with theſe cuſtomes of their fathers, he was commanded to be circumciſed, εἰς ἀθέτησιν τῆς τοιαύτης ἀρρητοποιΐας, for the aboliſhing of ſuch nefarious turpitude, the circumciſing of his own fleſh, being ſaith he, διαίρεσις τῆς παρεστηκυίας συγγενείας καὶ ἀποτροπὴ, the dividing, and averting him from thoſe of Conſanguinity, or Affinity with him, ὅσα γε εἰς γαμικὴν ὁμιλίαν, in reſpect of conjugal converſation. Whereas, ſaith he, the Chaldæans incontinence, ἀδεῶς καὶ ἀνεπαισχύντως, without fear or ſhame, continued a long while after Abraham's time to commit ſuch villanies. And if this were ſo, and upon that ſcore, among others, Abraham were commanded to leave the place of his nativity, then will this be an evidence of the prohibition of theſe marriages to all the Nations before that time, by the precepts given given to the ſons of Adam and Noah. And then there will be little reaſon to doubt, but this interdict extended to affinities, as well as conſanguinities, and all that are prohibited the Jews, Lev. 18. particularly that mentioned by S. Paul, with ſuch abhorrence, as that which was not named among the Gentiles, or which, though it had been committed, was yet looked on as an ἀρρητουργία, a commiſſion of that which it was a ſhame to name. To which purpoſe it is obſervable, what is ſo oft and ſo diſtinctly affirmed, Lev. 18. 24, 25, 27, 30. and c. 20, 23. that in all theſe, i. e. all the inceſtuous marriages (as well as unnatural luſts) there prohibited, the Nations were defiled which God caſt out before the Jews, which ſo heavy a puniſhment inflicted on thoſe heathen Nations for this iniquity, muſt conclude this poſitive prohibition of inceſtuous marriages to have been long before given to them, as well as thoſe natural inſtincts againſt the unnatural ſins, for all which jointly they were abhorred by God, and caſt out.

Sect. 38. The learned * Hugo Grotius indeed (whoſe authority, I foreſee, will be here objected) is inclinable to reſtrain the note of univerſality to the principal heads of that Chapter, unnatural conjunctions with mankind, with beaſts, with parents, with ſiſters, with other mens wives, and that the other are added onely εἰς περισσολογίαν, by way of fortification and prevention of the former. But (beſide, that the Karæans have prevented this interpretation, by affirming the whole kind of inceſtuous marriages (of which, ſay they, thoſe that follow are but ſome examples) to be comprehended in the firſt words of the interdict, ver. 6. None of you ſhall approach to any that is near of kin to him) 'tis obvious to conceive how ill a precedent this is, and how dangerous a way of interpreting, to reſtrain, where the law doth ſo diſtinctly not reſtrain, to except ſome particulars, when the words are repeated over and over, in the moſt unlimited comprehenſive form of univerſality: Defile not your ſelves in any of theſe, for in all theſe the nations, &c. ver. 24. and, Ye ſhall not commit any of theſe, ver. 29. for all theſe abominations, &c. ver. 27. and, Whoſoever ſhall commit any of theſe abominations, ver. 29. and, not any of theſe abominable cuſtoms, ver. 30. And ſo again, c. 20. 23. the nations committed all theſe. 'Tis not poſſible words ſhould be more providently formed to exclude all exception or reſtraint, and to define every of the forenamed practices to be abominations firſt, and thoſe very abominations (all of them) for which the Canaanites were caſt out, and conſequently that they were prohibited by ſome former law, by which thoſe Canaanites were obliged, or elſe could not thus be ſpued out for committing them. As for the example of Jacob, which is conceived to favour that interpretation by marrying two ſiſters, that † Sect. 27, &c. hath been anſwered † already, and an account given of his doing it, which is reconcileable with that prohibition; and though he were a pious man, 'tis clear, Laban, who was the cauſe of his defiling Leah, when he had married Rachel, was not to be deemed ſuch. And for the example of Amram's marrying his aunt, and ſome of the Grecians, Iphidamas and Diomedes, doing the like, they, if granted, being ſo few, will be far from argumentative, when 'tis conſidered how many ſingle men of all times, and even whole Nations have been guilty of breaches of a higher nature, than thoſe againſt poſitive laws.

* De Jure Belli, l. II. c. 5. Sect. 14.

Every of theſe prohibited to, and puniſhed in the nations.

Sect. 39. But this being applied to the heathen teſtimonies, we ſhall have no need to make uſe of it for that of Amram, which alone we meet with in the Scripture. For if that place which is, by our Engliſh rendring, conceived to affirm it, Exod. 6. 20. [Amram took Jochebed his father's ſiſter to wife] be more carefully weighed, it will be found reaſonable to conclude with the Septuagint, that Amram married not his aunt, but coſin german. For 1. it is evident that the Hebrew דדתו, which we render his father's ſiſter, is by the Septuagint rendred [θυγατέρα τοῦ ἀδελφοῦ τοῦ πατρὸς αὐτοῦ, the daughter of his father's brother] and from thence it will be reaſonable to conclude, either that the Hebrew Text which they rendred, differed from that which we now uſe, or, which is more probable, that they, who knew the importance of their native language better than we, knew this which they gave to be the meaning of it. Agreeable to the Septuagint, the vulgar Latine reads patruelem ſuam, his uncle's daughter, and the Chaldee ſet out by Arias Montanus, differs onely in this, that for the uncle's or father's brother's daughter, that reads the aunt's, or father's ſiſter's daughter. By all which it appears, that דדה in this place ſignifies not a father's ſiſter, but an uncle's, or an aunt's daughter. And ſo upon farther examination it will be found agreeable to the uſe of דד the maſculine in other places, which ſignifies not an uncle onely, but an uncle's ſon alſo. So Jer. 32. 12. Hananeel, who was Jeremy's uncle's ſon, ver. 8, 9. is called by Jeremy דדי, my דד, that muſt needs be, not my uncle, but uncle's ſon, as both our Engliſh render it, and the Septuagint, ὑὸς ἀδελφοῦ πατρός μου, the ſon of the brother of my father. Thus in the Septuagints rendring of 1 Sam. 14. 50. דד Saul, is ὑὸς οἰκείου Σαοὺλ, perhaps it ſhould be ὑὸν τοῦ θείου Σαοὺλ (as alſo c. 10. 14.) the ſon of Saul's uncle, for the vulgar Latine reade from thence, patruelis Saul, Saul's uncle's ſon; Or if the right reading be οἰκείου, kinſman, that will make no conſiderable difference, becauſe the uncle is ſuch. And ſo by this way of interpreting the Hebrew דד, the whole matter is clear, that Jochebed was not aunt, but coſin german to Amram.

Sect. 40. As for the Texts which ſeem to reſiſt this, they are but two, and they will be eaſily ſalved. Firſt, Exod. 2. 1. There went a man of the houſe of Levi, (i. e. Amram) and took to wife a daughter of Levi, (i. e. Jochebed) where if Jochebed were a daughter of Levi, then ſhe was Kohath's ſiſter, and ſo aunt to Amram, Kohath's ſon. But the anſwer is eaſie, that a daughter of Levi here, may well ſignifie no more than one of the ſtock or progeny of Levi; it being an idiome of Scripture, very ordinary, that all lineal deſcendents be called ſons, and daughters, not onely in the immediate, or next degree, but in that which is more remote; as when Chriſt is called the ſon of David, the ſon of Abraham, Matt. 1. 1. (and agreeably in the collateral line, brother's ſons, and not onely the ſons of the ſame father, are called brothers, as when we reade of Chriſt's brethren, and James the Biſhop of Jeruſalem, is called the brother of the Lord, being his next kinſman) and accordingly the vulgar Latine here reads, Accepta uxore ſtirpis ſuæ, he took a wife of his own ſtock or kindred, and the Septuagint, ἔλαβεν ἐκ τῶν θυγατέρων Λευὶ, he took a wife of the daughters of Levi, which, by the uſe of the like phraſe, Luk. 1. 5. (where Elizabeth is ſaid to be ἐκ τῶν θυγατέρων Ἀαρὼν, of the daughters of Aaron) appears to be of a larger extent, than the immediate daughters of Levi.

Sect. 41. The ſecond Text is that of Numb. 26. 59. The name of Amram's wife was Jochebed a daughter of Levi, whom her mother bare to Levi in Ægypt, And ſhe bare unto Amram Aaron and Moſes and Miriam their ſiſter. But in this place 1. it is to be obſerved that the Hebrew reads not the words [her mother] which, in a different letter, the Engliſh Tranſlatours have put in, to make up the ſenſe. 2. This mother might be the wife of Gerſhom, or Merari, bearing this child to Levi the grandfather, and chief of the line, (as before in Exod. 2. 1.) it beit being ordinary for grandchildren to be acknowledged children of the grandfather, as well as of the father; as when Laban tells Jacob, Gen. 31. 43. theſe daughters are my daughters, and theſe children are my children. And ſo Gen. 46. the ſons of Levi, Gerſhom, &c. are ſaid to be born to Jacob, ver. 15. Nay 3. if the mother were named here, and that mother acknowledged to be Levi's wife, yet ſtill that would conclude nothing; becauſe as Gen. 46. 15. the ſons of Levi are ſaid to be born to Jacob their grandfather, and that by Leah their grandmother, ſo ſtill Jochebed may be Levi's grandchild, and not his daughter, though Levi's wife were granted to bear her to him. And ſo Gen. 46. 18. the ſixteen ſouls which Zilpah bare unto Jacob, are not all the immediate off-ſpring of Zilpah or Jacob, but their children and grandchildren, as appears, ver. 16, 17. So ver. 22. Rachel's children are all recited, ver. 21. i. e. grandchildren, as well as children, and ſo again, ver. 25. Bilhah's ſons which ſhe bare unto Jacob are her ſons and grandchildren, ver. 24. And if it be demanded, why Jochebed is not ſaid to bear her children, Aaron, &c. to Levi the great grandfather (as well as ſhe is ſaid to be born to Levi her grandfather) but to Amram their immediate father, the reaſon is obvious, becauſe Levi was alive at Jochebed's birth, but not at the birth of Aaron, Moſes and Miriam, who therefore are named to their father then living. But then 4. after all this, the Septuagints rendring is to be heeded, who finding no words to denote [her mother] but onely אשר ילדה אתו which begat her] they, it ſeems, reading not אתו, but אתם, with a very little change of the letter ה into ם, render it ἣ ἔτεκε τούτους τῷ Λευὶ ἐν Αἰγύπτῳ, who begat theſe to Levi in Ægypt, where 'tis evident that ſhe who is ſaid to bear theſe to Levi is Jochebed her ſelf (not Levi's wife) a daughter of Levi in the forementioned ſenſe, bearing her children firſt to Levi the head of the Tribe, then to Amram their immediate father. Beſides all this, if it be conſidered, it will be found evident by Chronology, that unleſs it were by a miracle (which we have no reaſon to flie to, when the Text is capable of a fair interpretation (Jochebed cannot be ſuppoſed to be Levi's daughter, nor conſequently Amram's aunt. For the ſpace of the continuance in Ægypt after Jacob's deſcent, being 215 years, ſaith Joſephus, and Levi being 43 years old at the leaſt, at the time of the deſcent, (as may be concluded from Joſeph's age, Gen. 41. 46. and the whole time of his life being 137 years, Exod. 6. 16. and ſo his death falling out 94 years after the deſcent;) And then conſidering that Aaron was 83 years old, and Moſes 80, Exod. 7. 7. at the coming out of Ægypt, to which it is conſequent that Aaron was born 132 years after the deſcent, i. e. 38 years after Levi's death, and ſo that if Jochebed were born of Levi in his laſt year of life, ſhe muſt be 38 years old at Aaron's, 41 at Moſes's birth: And that again being impoſſible in reſpect of Levi, to beget at that extreme old age, when long before, Abraham at 100 years old was counted dead to generation, Rom. 4. 19. and ſo likewiſe unimaginable, if it be remembred that Levi had begotten all his ſons before his coming into Egypt, i. e. before he was 43 years old, Gen. 46. 11. It cannot be ſuppoſed that Jochebed was Levi's daughter, without making her at the leaſt 75 years old, in all reaſon many more, before ſhe bare Aaron, which will not be imaginable neither, when long before that, Sarah's womb at 90 years old was dead to conception, Gen. 17. 17. Rom. 4. 19. All which being thus deduced, there is no pretence of reaſon to believe that Jochebed was Amram's aunt, as is ſuppoſed in the objection.

L. 2. c. 6.

Sect. 42. As for the few other examples among heathen people, there is nothing ſtrange in them: That it was not much more ordinary among all people, it would be very ſtrange if there had not been ſome acknowledged reſtraint laid upon it, and the very producing of ſo few, and theſe noted as ſingular examples, is a fairer probability on the other ſide, that ſuch marriages were accounted unlawfull, where the law of Moſes had not prohibited them, and ſo that to ſome former laws, that obliged all, this temper was imputable. And accordingly it is known, that Reuben, Jacob's eldeſt ſon, (long before the law given to the Jews) is diſinherited for the crime of going up to his father's bed, defiling his father's Concubine, Gen. 25. 22. and c. 49. 4. and 1 Chron. 5. 1.

Sect. 43. Which being granted, there will be no reaſon to doubt, but that all and every of thoſe marriages forementioned, particularly that of the brother's wife (which is the next degree to the father's wife) and this of the wife's ſiſter as near (and in the ſame line) as that, was forbidden alſo. To which purpoſe there is an eminent teſtimony of a learned Arabick Writer, Al Shareſtanius, ſet down by Mr. Pocock in his Notes on the Hiſtory of the Ancient Arabs. Turpiſſimum eorum quæ faciebant (Arabes tempore ignorantiæ) erat hoc, quòd vir duas ſorores, & patris ſui uxorem, velut ſucceſſor, aſſumeret, The fouleſt thing that the old Arabs did in time of ignorance, was this, that a man married two ſiſters, and took, as heir, or ſucceſſour, the wife of his deceaſed father. Of the latter of which, ſaith Al Moſtatraf Ebnol Arhir, that when a woman was left a widow, or divorced from the husband, the eldeſt ſon ſhould take her by inheritance, and caſt his garment over her as a ſign of it. This being formerly in uſe, was by the Alcoran forbidden, O vos qui creditis, non permiſſum eſt vobis fœminas hæreditatis jure accipere, They that receive Mahomed's laws muſt not take the fathers wives by way of inheritance. From which teſtimonies though it be concluded that ſome Nations did admit that, which Saint Paul ſaith was not ſo much as named among the Nations (as it is affirmed by Strabo of thoſe Arabians, that they uſed to take their own daughters, and ſo Clemens and Bardeſanes ſay of the Perſians alſo) yet Saint Paul might by the word Gentiles mean the civiler, or more regular of the unconverted Gentiles, or ſpeaking to the converted Corinthians, might mean the unconverted of that Province; and being true of thoſe, it is ſufficient to juſtifie Saint Paul's ſpeech, who to the reproach of Chriſtians, mentions this practice among them, and adds that the heathens were not without an abhorrence of it.

The Arabians practice herein.

Sect. 44. Meanwhile it is clear from thence, both that the practice, though admitted among the old ignorant Arabs, was looked upon by Mahomed himſelf as a foul nefarious thing, and alſo that taking to wife of two ſiſters was looked on as a crime of the ſame quality with marrying the father's wife, and that is all I intended to conclude from it.

Sect. 45. Which therefore being thus concluded, and ſuppoſed to be by God interdicted to the ſons of Adam and Noah, (and ſo to all the Nations of the world) and that not onely as a ceremony to hedge in another duty (as that of the member of a live creature, or fleſh with the bloud in it, or ex animali, of that which was ſtrangled, evidently was, to beget a dread of ſhedding man's bloud, Gen. 9. 4, 6.) but as a prohibition terminated in it ſelf, and this again not abrogated by Chriſt, but ſtricter laws of purity now enacted by him, than ever had been before, and morale in the full latitude abſolutely forbidden, as that which ſhould exclude him that were guilty of it out of the Kingdom of heaven; and the ſame again by Saint Paul more diſtinctly applied to this matter, under the ὅλως πορνεία, fornication in groſs (containing all the ſpecies of it, and ſo all theſe diſcloſings of nakedneſs, Lev. 18. of which number this is by analogy reſolved to be one) All this, I ſay, together, will make a very competent authority to deter any Chriſtian from the uſe of it, and that διὰ συνείδησιν, for conſcience of that duty and obedience, which every creature muſt pay to God, every Chriſtian to Chriſt, though the Scripture rather intimates (and relates to) this interdict, as a thing ſuppoſed, than defines how, or when, or to whom (beſide the Jews) it was ever given.

Sect. 46. The Authority of the Church.

Beyond all this it is farther manifeſt, That the Church of Chriſt (which will bear ſway with all humble and ſober Chriſtians, and to whoſe Canons none did ever obſtinately deny ſubmiſſion, without the brand and reward of Schiſm, that great ſin of carnality in the Apoſtle's account, moſt contrary to the unity of members, and to the meekneſs preſcribed by Chriſt,) hath through all ages from the Apoſtolical firſt and pureſt times, been moſt ſtrict in preſcribing abſtinence from ſuch liberties, particularly this, which we have now in hand: which appears partly by the Infamy which hath attended ſuch marriages, which ſuppoſes them to have been reputed unlawfull by ſome former law, partly by the plain words of Canons which have forbidden them.

The Apoſtolick Canon.

The Apoſtolick Canons forbid the taking of any man into the Clergy, making him Biſhop or Deacon, which ſhall have married two ſiſters (one after the death of the other) or the brother's daughter, ὁ δὺο ἀδελφὰς ἀγαγόμενος, ἢ ἀδελφιδῆ, ἢ ἀνεψιὰν ἔχων γαμετήν. And Zonaras ſtyles it there, ἀσεμνογαμίαν, an inceſtuous marriage. Where, if it be thought that this is no mark of the unlawfulneſs of the thing, but onely an interdict to the Clergy, that they ſhall not marry thus, leaving it free to others: This will be the ſame ſtrange way of arguing, as if from the qualifications of the Biſhop, ſet down by Saint Paul, that he ſhould be no drunkard, no covetous perſon, &c. i. e. that ſuch as are ſo, ſhould not be admitted to holy Orders, we ſhould conclude that theſe qualities might be lawfull and free for other men, who were not Eccleſiaſticks, or becauſe the Biſhop muſt be one that hath not married after ſuch [a] Divorces as are forbidden by Chriſt; and the widow is to be the wife but of one husband in like manner, it were therefore lawfull for all other Chriſtians to uſe ſuch Divorces and marry again, which we know was prohibited by Chriſt, or that other Chriſtian women might have more husbands, or leave one and marry another, which we know was never lawfull among any civil, though heathen people. The plain of it is, that the onely thing concluſible from the interdicts of the Church Canons, is the frequency of ſuch practices among unbelievers, which made it neceſſary to revive and refreſh the prohibition to Chriſtians: To whom, under Chriſt, ſuch marriages were reputed ſo foul, and the ſtate of ſuch ſins being permanent, did ſo much enhance them above the nature of Single acts of greater ſins, that, although for every commiſſion of any known Sin, a man were not made uncapable of any dignity in the Church, (or rendred irregular, if after the receiving Orders, he were found guilty) yet of theſe ſins he that were once guilty, ſhould for ever remain under a brand, and be counted uncapable of holy Orders, which he, that were otherwiſe worthy, would not, ſurely, have been, had it not been accounted unlawfull, before that Canon inflicted that puniſhment on the offender. And then it being acknowledged that Chriſt hath not deſcended to the ſpecifying of ſuch particulars; and that the Apoſtle that ſpeaketh of one ſuch ſin, ſaith it was not named among the Gentiles, the reſult will be, That this brand of the Apoſtolical Canon, is founded in the Univerſal Prohibition obliging all men, and ſo the Chriſtians of all Nations, as well as the Jews, and that not abrogated but confirmed, and by ſtricter precepts of Continence, and denunciations againſt the incontinent, continued on the Chriſtian by Chriſt.

[a] See Reſolution to the Third Quære, Sect. 34.

Sect. 47. The Eliberian.

What was thus puniſhed and marked by the Apoſtolical Canon was after in the Council of Eliberis univerſally interdicted to all under a ſevere penance, Can. 61. or rather a penance of ſuch a quality aſſigned it, which preſuppoſed the prohibition, and acknowledged unlawfulneſs of it: Si quis poſt obitum uxoris ſuæ ſororem ejus duxerit, &c. If any man after the death of his wife, ſhall marry his wife's ſiſter, and ſhe be a believer, he ſhall be excommunicate for the ſpace of five years. And the like is ſo frequent throughout the Canons, and ſo acknowledged to be ſo, that there is no need of multiplying any more teſtimonies. They who have diſputed this interdict, and againſt whoſe doubts this Diſcourſe was deſigned, being the men who expreſs their diſpleaſure againſt the tyranny of the Church Canons, which have, ſay they, obtruded theſe reſtraints upon men, who have otherwiſe a richer inheritance of liberty belonging to them.

Sect. 48. The Laws of the Realm.

To theſe I ſhall add but this one thing, that if the authority of the univerſal Church of Chriſt be ſo vile to them, yet the authority of the Civil Magiſtrate, and Municipal Laws being not ſo profeſſly under their prejudice, it is ſufficiently known that thus much of the Canon Law is received into, and confirmed by the Law of this Land, and the [b] marrying the wife's ſiſter expreſly prohibited. And this is not raſhly to be deſpiſed by any, though the Commiſſioners which were wont to have the cognizance and puniſhing of ſuch facts, be not ſo likely to call men to account for them, It being ſtill reaſonable that conſcience ſhould reſtrain, when fear of wrath is not ready to doe it; and that thoſe Laws, which are not preſently able to avenge themſelves, ſhould be eſteemed to have God (whoſe Title it is to defend the poor, and puniſh the wrong-doer) for their more ſolemn, and more formidable avenger.

The Third QUÆRE.

CHAP. I.

Concerning Polygamy and Divorces.

OF this ſubject I have [a] formerly ſpoken as far as ſeemed neceſſary for the informing of vulgar underſtandings: But to ſatisfie the Objections of ſome, which have appeared in publick, and out of a foreſight of poſſible, if not approaching, Evils; and becauſe there is more hope of obſtructing their entrance, than of removing them after admiſſion: It may be both charitable and ſeaſonable to take a larger view of this matter, and to vindicate it from the prejudices under which it hath faln, and to which the pride and luſts of men have ſubjected it in theſe licentious days.

[a] Pract. Cat. l. 2. Sect. 7.

Sect. 1. The Law of the Creation in this.

And firſt it will not be amiſs to imitate Chriſt's method, Matt. 19. who in anſwer to this ſame Quære propoſed by the Phariſees, recalleth and remitteth them from the diſpenſation which had been made, and the corrupt practices which had crept in among the Jews, to the firſt inſtitution of God in the creation, v. 4, 5. That inſtitution is expreſſed in theſe words in Geneſis, A man ſhall leave his father and mother, and cleave to his wife, and they two ſhall be one fleſh, Gen. 2. 24.

Sect. 2. Concluſions from Chriſt's interpretation of that.

And from Chriſt's interpretation of it, which is moſt certainly authentick, 1. That the [they] is [they twain] and 2. That thoſe that are thus united by this inſtitution of God, are not ſeparable by any act of man, Matt. 19. 6. And 3. that there was in God's inſtitution but one onely caſe reſerved, wherein, according to his Will, there ſhould be place for Divorces, [viz. that caſe of fornication in the wife, ſo contrary to the ends and vow of marriage] the reſult is immediate and evident, that by the law of his creation, a man was to marry but one wife, and being married, he was obliged (unleſs in that one caſe allowed of by God) ſo to cleave to her, as never to ſeparate or depart from her.

Sect. 3. Two parts of that Law.

Of this inſtitution thus ſet down, there are viſibly two branches, one for the interdicting of Polygamy, or having at once more wives than one, the other for prohibiting of Divorces in all but that one caſe.

Sect. 4. Firſt an interdict of Polygamy.

The words οἱ δύο εἰς σάρκα μίαν, [they two ſhall be one fleſh] which Plato appears to have learned as he did other things, out of Moſes, when in his dialogue περὶ ἔρωτος, he ſaith, that anciently male and female were put together into one body) are an evident interdict of Polygamy, being an affirmation that the husband and wife, being originally but one, though divided into two bodies, are now by God's inſtitution, inſtead of the firſt natural oneneſs, morally become one perſon, i. e. in reputation of divine law, and by virtue of their vow, have but one will in thoſe things, wherein that union is to conſiſt, i. e. in conjugal matters, and conſequently that the one hath not power or liberty to diſpoſe of himſelf, without the conſent of the other, the thing which Saint Paul affirms as that which is known in marriage, 1 Cor. 7. 4.

Sect. 5. Polygamy adulterous.

And ſo it appears by Chriſt's reaſoning, when from that union he concludes the perpetual unlawfulneſs of putting away, ver. 6. which could not be unlawfull from the beginning, if that no power over himſelf were not the meaning of that union, which was then inſtituted. So again when Chriſt not onely forbids Divorces (ſave in that one caſe) but alſo ſaith, that if they marry again, they are adulterous, this is an evidence that Polygamy is adulterous alſo.

Sect. 6. The adulterouſneſs of Divorces conſiſts in the ſecond marriage.

For though the putting away a wife (ſave onely in caſe of fornication) be an offence againſt the conjugal vow, and contrary to that union forementioned, the man having not power over his own body, without the conſent of the other part of him, his wife; yet without his marrying again, he doth not himſelf actually commit adultery (onely gives her temptation to commit adultery, Matt. 5. 32.) By which 'tis evident, that the marrying that ſecond wife, while the former lives, is that in which that man's adultery formally conſiſts, and conſequently that the having two wives together muſt neceſſarily be adultery alſo (according to that firſt inſtitution and law of God) when the former is not divorced.

Sect. 7. * Sect. 16. The interdict of Polygamy, Lev. 18. 18.

To which purpoſe it may be remembred what was incidentally ſhewn in the * former Diſcourſe, that though Polygamy was diſpenſed with, and ſo permitted the Jews in order to the multiplying that people, (in which reſpect many other things are obſervable in the Jewiſh writings, as peculiar to them: as when the Talmudiſts reſolve, That every Jew was bound to marry, that he was a murtherer that did not, Gemara Babyl. Tit. Jabimoth, c. 6. And ſo Joſephus, that the characteriſtick propriety of the Jews, wherein they differed from other people, was παιδοποιΐα, getting of Children) yet under the ſtyle of taking one wife to another, it was formally prohibited them, Lev. 18. 18. in the cloſe of the interdicted marriages (all which by the Poſitive Law of God, had been, from the beginning, forbidden, and are all comprehended under the title of diſcloſing of nakedneſs, the fourth of thoſe precepts to the ſons of Adam) Thou ſhalt not take one wife to another to vex her, (to provoke her jealouſie, to deprive her of any part of that which was due to her) in her life time. And it will anon appear, that the moſt unlawfull divorce (that which was founded no otherwiſe than in ſome diſlike of the firſt wife, or of ſtronger inclinations to ſome other) is by God himſelf preferred before this taking in another to vex her, Mal. 2.

A recital of the Law of the Creation.

Sect. 8. The opinion of ſome Jews of Polygamy.

And accordingly it is the determination of ſome Jews, I ſay not how truly, that the Moſaical permiſſion of Divorces, is the onely account, upon which Polygamy can become reconcileable even with Moſes's Law. So Rabbi Ami in Gemar. Babyl. Tit. Jabimoth, c. 6. Every one that marries a wife to a wife, muſt put away the firſt, and endow her.

Sect. 9. Concubinacy with consent of the wife.

Both unlawfull till dispensed with.

And though in the case of Hagar, and the handmaids of Jacob's wives, the consent of the wives, and their giving them to their husbands, that they might bear children in their stead, (Gen. 16. 2. and 30. 9.) do make a visible difference from all other Concubinacies or second marriages, wherein the former wife doth not consent, yet had this most moderate sort of Polygamy, or rather Concubinacy, (which is but a species of Polygamy, differing from it onely in some formalities, and in respect of the manner of endowing the woman, and the law of the children not succeeding to the inheritance with the children of the wife, to which the Apostle refers, Gal. 4. 30.) been absolutely unlawfull, as contrary to the institution of marriage in the first creation, had not God, for the increasing of Abraham's seed, been pleased to dispence with it.

Sect. 10. This dispensation we find not in the Law, when it was given, but see it supposed in the case of the maid-servant, Exod. 21. 10. If he take him another wife, &c. and Deut. 21. 15. If a man have two wives, one beloved and the other hated, (both certainly at the same time) and assigning a portion in the inheritance to the son of the superinduced, supposeth him to be a legitimate issue. And the example of David, a man after God's own heart, so great a Prophet, and type of Christ, and yet so great a Polygamist, and that mentioned as the gift of God, and a blessing upon him, 2 Sam. 12. 8. are farther evidences of it. Yet this, I suppose, given to that people, not infinitely, but with some temper, if the Polygamist treated the first, as he ought, and rendred her the duty of Marriage. So in that of Exod, 21. 10. in case of the servant taken to wife, which failed of some privileges, which the free-woman had, yet If he take him another wife, her food and her raiment, and her duty of marriage shall he not diminish. The last of which the Septuagint renders ὁμιλίαν, and St. Paul seems to Paraphrase by ὀφειλομένην τιμὴν. And if this were not done, if the first wife were hated in comparison of the second, i. e. partially and injuriously dealt with, then was the sin mentioned, Mal. 2.14. and there charged on the Jews by the Prophet, the dealing treacherously with the wife of his youth, when God had been a witness between them, and she was the wife of his Covenant. And if any did then so multiply wives, not for propagation, but for lust, or to satisfie a wandring appetite, (a symptome of which it was, if the superinduced were more kindly treated, to the grieving of the first) without question that was then treachery, and falseness, and adultery in that Jew, and is so called from God, Mal. 2.16. and pronounced by him utterly unlawfull.

Sect. 11. Prohibitions of Polygamy among Jews and Gentiles.

Accordingly, As among the Jews themselves, which took their liberty in the greatest latitude, it was not allowed the high priest to have more than one (He must not have two together, saith Maimonides Halach Isuribia, c. 17. and Gemara Babyl. collects it from Lev. 21.13. for it is there written, say they, אשה אחת ולא שתים one wife, and not two) so from the reliques of that law of the first creation, this was among the heathens so far resented as unlawfull, that though the Persians and Indians, by barbarous customs having worn out the remains of the law, are confessed to have practised it, yet the civiller of the nations did religiously abstain from it. The Germans saith Tacitus, in his time contented themselves with one wife apiece. Among the Athenians, Cecrops revived the practice, ἑνὶ ἑζεύξεν, and joyned or yoked, one woman to one man, saith Athenæus. And of the Romans 'tis known, they never used that liberty of taking more. And even among the Ægyptians, their Priests (which were most knowing, and most observant of duty) solemnly abstained from it, saith A. Gellius, l. 15. *c.*22.

Sect. 12. All forbidden under Christ.

And ever since Christ's coming to reform the world (and that in no one thing more than in restraining unbridled lusts in the fountain, Mat. 5. 8, 28, 29, 30, 32.) 'tis evident by his words opposed to the Mosaical indulgence, and by the strictness that is by him superadded to the Jewish doctrines concerning Divorces, that it is in universum prohibited to all Christians, and being pronounced adultery, either simply, Mar. 10. 11. and Luk. 16. 18. or in case of any but one kind of Divorce, Mat. 19.19. (when yet the former wife, by being sent out of the house, is more moderately ill treated, and so comparatively a gainer by it, being freed from the vexation of the ἀντίζηλον or rival) it must needs be acknowledged so, when that is not the case.

In this I foresee not any farther considerable difficulty, and therefore I proceed to the second branch, that concerning Divorces.

CHAP. II.

Of Divorces.

Sect. 1. The first institution.

IN this matter of Divorces also, if Christ may be believed, the interdict was positive and clear in the first Institution (at the creation of man and woman) that the man should so cleave to his wife, as to be inseparable from her, and that without any reserve or exception, save in that onely case of falseness to the marriage-bed, or fornication.

Sect. 2. The case of Fornication in the wife, reserved in the first Institution.

This, though it were not named by Moses in that place, where the strict union is expressed, Gen. 2. 24. was yet, it seems, folded up in that first law (for to that onely Christ in his reformation of this part of the Jewish Oeconomy refers the matter) in like manner, I suppose, as liberty to works of mercy and necessity, and the service of the Temple, was reserved in the law of the Jewish Sabbath, so that there needed no intervention of new law or dispensation to make it lawfull to divorce and separate in that one case, any more than to heal, or draw the ox out of the ditch on the Sabbath day, but in the very Institution it self it was always lawfull.

Thus certainly it stood by the law of the creation: and for any other liberty, ἀπ' ἀρχῆς οὐ γέγονεν οὕτω, from the beginning it was not instituted so. So saith St. Jerome, l. 1. adverſ. Jovinian. Ab exordio conditionis humanæ nec carnibus vescebamur, nec dabamus repudium, From the beginning of man's creation we did neither eat flesh nor use Divorces.

But

But then, as of Positive Laws, it was formerly cleared, that they may, when God pleases, be dispensed with, to those with whom he pleases, so it must be acknowledged, That among the Jews, such dispensation was given, to divorce in other cases, beside that singular reserved one of Fornication. And though from the words of Christ it must be concluded, that the reason of that dispensation, was not the same with other of Polygamy, nor so justifiable and clear from blame, (the hardness of their hearts, to which it is affixt, fastening an ill character upon it, as that which in a manner extorted from God the mitigation of the severity of the Law, in respect of the punishment, rather than perswaded the taking off the obligation of it) yet this is but an account of the different reasons of God's actions, no way concluding against his liberty of permitting that to some, by dispensing with a Positive Law, which otherwise had always stood more universally prohibited.

Sect. 4. The Jews dispensation herein. The occasion of it.

This dispensation to the Jews is set down first Deut. 24. 1. and referred to Mal. 2. 16. In Deuteronomy the words are, When a man hath taken a wife and married her, and it come to pass that she find no favour in his eyes, because he hath found ערוה דבר, which we render some uncleanness, or matter of nakedness in her; then let him write her a bill of divorcement, and give it in her hand, and send her out of his house, and when she is departed, she may go and be another man's wife, ver. 2. And if the latter husband hate her, and write her a bill of divorcement, or if he die, the former husband may not take her again to be his wife, ver. 3. 4.

Sect. 5. Deut. 24. 1.

In this place, wherein the Jewish Charter of beloved liberty is contained, great contention there hath always been among their Doctours, how largely it might be extended, some interpreting it (by the former clause [her not finding favour in his eyes] and mention of hating, ver. 3.) to such a width, that whosoever disliked his wife, might thus speedily quit himself of her, and that κατὰ πᾶσαν αἰτίαν, whatsoever the cause of dislike were. Others have been content that this immense latitude should be limited by the latter clause to matters of turpitude or nakedness, whatsoever that signifie, it being by all resolved, that it signifies not the sin of adultery onely.

Sect. 6. The Jews interpretation of it.

To state and decide this Controversie betwixt the two pretensions of their Doctours, will not be worth our pains and stay, neither of those liberties being originally their due, much less the Christians portion. Yet of the Text it self two things may briefly be observed, 1. That the immediate ground of the man's divorcing the wife, is specified to be her finding no favour in his eyes, ver. 1. his hating her, ver. 2. i. e. disliking her either absolutely, or comparatively with some other, whom he preferred before her, and that the ערוה דבר matter of uncleanness or nakedness, is but the motive or occasion of that dislike or disfavour. 2. That when he thus thought fit to gratifie his lust or fancy with variety, the obligations lay on him, 1. To write a bill of divorce, and give it her in her hand, as an act of manumission, and sealing her liberty to her: and 2. to send her out of his house, which, I suppose, signifies the furnishing her for her journey, endowing her, making provision for her, for so προπέμπειν, to send out, signifies in the New Testament, to provide a viaticum, 1 Cor. 16. 6, 11. Act. 15. 3. Tit. 3. 13. where 'tis explained by ἵνα μηδὲν αὐτοῖς λείπῃ, that they have no want of any thing: and accordingly in Rabbi Ami before cited, the endowing the wife, is annexed to the putting her away.

Sect. 7. The ground of the Jewish divorces. The occasion of that ground. The Restrictions in the dispensation. Προπέμπειν.

Both which are in favour of the wife, privileges that accrue to her, to make the injury supportable. And the effect of them is, That she may go and be another man's wife, ver. 2. be married to some other that will like her, and treat her better; and by way of mulct to the husband, that if he shall after be willing to rescind his unkind divorce, and receive her back again after the decease (or divorce again) of the second husband, he is not permitted to do it. To which it is added in Shulcan Aruch, c. 10. Sect. 1. that if she that is thus divorced be afterwards defiled, the husband is then bound to take her again, which, if it be true, will render it no very valuable liberty, or advantage to the husband, that he might thus put her away.

Sect. 8. The advantages to the wife in divorce.

This makes it less necessary, to inquire what the ערוה דבר there signifies, which is rendred as the cause of his dislike: for if, the dislike being supposed, the Law of Divorce were designed more for the wives, than the husbands advantage, to free her from the pain and vexation of his unkindness, and the greater danger of another's being taken in, and preferred before her; It matters little what the husband's cause of dislike was, it being very far, whatever it were, from being justified, or made blameless by this Law.

Sect. 9. The unjustifiableness of the husband.

From the place therefore in Deuteronomy, I proceed to that other in Malachi, which is fully agreeable to what hath been concluded from hence, though it be somewhat darkned in the prophetical style, especially by our vulgar misrendring of it, which having not formerly been adverted by me, may have betrayed the Reader of the Practical Catechism (p. 62.) to some mistake, for which, being obliged to make him satisfaction, this literal interpretation, and brief Paraphrase of a few verses, will help to do it.

Sect. 10. The place for divorces. Mal. 2. A paraphrase of it.

This people are frequently guilty of breach of their vows of wedlock, taking in to their lawfull Jewish wives, heathen women that are unlawfull, and preferring these latter, to the great injury and vexation of the former, not considering the obligation of kindness, as to those which have long been married to them, nor of justice, as to those to whom, by their vow of marriage, they are strictly bound never to take in any others, to the wronging and vexing of them; nor of piety, as to those, who by being of the same Religion with them, are much fitter for their friendship and company, and to whom withall they are joyned by a most sacred tie, to which God was called as a witness. By all which it appears what a false, what an impious dealing this is.

Ver. 14. The Lord hath been witness between thee and the wife of thy youth, [a] against whom thou hast dealt treacherously; yet she is thy companion, and the wife of thy Covenant.

Sect. 11. [a] Or whom thou hast forsaken בגדת, or despised.

In this matter it would doe well, that you, that boast your selves to be the Children of Abraham, and expect great privileges from thence, would think fit to imitate that first Father of yours, the Rock whence ye are hewn, Isa. 51. 1. 2.

Ver. 15. Did that one (or the first) doe so? of whose spirit we are the residue: And what did that one? (or, First?) he was seeking a seed of God (or, a godly:) therefore restrain your spirit and do not despise the wife of your youth.

Sect. 12.

(called therefore One אחיר, as One, (for want of degrees of comparison in Hebrew) is equivalent with First, as μία Σαββάτων, Matth. 28. 1. the one, i. e. the first of the week; and as the first denotes the Father, or firſt of that Nation) whoſe actions are to be copied out by you, that ye may be the children of his piety, as well as of his body. Now of Abraham it is eminently known, That although his wife Sarah were barren, and ſo able to bring him no child, yet he would by no means take in to her any Idolatrous heathen wife; he intended and deſigned this one thing, the having children that ſhould worſhip God, and ſo would not be tempted by her barrenneſs to take in an heathen wife, which might betray them to the contrary: whereas you, without that temptation, take in heathen wives to the Jewiſh, which you have long enjoyed, yea and prefer thoſe mothers which will bring up your children to heatheniſm. Let this example of his reſtrain your wrath or diſpleaſure (called רוח ſpirit, Job. 15. 13. where turning the ſpirit againſt God, is, being angry with him; and Zech. 6. 8. where quieting God's Spirit, is appeaſing his wrath) and do not you uſe your wives thus unkindly, which have lived ſo long, and ſo friendly with you.

or

Sect. 13. כי שנא שלח If thou hateſt, put away, which Jarchi interprets אם שנא אחד מכם אשתו ישלחנה If any of you hate a wife, let him put her away. So Gemara Babyl. ad tit. Gittin, c. 9. Rabbi Jehuda ſaid, אם שנחה שלח If thou hateſt her, put her away.

Ver. 16. For the Lord God of Iſrael ſaith, [b] If thou hateſt her, put her away, for one covereth violence with his garment, ſaith the Lord of Hoſts; therefore reſtrain your ſpirit, that you deal not treacherouſly.

For by the law of God, Deut. 24. 1. thou art obliged, in caſe of ſuch diſlike and hating of thy wife, rather than thus to vex and grieve her, by taking in and preferring another, to the deſpiſing and rejecting her, to diſmiſs her by bill of divorce, that ſo ſhe may marry ſome other that will be more kind to her, at leaſt be removed from that vexation. And thy keeping her thus in thy houſe to ſee her ſelf wronged and hated, is but a ſad diſguiſe or ſalve for the injuſtice toward her, that which will yield her no more relief, than the hiding one, whilſt I do him injury, caſting a garment over him (by which marriage is wont to be deſcribed) whilſt I uſe him moſt contumelioufly. Wherefore, I ſay again, reſtrain your wrath and diſpleaſure againſt your wives, and be not thus perjurouſly falſe to them any longer.

Sect. 14. Divorces, κατὰ πᾶσαν αἰτίαν.

Thus in both theſe places thus explained, but eſpecially in the latter, where there is no mention of turpitude, or any other accuſation laid againſt her, the divorcing of the hated wife merely on the husband's diſlikes, and averſations, without any real, or even pretended Crime, appears to have been permitted among the Jews; which ſort of diſlikes of his being multiplied according to his will, it follows, that it was, as the Phariſees ſay, Matth. 12. 3. κατὰ πᾶσαν αἰτίαν, upon every cauſe, κατ' ἀιτίας δυπτοῦν αἰτίας, for any kind of accuſations, ſaith Joſephus, Ant. l. 4. c. 8. κατ' ἣν ἂν τύχῃ πρόφασιν, upon any occaſion, ſaith Philo de ſpecial. leg. ad præc. 7. and as Joſephus in his own life ſaith of himſelf, μὴ ἀρεσκόμενον τοῖς ἤθεσι, upon diſlike to her manners, certainly upon many others beſide that one of fornication.

Sect. 15. The Remiſſion of them but comparative. And in pity to the wife.

Onely the occaſion of this permiſſion muſt be taken notice of, which is both by Moſes and Malachi ſo aſſigned, as to render it rather a comparative, than an abſolute permiſſion, rather to put away the hated wife, than by taking in another, to be falſe and vexatious to her; and ſo, when it was permitted, as an act of mercy and pity to the wife, (and accordingly the bill of Divorce is in Syriack ſtiled כתבא דרוללא The bill of Propriety, Matth. 5. 31. whereby ſhe is ſet at liberty from that unhappy yoke, and λάθοι γὰρ ἄτοκος ἐξουσίαν σωσαμένη ἑτέρῳ, ſaith Joſephus, By this means ſhe hath power to marry another, Ant. l. 4. c. 8.) rather than of indulgence to the husband.

Sect. 16. And for hardneſs of their hearts.

And that notion of that permiſſion Chriſt may ſeem to have had, when he ſaith, that for the hardneſs of their hearts Moſes ſuffered them to put away their wives, Matth 19. 8. For although thoſe words may poſſibly ſignifie no more than a general mark of the obſtinacy of this prevailing humour, that (among them, when that permiſſion was given) was not to be ſuppreſſed by laws, as a Chronical diſeaſe reſiſts Phyſick, and as Tacitus ſaith of adulta vitia, grown vices, that it is better to paſs them over in ſilence, than by unſeaſonable prohibitions to let men know, quibus flagitiis impares ſumus, that ſome vices are too hard for us; Yet the force of the words may very well be extended to this alſo, that they were ſuch a ſtiff-necked people, and particularly ſo implacable to their loathed wives, that unleſs they had liberty to remove them and make new choices, they would doe that which would be much more ingratefull to thoſe wives; and that therefore not onely thoſe practices were tenderly handled, and puniſhments ſuſpended, but a permiſſion explicitely allowed them for the avoiding of ſomewhat worſe.

Sect. 17. And contrary to the firſt inſtitution.

But this, all this while, if we will believe our Saviour, diametrally contrary to that which had been from the beginning, Matth. 19. 8. i. e. (as, I conceive, the context inforceth) to the firſt Inſtitution of God or the law of the Creation.

Sect. 18. [c] De Jure Belli, l. II. c. 5. ſect. 9.

For although the learned [c] Hugo Grotius be inclinable to interpret it onely of the quid Optimum, Deóque Gratiſſimum, &c. that which was beſt, and moſt acceptable to God, yet ſure our Saviour's words are clear, ver. 5. from Gen. 2. 24. that A man ſhall, i. e. (is obliged to leave father and mother, and to cleave to his wife, and they two ſhall be one fleſh, and that this was a conjunction of God's making, ver. 6. All which being in form of Precept [A man ſhall] and [they two ſhall] and that founded in the taking the firſt woman out of the man's ſide (which was a ſignal embleme of the deſigned unity) and the words in Gen. 2. 24. [Therefore ſhall a man cleave to his wife] being not part of Adam's ſpeech precedent, but either a concluſion, and deduction made by the writer of the Book, and ſo referring to ſome known law to that purpoſe; or, as by Chriſt's citation of it, Matth. 19. 5. it is evident, the Command of God himſelf, a law then enacted by him, He that made them, verſe 4. ſaid, For this cauſe ſhall a man leave father, &c. And indeed the law of diſcloſing of Nakedneſſes, or of Fornication, Acts 15. (i. e. the prohibition of all Conjunctions, but that of the one husband and one wife) being one of the Precepts vulgarly known among them by that title of the precepts of the ſons of Adam, to which Moſes there, and Chriſt here might moſt properly refer, I cannot diſcern any reaſon or place of doubting, but that this great conjugal Law, was the Law (though not of nature, yet) of the firſt Creation, wherein all mankind was concerned, and ſo that by it all thoſe Divorces were prohibited.

All Divorces but one unlawfull by the firſt inſtitution.

Sect. 19. The Jews confeſſion.

To which I may add, That it is one of the ſentences of Ben Syra a Jew, גרמא דנפיל בחולחד גרדיה Gnaw the bone which hath faln to thy lot; which the Comment ſet out by Paulus Fagius applies peculiarly to this matter, and concludes that he doeth ill, if he put her away, though ſhe be ill, i. e. that every fault of the

wife doth not ſubject her to this ſeverity or exciſion: Which, though it be no evidence of the practice of the Jews, which 'tis known was contrary; yet it is an argument, that the ſober and wiſe men, even among them, to whom this diſpenſation was given, had no honourable opinion of it.

Sect. 20. Christ's dealing in this matter.

The caſe ſtanding thus among the Jews, and ſome diſpenſation of the Primogenial law being allowed them, or rather, by the temper of the people, and the obſtinacy of the diſeaſe, and for the relief of the oppreſſed hated wife, extorted from the Law-giver, Chriſt comes from heaven to the review and reformation of this, among other laws, and in direct oppoſition to what had been ſaid among the Jews in this matter, Matt. 5. 31. i. e. to the liberty allowed them, he pronounceth for the future to them and all other Chriſtians, that whoſoever makes uſe of that indulgence, puts away his wife, ſave for (that one crime of) fornication, he cauſeth her to commit adultery, i e. gives her the ſtrongeſt temptation imaginable, betrays her to the utmoſt hazard of doing it, and, as Saint Luke adds in his reciting of that paſſage, Luke 16.18. If he marrieth another (as in all probability he deſigns to do, when he thus puts away the firſt upon ſuch diſlikes) he committeth adultery; and whoſo marrieth her that is divorced, committeth adultery. A threefold complicated adultery the effect of ſuch an unlawfull Divorce, and ſecond marriage attending it.

A threefold adultery in it.

Sect. 21. The onely queſtion, whether after Divorce for fornication it be lawfull to marry again.

And ſo again Matth. 19. 9. and Mark 10. 6. the ſame words are, on another occaſion, again repeated. Two places of ſuch clearneſs and perſpicuity (one cauſe of divorce allowed the Chriſtians, that great breach of the conjugal Vow, and whoſoever divorces and marries again, ſave in that one caſe punctually named, committeth adultery) that as no Paraphraſe can make them more intelligible: ſo there is but one queſtion that can reaſonably be ſtarted in them, viz. Whether he that puts away his wife on this one authentick cauſe, be ſo perfectly freed from the conjugal Vow and bands, that he may lawfully, by the ſame laws both of God to the ſons of Adam, and of Chriſt to his followers, marry ſome other woman, and ſome other man marry that divorced adulterous Wife.

Sect. 22. The occaſion of this queſtion.

The occaſion of this doubt is the variety of the words, wherein the ſpeech of Chriſt's is expreſſed in the Goſpels. For as Mat. 19. 9. the words are, that Whoſoever ſhall put away his wife, ſave for fornication, and ſhall marry another, committeth adultery; and he that ſhall marry her that is put away, committeth adultery: which are favourable to the affirmative, That it is lawfull for him in that one excepted caſe, to marry again: ſo Mark 10. 11. and Luke 16. 18. the exception is left out, and the words are the ſame in both, abſolutely delivered, Whoſoever putteth away his wife, and marrieth another, committeth adultery.

Sect. 23.

That theſe places, that in Matthew, on one ſide, and in the other two Evangeliſts, at leaſt in Saint Mark, on the other ſide, are a report of the ſame paſſage of ſtory, and of the ſame part of Chriſt's ſpeech, appealing from the Moſaical permiſſion, to the firſt inſtitution of marriage, there is no ground of making any Queſtion. And therefore it follows, that one muſt be interpreted by the other, either Saint Matthew by the other two, or the other two by Saint Matthew.

Sect. 24. Mark and Luke expounded by Matthew.

That Matthew ſhould be interpreted by the other, the more explicite and large by the ſhorter and leſs explicite, ſeems not reaſonable. And beſides, it were not eaſily imaginable, what ſhould become of thoſe words in Matthew, both there and Matth. 5. [except for fornication] if the full ſenſe were expreſſed by Mark and Luke, without them: for though it be eaſie to conceive ſuch words to be meant, when they are not expreſſed, yet it is not eaſie to conceive them not to be meant, when they are expreſſed.

Sect. 25.

Whereas on the other ſide, that Mark ſhould be interpreted by Saint Matthew, this reaſonable account may be given from the Context, 1. Becauſe it being apparent by Saint Matthew, both c. 5. and c. 19. that Chriſt did allow divorces in caſe of the wife's committing fornication, St. Mark, in this whole paſſage not mentioning any ſuch thing, muſt yet neceſſarily be preſumed and interpreted to imply it: and then thoſe words [ſave for fornication] muſt be underſtood, or ſuppoſed as ſpoken and meant, though not expreſſed, verſ. 11. and if ſo, it will then be all one with Saint Matthew's reciting of it.

Sect. 26.

And the purpoſed brevity of Saint Mark (whoſe Goſpel was written after Matthew's) will be a ſecond reaſon to incline us to believe this; and accordingly 'tis manifeſt, that when the Phariſee's form of queſtion was, Whether it were lawfull to put away the wife κατὰ πᾶσαν αἰτίαν for every cauſe? Saint Mark (and Saint Luke alſo) leaves out that clauſe, and propoſes the queſtion thus, Is it lawfull for a man to put away his wife? Where, as it is certain that the Phariſee ſpeaking according to the then preſent doctrine of the Jews, and asking whether the Jewiſh divorces were not lawfull, muſt conſequently ask whether divorces for every cauſe, or many other beſides fornication, were not lawfull, though Mark, for brevity ſake, rather intimate that (by ſaying that it was the Phariſees that asked, and asked tempting, ver. 2.) than expreſs it: ſo in Chriſt's anſwer given more privately to the ſame matter, ver. 10. the ſame muſt be implyed again, viz. that whoſoever ſhall put away his Wife for every cauſe, i. e. for any other cauſe beſide fornication, and marry another, committeth adultery, and ſo in like manner he that marrieth her, i. e. her that is put away for any other ſuch cauſe, (which is not, according to the firſt Inſtitution, a juſt reaſon of diſſolving the bond) committeth adultery alſo.

Sect. 27.

That this is the meaning of Chriſt's words, may 3. be farther proved by the nature of Divorce, which among the Jews was the reſcinding of the Conjugal Bands, and by one ſuppoſition common to Jews, and Romans, viz. that they which were duly divorced, might marry again: ſo of the Jewiſh divorced Wife, Deut. 24.2. 'tis expreſly ſaid, ſhe may marry another; and of the man, it is known that this was his onely end of putting away his Wife in that place, that he might marry another, whom he liked better: and accordingly this is the form of Divorce in Miſna, tit. Gittin, Behold thou art מותרת לכל אדם free, or, at liberty for any man, and this is the Bill of Divorce between me and thee, ſo that it is free for thee to marry לכל גבר to any man thou wilt. And ſo every where in their writings on this ſubject. And among the Romans there is no queſtion of it. And this being thus known of the Jews, and preſumed by Chriſt, yet all that he chargeth with Adultery in the Jewiſh Ceremony, is their putting away for cauſes not allowed in the inſtitution of marriage. And in oppoſition to that onely, he propoſeth his reformation, defining what is the due αἰτία or cauſe of Divorce, upon which a man may (as upon any other he may not) freely divorce, ſtill ſeeming to preſume, that he that divorceth, may alſo without Adultery marry again.

Sect. 28.

If this be the meaning of the words in the Evangeliſts, as theſe circumſtances make it probable to be, then the queſtion is anſwered, that in ſuch a divorce, allowed both in the firſt inſtitution, and by Chriſt himſelf, there there lies no interdict, or hindrance againſt that man's marrying again, though in all other caſes there doth.

Sect. 29. Arguments on the other ſide.

And yet on the otherſide it may be argued, that although, in the Moſaical Law, Divorce was the reſcinding the Conjugal bands, to which it was conſequent, as long as the Jewiſh policy laſted, that they that were duly divorced (as in the one caſe of fornication it is acknowledged) might freely marry again: yet in the acceptation of our Chriſtian Courts, Divorce appears not to be any more, than the ſolemn, judicial ſeparation from conjugal ſociety, as that is rather the freeing the Husband and Wife from the obligation to mutual conjugal duties, than the utter reſcinding and diſſolving the bands. For if it were ſo, then that Husband and Wife could never come together again without a new wedlock, which yet hath not been heard of in the Church: As for Adultery it ſelf, the meritorious, and ſo efficieut cauſe of divorces, that yet it is (though a breach of the conjugal vow) no actual diſſolution or voiding of the conjugal bands, among us Chriſtians, may ſeem probable by theſe two Evidences, 1. Becauſe Adultery committed by the husband, diſſolves not marriage, which yet it equally ſhould, if that fault committed, and not the ſentence of Divorce, reſcinded the conjugal band. For though the ſuperiority of the husband over the wife, makes ſome difference, in reſpect of which it is acknowledged, That ſhe cannot put away her husband; yet would that be of no force in this matter, ſuppoſing that Adultery were a diſſolution of the bands, for then ſhe ceaſing to be bound, as a Wife, would alſo ceaſe to be inferiour or ſubject to him. And in this a difference is obſervable between the Jews and us; for in caſe of Fornication, the Jew expected no ſentence of the Conſiſtory, but the man might put her away, give her from himſelf a Bill of Divorce, which hath never been allowed among Chriſtians. 2. Becauſe if this were ſo, if Adultery in the Wife diſſolved the bands, then the Husband, that after the Wife's adultery continued to live with her conjugally, muſt be concluded to commit fornication with her, the validity of thoſe bands being it (and nothing elſe) which makes conjugal ſociety lawfull, and honourable, and acceptable in the ſight of God.

Sect. 30. The opinion of the Church.

And agreeable to this arguing, it may be conſidered, what hath been defined in the Church of former ages, Εἴ τις λαϊκὸς γυναῖκα ἐκβάλλοι, ἑτέραν λαβεῖν, ἢ αὐτὸν ἄλλης ἀπολελυμένης, &c. Can. Apoſt. 48. If any Laick put away his Wife, and marry another, or marry a woman which hath been put away by another, let him be excommunicate. So in the Council of Arles, An. Ch. 314. De his qui conjuges ſuas in adulterio deprehendunt, & iidem ſunt adoleſcentes fideles, & prohibentur nubere, placuit ut in quantum poſſit, conſilium iis detur nè viventibus uxoribus ſuis, licèt adulteris, alias accipiant, Can. 10. They that deprehend their Wives in adultery, and are believers, and young men, and are forbid to marry, 'tis decreed that counſel be given them, that as far as may be they marry not others, whilſt their Wives, though they be adultereſſes, live: Where both counſel is given them not to marry, and a reference made to ſome former Canons, where ſuch marriage was forbidden. So in the Milevitan Council, where Saint Auguſtine was preſent, An. Ch. 402. It is decreed, ut ſecundum Evangelicam & Apoſtolicam doctrinam neque dimiſſus ab uxore, neque dimiſſa à marito, alteri conjungantur, ſed ita maneant, aut ſibimet reconcilientur, That according to the Evangelical and Apoſtolical Doctrine, neither the man that is diſmiſt from his Wife, nor the woman that is diſmiſt from her Husband marry any body elſe, but either remain unmarried, or be reconciled to one another. So in the Codex Can. Eccl, African. can. 102. Περὶ τῶν τοὺς ἄνδρας ἢ τὰς γυναῖκας ἀπολυόντων, ἵνα ἄπρας μείνωσιν. That they that are divorced from Husbands or Wives, ſhould remain unmarried. What hath thus been defined by theſe Canons, is evidently received into the Eccleſiaſtical Conſtitutions of this Church, which therefore decrees, that when Divorces are pronounced, monitio & prohibitio fiat, ut à partibus ab invicem ſegregatis caſtè vivatur, nec ad alias nuptias alterutrâ vivente convoletur: Admonition and prohibition be given, That they that are thus parted live chaſtly, that neither marry whilſt the other lives, Conſtit. Eccl. An. Dom. 1597.

Sect. 31 The Reſolution.

In this difficulty thus argued on both ſides, the Reſolution, I ſuppoſe, will be made by theſe propoſitions, 1. That by the force of Chriſt's words in all the Evangeliſts, he that marries again after any kind of Divorce, but that one for fornication, doth commit an unchriſtian ſin; and that at leaſt of a double Adultery, one in taking a new Wife, whilſt the former liveth (which is formally adulterous) the other in deſerting (and denying the duty of marriage to) the rejected wife of his youth, which may be cauſally adultery in her, and in the mean while is an injuſtice join'd with wandring luſt. Secondly, That by the force of the arguments firſt produced for the interpreting Mark and Luke, by Matt. 19. 5. it may be probably concluded, That in that one caſe of divorce for fornication, the marriage of the innocent party ſhall not be adulterous. Thirdly, That although this be granted, yet the words of Mark and Luke, and eſpecially the words of St. Paul, 1 Cor. 7. 39. do give ſuch prejudices againſt marriages after divorce indefinitely, that the ancient Canons of the Church of God, and the conſtitutions of our Engliſh Reformation, have thought fit not to permit ſuch liberty in any kind.

Sect. 32.

And this may appear, if we now review, and conſider the temper obſerved in the recited Canons: Firſt, it is with an [in quantum poſſint, conſilium iis detur, as far as they can, let them be counſelled] And monitio & prohibitio fiat, admonition and prohibition joyned together.] And our Conſtitution adds, Denique quò illud firmiùs obſervetur, ſententia ſeparationis non antea pronunciabitur, quàm qui eam poſtulaverint, cautionem fidejuſſoriam ſufficientem interpoſuerint ſe contra monitionem & prohibitionem nihil commiſſuros, That this may be more firmly obſerved, the Decree of Separation ſhall not be pronounced, till they that demand it, ſhall put in ſufficient bond that they will doe nothing againſt the admonition and prohibition. And if this be not obſerved by the Judge, he is to be puniſhed, and the ſentence of Divorce for ſuch defect, declared void, Conſtit. Eccl. An. Dom. 1597. Which manner of proceeding preſcribed by the Canon, 1. By way of monition and counſel, which differs from divine Precept: 2. By requiring a bond for the obſerving the monition (which uſeth not to be required, when the divine Law diſtinctly commands obedience) do ſeem to infer that this marriage after a Chriſtian divorce, is not looked upon by the Church as an adulterous Commiſſion, but rather as a matter of dangerous conſequence, if it ſhould be permitted.

Sect. 33.

'Tis true, ſome of the Ancients ſpeaking of this matter, ſeem to ſay, that theſe ſecond Marriages are againſt Scripture, contra Scripturam quidem fecerunt, ſaith Origen, Thoſe Biſhops which, extra Scripturam, without authority of Scripture permitted a woman to mary, while the former husband lived, have indeed done contrary to Scripture. And Athenagoras in his πρεσβ. The Chriſtians are commanded either to remain ſingle, ἢ ἐφ' ἑνὶ γάμῳ, or to be content with one marriage, affirming the ſecond to be εὐπρεπὴς μοιχεία, a handſomer better ſort of adultery;

adultery; and this on force of Chriſt's words, that he that putteth away his wife and marryeth another, committeth adultery. And Innocent the firſt, Biſhop of Rome, Qui interveniente repudio, alii ſe matrimonio copulârunt, in utraque parte adulteros eſſe manifeſtum eſt, &c. They that after divorce joyn themſelves to ſome other marriage, it is manifeſt they are adulterers on both ſides, according to that which we reade in the Goſpel, He that putteth away his wife and marrieth another, committeth adultery, and he that marrieth her that is put away, committeth adultery. But of theſe and the like teſtimonies it may be obſerved, that moſt of them belong not to thoſe Divorces, which are in caſe of fornication, but (proportionably to Chriſt's words in Saint Mark) to thoſe which according to the Jewiſh or Imperial laws, were allowed, in other caſes, than what either Chriſt or the Primogenial Inſtitution of marriage had allowed of. Of theſe we have reaſon to interpret many paſſages of the Ancients, ſometimes in reference to the Imperial, ſometime to the Moſaical practice of greater liberty. Of the former ſort are thoſe words of the firſt Laodicean Canon, Οἱ ἐλευθέρως καὶ νομίμως συναρθέντες δευτέροις γάμοις, they that are freely and lawfully joyned in ſecond marriages, i. e. after ſuch Divorces as are legal by the Roman practice and laws, but not by the law of Chriſt. And ſo in the Nicene, and Ancyrane, and Neo-Cæſarean Councils. Of the latter are the forecited words of Saint Hierome, l. 1. adverſ. Jovinian. From the beginning of the world we uſed not Divorces; where it is evident by the precedent words [eloquium Salvatoris, our Saviour's command] that he was to be underſtood in oppoſition to the Moſaical indulgence of greater liberty, not to the Chriſtian in that one caſe. And of theſe it is evident, and confeſſed by all Chriſtians, that the marriages after ſuch divorces are adulterous, but not ſo of thoſe other marriages of the innocent parties after thoſe other divorces in that one caſe of adultery. Nay even ſome Canons have been made with this temperament expreſly [Except in the caſe of fornication,] So in the ſecond Canon of the Council of Vannes, Eos qui relictis uxoribus ſuis, ſicut in Evangelio dicitur, excepta cauſa fornicationis, ſine adulterii probatione alias duxerint, ſtatuimus, &c. They that have left their own wives, as it is ſaid in the Goſpel, except for cauſe of fornication, and without proof of adultery, ſhall have married others, we judge them, &c.

Having ſaid thus much for the ſatisfying this difficulty: one advantage, I ſuppoſe, may be made of it, before we proceed any farther, toward the explaining the meaning of Saint Paul's Canon, or direction to Timothy, 1 Tim. 3. and 5. for the choice of Biſhops and Widows, that the Biſhop be the husband of one wife, and the Widow be the wife of one husband, viz. that in both places it be taken in the ſame ſenſe, in a notion of ſecond marriages (differing both from the ordinary Bigamy and Digamy) of thoſe that having put away their wives, or being ſeparated from their husbands; or any cauſe whatſoever, whether Jewiſh, Roman, or Chriſtian, have married again. Sect. 34. Saint Paul's Canon of the Biſhop and Widow.

To this purpoſe it muſt be obſerved, that the having or living with more wives at once, cannot be the thing there meant, becauſe the interdict lying equally to the Biſhop and to the Widow, this ſenſe is not appliable to her, becauſe it was never permitted by any law either of Jews or Romans (nor is it ſince by the Mahomedans themſelves) that a woman ſhould have and live with two husbands at once. As for the Barbarians, among whom there is mention of πολυάνδροι, a people where the women had many husbands, and ſo the Medes that dwelt in the mountains, among whom 'tis ſaid a woman had five husbands at once, theſe are too extravagant to be referred to by the Apoſtle in that interdict. Sect. 35. Three ſorts of ſecond marriages. Having two at once.

And for the ordinary Digamy, the marrying a ſecond after the deceaſe of the former, that that ſhould be ſo reproachfull and blameable in any, as to render one uncapable of holy Orders (which they are capable of, which have been guilty of ſome faults) this is not imaginable neither; It being ordinary for the wife to die ſoon after marriage, and without bearing of children, and in that caſe the ſecond marriage tending as much to the ends of the Inſtitution, as the former can be ſuppoſeable to do. And accordingly this Prohibition is not to be found in the laws of any Nation, and the Apoſtle is elſewhere clear, that when the husband is dead, the woman is free to marry another man, Rom. 7. 3. And accordingly Clemens Alexandrinus, Strom. l. 4. ſpeaking of the great reward of thoſe that do διαλυθείσαν ἀπὸ τοῦ ζυγίαν ἀγάμου συνδήσεων, marry no more after the death of the firſt wife, doth yet acknowledge, that if he marries again οὐκ ἁμαρτάνει he doth not ſin againſt the Covenant, οὐ μὴν κακολύνται πρὸς τὸν νόμον, for there is no prohibition of this by law, onely, ſaith he, he doth not attain to that κατ' ἐπίτασιν τελειότητα, higheſt perfection of the Evangelical courſe, the very ſame which would be affirmed of never marrying at all, which is not commanded any, but looked on as the greateſt degree of perfection. Sect. 37. A ſecond after the deceaſe of the firſt.

Whereas this third notion will be very agreeable to the places, meaning this marriage after a divorce, This he that had been guilty of, by humane Laws, either of Jews or Romans, was under no cenſure, but by the Apoſtle's direction is not thought fit to be received into holy Orders. As the High-Prieſt among the Jews might not be a Polygamiſt, might not divorce and marry again, nor marry one that was divorced, though other men were permitted to doe all theſe. And of this the women, and ſo the widows, were capable, as well as the men: Salome the ſiſter of Herod the ſon of Antipater, gave a bill of Divorce to Cuſtabarus the Prefect of Idumæa and Gaza, but this ἐ κατὰ Ἰουδαίους νόμους, contrary to the Jewiſh laws, ſaith Joſephus, l. 15. c. 11. And ſo Herodias, Philip's wife, as may be gathered out of Joſephus, Ant. l. 18. c. 7. And of the marrying of thoſe that were put away by their husbands, the Canons make frequent mention. Sect. 38. Marrying after an unlawfull Divorce. Women leaving their husbands.

Of this ſex, ſaith Seneca, de Benefic. l. 3. c. 16. Numquid jam ulla repudio erubeſcit? Is any woman now aſhamed of leaving her husband? And, Nobiles fœminæ non conſulum numero, ſed maritorum, annos ſuos computant, they married and departed, and married again every year. So Plutarch in his Ῥωμαϊκὰ mentions the marrying of women, whoſe husbands were living; and the ſame appears by Juſtinian, Novel. 117. And among the Grecians ἀπόλειψις is the word for it. Sect. 39.

Among Chriſtians (though by Chriſt's law the wife might not put away the man, nor except in one caſe, the man the woman: yet) ſome examples of the practice of it, by the conſent of parties, are to be met with; as appears by Marculfus his formula, l. 2. c. 30. directly to this purpoſe, Dum inter illum & illam non charitas ſecundum Deum, ſed diſcordia regnat — placuit, &c. Seeing between him and her the charity according to God doth not reign, but diſcord, ſo that they cannot live peaceably together, it is agreed by the conſent of both, that they ſeparate from one another, and accordingly they have done. A formula uſed among Chriſtians, as there is another, Leg. Rom. c. 19. and Novel. Inſtitut. 117. Sect. 40. Divorces practiſed among Chriſtians.

Sect. 41. [d] Can. 116. in Zonaras's account.

And being thus practiſed, the [d] Council of Carthage thought fit to make a Canon to reform it, and therefore appointed that the Emperour ſhould be deſired to enact an Imperial Law againſt it; and ſo doth the Milevitan Council, Can. 17. And accordingly one of the Presbyters that were brought to witneſs againſt Marcellinus, being found to have married after a divorce, placuit reprobari, ſaith Alrodius, he was rejected.

Sect. 42. [e] Pandect. rer. judicat. l. 6. tit. 1. c. 18.

To this ſenſe, I conceive, the like directions given both by the Authour of the Conſtitutions, and in the Apoſtolical Canons do belong. In the [e] Conſtitutions, they are thus enlarged, τοιοῦτον δεῖ εἶναι καὶ τὸν ἐπίσκοπον, μιᾶς ἀνδρα γεγυναικότα γυναικὸς μονογάμου, Such an one ought the Biſhop to be, one that hath been the husband of one wife, and that wife the wife of one husband, i. e. that he that is thought fit to be choſen Biſhop, ſhall be one that hath never married another wife whilſt his former liveth; and in like manner, that he ſhall not marry any woman, that hath parted with a former husband: ſo as μονόγαμος ſhall be one with μὴ ἀπολελυμένῃ in the 48 Apoſtolical Canon, ſhe that hath not been put away.

Sect. 43.

In the Apoſtolical Canon the words are more perſpicuous, Ὁ δυσὶ γάμοις συμπλακεὶς μετὰ τὸ βάπτισμα, ἢ παλλακὴν κεκτημένος, οὐ δύναται εἶναι ἐπίσκοπος, ἢ πρεσβύτερος, ἢ διάκονος, ἢ ὅλως τοῦ καταλόγου ἱερατικοῦ, He that is joyned in two marriages after Baptiſm, or hath a Concubine, cannot be a Biſhop, or Presbyter, or Deacon, or of any ſacred Order. Where the ſecond marriage being proportionable to having a Concubine, muſt in reaſon be the having two wives living at a time, onely one of them put away from him. Of this matter the Reader may ſee Zonaras on the 116 Canon of the Council of Carthage, Radolphus Fornerius Rerum quotidian. l. 6. c. 23. Burchard. l. 9. c. 72. and Chriſt. Juſtellus from the Notes of Jacobus Leſchaſſerius, on the Codex Canonum Eccleſiæ univerſæ. But this by the way.

Sect. 44.

Having gone thus far, I ſhould ſoon be at an end of my geſſes, were there not ſome pretenſions of other men, who like not to have their liberties retrench'd, though by Chriſt himſelf, which may deſerve to be a while conſidered. And the conſidering of them will be the moſt ingratefull part of this task; yet that which muſt be undergone, leſt, having offered their reaſons and exceptions againſt the Doctrine of the Church, and expreſly of Chriſt himſelf, they be permitted to that dangerous temptation, of thinking themſelves ſucceſsfull in the attempt, and ſo that prove to ſome men a more perſwaſive reaſon to believe their wiſhes, than any yet hath been produced.

Sect. 45. A plea for Divorces.

The firſt open attempt that I remember that way, was made in a Diſcourſe purpoſely on that ſubject, and preſented to the Parliament, at the beginning of theſe licentious times; and the ſpecial artifice made uſe of, was that, of bringing back Chriſt unto Moſes, of interpreting the reſtraint laid on this matter in the New Teſtament, by analogy with the Judaical permiſſion in the Old. After the ſame manner, as when the municipal Laws of a Kingdom are thought fit to be reduced to (and interpreted by) the fundamental; which is, by interpretation, as when the whole pile or fabrick being taken down, and not one ſtone left upon another, the appeal is made by reſort to the firſt foundations, which lying under the ground, and in the dark, will be more eaſily perſwaded either to be or to appear, whatſoever we wiſh they ſhould.

Sect. 46. The anſwers to it.

How rational a procedure this is in other matters, I have no temptation to enquire. Onely to the buſineſs of divorces it muſt be obſerved, how much more unreaſonably it is pretended, than in the parallel, of humane Laws.

Sect. 47.

For firſt, the Law of Moſes to the Jews was not the fundamental Law of all mankind, or that wherein all, or indeed any but they, were concerned. And 2. this particular of divorces being not a perceptive law, but a permiſſive, a law of ſpecial diſpenſation affixt to a former obligatory law, was, if we believe Chriſt, directly contrary to that, by which, thoſe Jews, with all men had formerly been regulated. And then 3. Chriſt's ſuperadditions in this matter are ſo far from being interpretable by, or reducible to that ſuppoſed foundation, that, as was ſaid, they are directly and purpoſely oppoſed to it. It is impoſſible that words ſhould be more explicite and diſtinct, Matth. 5. 31. It hath been ſaid, Whoſoever ſhall put away his Wife, let him give her a bill of divorce. But I ſay unto you, that, whoſoever ſhall put away his Wife, ſaving for the cauſe of fornication, &c. And c. 19. 9. And I ſay unto you, Whoſoever ſhall put away his Wife, except it be for the cauſe of fornication, and ſhall marry another, committeth adultery: and whoſoever marrieth her which is put away, doth commit adultery.

Sect. 48. Chriſt's doctrine againſt Divorces.

Is it poſſible this artifice could have been more providently foreſeen and prevented by Chriſt? Under Moſes they might put away upon diſlikes, founded in the matter of Nakedneſs: Under Chriſt they muſt not, ſave in the one caſe of Fornication: Under Moſes, the man that had given a bill of divorce, might marry another; but under Chriſt, if he do ſo, he committeth adultery: Under Moſes, the woman that had the Bill might go, and marry any man elſe, except that former husband, ver. 4. and the High-Prieſt, Lev. 21. 7. but under Chriſt, if ſhe do, ſhe commits adultery, and he that marries her commits adultery; and though ſhe do not marry, yet he that puts her away, being unable to give her liberty of marrying another, doth, as much as in him lies, cauſe her to commit adultery. And then ſure, 'tis but ſeaſonable to invert our Saviour's ſpeech, What man ſhall dare join, what God hath, thus widely, put aſunder?

Sect. 49. The opinion of Chriſt's adding nothing to Moſes. [f] Note on Pract. Cat. l. 2. Sect. 3. p. 50, 51.

The onely colour of ground for this pretenſion [viz. that Chriſt in the Sermon on the Mount makes no addition to the Moſaical Law, and therefore that here he doth not in this of divorces] hath in [f] other papers been evidenced from all Antiquity to be a falſe ground. And yet (to ſee the luck of it) if it ſhould be acknowledged a true one, it would preſently deſtroy the whole pretenſion: For then it muſt follow, that there was as much interdicted in Moſes, as is now forbidden by Chriſt; and thence again, that the obſcure words of Moſes did really contain, what the plain words of Chriſt do certainly expreſs, and then that the matter of nakedneſs there, muſt be interpreted by πορνεία or fornication here. And then the reſult will be, that even among the Jews under Moſes's permiſſion, thoſe divorces for any other inferiour cauſes were not permitted; which is the direct contradictory to that, which is pretended to be deduced from this way of probation.

Sect. 50.

For, of the opinion of thoſe that think Chriſt added nothing to the Law of Moſes, this is obſervable; That, to give it ſome colour of truth or probability, they have been forced to affirm that Chriſt's whole deſign in that Sermon on the Mount, was to vindicate and reſcue the Law of Moſes from the Phariſees gloſſes, and onely to reſtore it to the primitive perfection and luſtre, that it had before it was ſo maimed and clouded by thoſe Doctours: which if it be true, then muſt that of permitting divorces, in other caſes beſide that of fornication, be onely a gloſs of the Phariſees, and not the truth of the Moſaical Law; which, as long as it is granted, is the utter undoing of that plea for this liberty founded in, and deduced from the Moſaical Law.

that

To conclude, It is neceſſary by all laws of diſcourſe, that Chriſt being to vindicate the Law of Moſes from falſe interpretations, that vindication of Chriſt's ſhould be received as the interpretation of the Law of Moſes, that was ſo miſinterpreted, and not the Law of Moſes be the interpreter of Chriſt's vindication; It being an axiome known to all, that the latter, and more perſpicuous, muſt be the interpreter of the former, more obſcure, and not the former, and the darker be ſet blindly to interpret the latter and more perſpicuous, The authentick paraphraſe being the comment on the Text, and not the obſcurer Text on the paraphraſe. Sect. 51.

Another courſe of avoiding the force and perſpicuity of our Saviour's words hath been taken by Mr. Selden in his Uxor Hebraica l. 3. 23. which it will not be amiſs to ſurvey a while, as diſtinctly, as my deſigned brevity will permit. Sect. 52. Mr. Selden's attempt in this matter.

The firſt part of the attempt is to diſpoſe the Reader, and bring him to make ſome doubt or queſtion, what is the meaning of thoſe plain words of Chriſt, [παρεκτὸς λόγου πορνείας, ſaving for the cauſe of fornication] and [εἰ μὴ ἐπὶ πορνείᾳ, except for fornication] And that is endeavoured by theſe ways, Firſt, by mentioning it as an [g] hnge difficulty, which is wont to torment Writers on this ſubject. Secondly, by rendring two notions of the word Fornication among Chriſtian Writers, frequently in uſe, one belonging to the unmarried, the other to the married, and then (becauſe in the former of theſe notions it cannot be taken, unleſs it denote ſome act committed before marriage) enquiring whether among any Authours, either more ancient, or contemporary with the Evangeliſts, πορνεία do manifeſtò & palàm, manifeſtly and openly ſignifie adultery, as that is ſignanter, Simply and Specifically the violation of marriage. In this inquiry firſt he finds the word uſed in Demoſthenes for that which is not to be named, in Philo for proſtitution; but he ſuppoſes no man to think this applicable to this matter. Secondly, then he finds in Heſychius and the Etymologiſt μοιχὸς πορνὸς, and ſo, (that which was deſigned not to be found) fornication for adultery. [h] But theſe, ſaith he, are recentiores, later Writers, and do not prove the uſe of the word among the ancients before or about Chriſt's time, any more than the fathers of the Chriſtian Church, which are alſo later than Chriſt's being here on earth, who uſe it and underſtand it for adultery. To this thirdly, he adds, that it is ſtrange that Matthew ſhould in both places uſe πορνεία fornication, and not μοιχεία adultery, which yet in both places Chriſt uſes immediately after theſe words; and there being a third place in Matthew wherein both theſe words are uſed together, Matth. 15. 19. He obſerves fourthly, that the Syriack reads זנרא adultery onely. Fifthly, he ſuppoſes it acknowledged by all, that the ſame words are wont to be diverſly uſed in reſpect of the diverſity of the matters. Sixthly, he adds, that among the ſeveral opinions that were at that time abroad, there was no one of this ſort, that there was no place for divorces, ſave in caſe of adultery; The ſeveral opinions being reducible to three heads, firſt that of Hillel, that the husband might divorce for any cauſe, yet not meaning his own bare will: ſecondly, that of Sammai, for ſomewhat of turpitude onely: thirdly, that of Aquiba, that he might doe it on his own will for whatſoever he pleaſed. Nay ſeventhly, that adultery was to be puniſhed by death, and ſo not by divorce. Eighthly, that the Phariſees conſulted Chriſt temptingly and treacherouſly, and yet, that as ſoon as Chriſt had thus anſwered them, they were ſo ſatisfied, that they oppoſed not a word, which 'tis ſcarce credible they ſhould doe, if his anſwer had been ſo new and unheard of, diſtant from all the three opinions known among them: Nay that the diſciples ſeem not ſo to underſtand his anſwer as if it were any ſuch new doctrine, but ſuch as, though rejected by the moſt, was yet defended by others the Scholars of Sammai and his followers. Ninthly, That it is not evident enough by Chriſt's expreſs words, whether the cauſe of fornication do not belong to the husband alſo, and not onely to the wife, that if he were guilty, or [i] in danger of being guilty of fornication through her contumacies or moleſtations, this were ſufficient for a divorce. Upon theſe premiſſes having ſufficiently prepared the Reader's inclinations, he then proceeds to a through examination of the matter by reducing all to three Quæres. Sect. 53. His preparations to it.

[h] Horum uterque recentiores ſunt, nec veterum ante, ſeu ſub Chriſti tempora uſum omnino probant, aliter atque patres Chriſtiani Chriſti in terris tempore ſæculis aliquot recentiores, quibus pro adulterio admittitur, uſurpatúrque. p. 481.

[i] Πορνείας propenſius fieret reus.

But before I proceed to them, I ſhall reflect a while upon this προπαρασκευὴ or preparative velitation which I have thus largely and punctually ſet down, that it may appear what ſolidity there is like to be in that pretenſion, which was thus to be uſhered in. Sect. 54. An anſwer to them.

And firſt it is viſible to all, that this which he makes a queſtion of, and calls it a greateſt difficulty, which Writers on this Subject have been tormented with, is indeed no ſuch matter, but that all the Chriſtian Writers of any note from Chriſt's time to this, have uniformly reſolved that Chriſt's words of divorce do belong to that one caſe of fornication in the Wife. None ever doubting but that πορνεία doth there ſignifie ſins of uncleanneſs; onely ſome extending it, farther than adultery, to unnatural and inceſtuous commiſſions, which, it is certain, are called πορνεία alſo, and being of ſo high a nature, may well be thought fit to be comprehended in Chriſt's words, and not adultery onely. Sect. 55. Πορνεία not Adultery onely.

This will anon appear on occaſion of ſome teſtimonies produced out of Bede and others, by Mr. Selden, to which we ſhall * then joyn that paſſage of Saint Auguſtine in his Retractations, by whom indeed it is ſaid to be latebroſiſſima quæſtio & ſcrupuloſiſſima diſputatio, a very obſcure and ſcrupulous queſtion, not, whether for other cauſes except that one, a Chriſtian might divorce, but, whether that one contain not other acts of fornication beſides adultery. Sect. 56. * Sect. 81.

Secondly, then for the uſe of this word πορνεία ſignanter, ſimply and ſpecifically for adultery, i. e. I ſuppoſe, ſo as to exclude all other ſorts of uncleanneſs, there is no need to produce any teſtimonies, of ſuch ancient Writers; If it be more largely extended, in like manner, as it is Acts, 15. in the Apoſtles Canon, to inceſts and unnatural ſins, &c. this is not it, wherein the controverſie conſiſts. And therefore for the notions of it in Demoſthenes for pæderaſtia or unnatural filthineſs, and the like alſo, but ſomewhat more indefinitely in Philo, if they be here taken in, it will no way advantage Mr. Selden's pretenſions, which are for ſome ſofter notion of πορνεία, than the Chriſtian Writers beſtow on it, and that from Demoſthenes and Philo cannot be pretended. Sect. 57.

Sect. 58. Mean-while it is not obvious to conjecture, why, when it is by him acknowledged, that among the [k] ancient Christians πορνεία is used for adultery, and so in the [l] Christian Translatour of Achmet, and others the like, and indefinitely in the [m] Christian Fathers, none excepted, this should not be thought a competent means of judging what the Evangelist meant by πορνεία, but that it should be sought out of Demosthenes and Philo, rather than found in the universal undoubted use of Christian Writers. This cannot but be lookt on as a symptome of some significancy, that what was to be maintained by those means, is of such a nature, as, if the whole Christian Church might be heeded, could never be owned or believed by us.

Sect. 59. And therefore when Hesychius (and also the Etymologist) have affirmed distinctly that πορνὸς doth signifie μοιχὸς, an adulterer, what an injustice is it, first carelesly to despise, and without any account or contrary affirmation of any other, simply to cast off the authority of that most excellent Grammarian, which is of all other Glossaries acknowledged by learned men, to have a peculiar propriety to the explicating of the sacred dialect, and then to reject in the same period all the Christian Fathers also, by saying that Hesychius and the Etymologist do no more prove the use of the word before or under Christ, than the Christian Fathers (no one, it seems, fit to be excepted) are able to doe? This again visibly sets this pretension in competition, and contention with the whole Christian World beside, and that is no very excellent character of the meekness, nor presage of the truth of it.

Sect. 60. This being thus premised, it is now far from strange, that Saint Matthew's Greek should make use of πορνεία, fornication, and not of μοιχεία, adultery, the reason being visible, because πορνεία was wider, and comprehended those other sins of Incest, &c. which as well as simple adultery, were just causes of divorce, and that μοιχεία, adultery was not fit to doe. And if Matth. 15. in stead of fornication and adultery, the Syriack hath used זנוה onely, this can signifie nothing to me, but that either they have omitted a word, which they should have expressed, or used a comprehensive word to signifie both; or by naming adultery, by parity of reason, or à fortiori, left the other to be understood also.

Sect. 61. And when 'tis added, that by the difference of the matter, words receive their different significations: as I acknowledge the truth of that, so I think it very competent to infer, that πορνεία being used of a married couple, must in reason signifie adultery, as that notes an offence against the marriage bed and vow, and not any inferiour crime or infirmity, which is not such.

Sect. 62. As for the next branch of his discourse, which would render it improbable that πορνεία, should signifie adultery, (because, there being three opinions of divorces among the Jews of that time, this of the unlawfulness to divorce, save onely for fornication, was none of these three) I suppose, the answer will be unquestionable, that Christ in his Sermon on the Mount, setting his commands in opposition to what had been formerly said among the Jews, did either add new precepts and interdicts to those that were before in force among them, or else vindicated the old Commandments, from the false opinions and glosses of men. And then will it be very unreasonable to oblige Christ to follow the known opinion of any sort of Rabbins among them, at that time when he opposes his doctrine to all that had been formerly said by them. And why may not Christ reasonably reject the interpretations and indulgences of men, of whatever Jewish School they were, as well as retrench the indulgence given by Moses from God (as in this matter it is apparent he doth, Matth. 19. 8. Moses permitted — but from the beginning it was not so: and, But I say unto you, ver. 9.) or pronounce of the Sanhedrin universally, that they made void the Commandments of God by their Traditions, Mark 7. 13.

Sect. 63. That Adultery was among the Jews, by their law, to be punished with death, is willingly granted; but that concession is far from inferring, That it was not reasonable in Christ to disallow all other divorces for lesser or lower causes. For 1. At this time wherein the Pharisees speak to him, the capital punishments were taken from the Jews, and the Sanhedrin confess it is not lawfull for them to put any man to death, John 18. 31. In regard whereof they brought the adulteress to Christ, John 18. 3. as thinking to have ensnared him by that also. 2. It was not necessary when the Mosaical polity was abolished, that all Christians to whom Christ's words indifferently belonged, should enact the same Judicial Laws, that were in force among the Jews, nor consequently, that adultery should every where be death, though in Judæa it were. 3. Christ's affirming that there was no cause competent for divorce but one, doth no way prejudge the punishing that one with heavier punishment than divorce. And 4. there is no reason imaginable, why Christ that thought adultery so much a greater offence against the marital vow, than other faults or causes were, for which the Jews ordinarily divorced, should, by omitting to specifie that, leave us to conclude that there was no crime at all, for which it was lawfull to divorce. For supposing any to be such, certainly adultery, which was so great a contrariety to the conjugal vow, and injury to the husband, as to be punished with death (that highest degree of divorce, Excision irreversible, not from his flesh onely, but from the earth) might deserve to be deemed such.

Sect. 64. Next: for the Pharisees being so satisfied with his answer, that they opposed not a word, It is far from inferring that his answer agreed with some one of the three doctrines of their Rabbies. For 1. if it be but remembred, what is by the objecter truly suggested, that they came insidiously to question him, then, as their intention to ensnare him by this question, is an evidence, that they believed his doctrine in this matter (delivered in the Sermon on the Mount) to be contrary to the liberty which they had by Moses, (for else how could this be a tempting, i. e. an ensnaring question?) so the more contrary his answer was to their received doctrine; yea, and to the doctrine which they were taught from Moses, the greater matter of satisfaction that would be to their design of treachery. The more liable he were supposed to have rendred himself to their Laws and Censures, the less need was there of questioning him any farther. As at another time, Matth. 12. where it is said expressly, that they asked him a question that they might accuse him, ver. 10. upon his answer they return not a word to him (and yet sure were not satisfied with him any otherwise, than as having now matter of accusation against him: for it follows, ver. 14. that they went out and took counsel against him that they might put him to death.) So again Matth. 26. the High Priest that insidiously examined him, upon his affirming that he was the Christ, ver. 64. answers, not by opposing, or questioning him any farther, farther, but by addreſſing his ſpeech to the Sanhedrin, What need we any farther witneſſes? behold, ye have now heard his blaſphemy. Which yet is far from concluding that ſpeech of Chriſt, that he was the Meſſias, to contain no more in it, than ſome Sect of their Rabbins affirmed concerning him.

Sect. 65. Nay 2. the reaſon and evidence, with which Chriſt ſpake, might be, and certainly was ſuch, that the moſt contrary minded had nothing to oppoſe. As it is elſewhere ſaid, that they could not reſiſt the power with which he ſpake. And then certainly it will be a weak argument to infer, that ſome ſort of devils taught that God onely was to be worſhipped (or that the ſpeech of Chriſt, Matth. 4. 11. was agreeable to the doctrine of ſome of thoſe learned Rabbies) becauſe upon that anſwer of Chriſt, the devil had nothing to oppoſe, but immediately departed from him.

Sect. 66. Nay 3. it may moſt reaſonably be reſolved by way of retortion of this argument, that there being three opinions of the Jews at that time, one from Hillel, the moſt received, the ſecond from Sammai, that had fewer followers, the third of Aquiba: if Chriſt had taken part with that number of men, which were then leſs favoured by all, and particularly by the Phariſees that queſtioned him, his authority could not have prevailed ſo far, as to perſwade them preſently to depoſite their opinion, and inſtead of treacherous enemies, to become obedient Converts to this doctrine; and yet (after all this being thus prodigiouſly ſatisfied) never to give any word of acknowledgment that they were ſo.

Sect. 67. As for the diſciples, that they do not ſeem to underſtand his anſwer ſo, as if it were any new doctrine, but as that, which was rejected by ſome, but defended by others: It is affirmed without any ſhew of reaſon. For 1. in the Sermon on the Mount, if it were new, yet it was agreeable with other precedent parts of that Sermon, which were new alſo, and they which were diſciples of Chriſt, and believed him to be ſent from God, could believe what he ſaid without having the aſſiſtence of Sammai, or other Jew to countenance it. And beſides, that coming in the body of his Sermon (of all which they were ſilent auditours) how new ſoever they thought it, we cannot expect from them any expreſſion of it. And for that Matt. 19. to which I ſuppoſe Mr. Selden refers, it is pretty evident, 1. That they had heard it before from him on the Mount, and ſo that it was not now perfectly new to them: and 2. That their objection againſt it doth not argue that they took it for an old doctrine, for ſay they, If this be the caſe of an husband with his wife, it is profitable not to marry, ver. 10. which (by the way) would have been very cauſeleſly objected by them, if as Sammai had taught, ſo Chriſt's ſpeech had been underſtood to extend no farther; That turpitude in the greateſt latitude and comprehenſion of the word, was of a competent width, and by being allowed a juſt cauſe of divorce, would not have concluded the conditions of that band of marriage very ſtrict, or unſupportable.

Sect. 68. Laſtly, it is a cauſeleſs exception againſt the words, or ſtyle of Chriſt or the Evangeliſt, to pretend it not evident enough by Chriſt's expreſs words, whoſe fornication it is (the man's or the woman's) which is there ſpecified: for certainly it is moſt evident, and never before doubted of by any, but that as the αἰτία, the every cauſe or accuſation preceding, was ſomewhat diſliked or accuſed in the Woman, and not in the husband himſelf, who would not probably be his own accuſer, ſo the fornication was to be conceived in the woman alſo, and if it be not expreſly ſaid [for her fornication] that pronoun is certainly ſpared, becauſe no ordinary Reader could make doubt of underſtanding it thus, and ſo that expreſneſs or punctuality was unneceſſary.

Sect. 69. Having now done with the apparatus, or lighter, I ſhall proceed to the weightier part of his impreſſion, and (becauſe he is pleaſed to adviſe others to enquire, and examine the truth of his pretenſions) it will not be unſeaſonable to follow his ſteps, and obſerve what matter of conviction there is in all which is propoſed by him. Mr. Selden's farther pretenſions examined.

Sect. 70. His firſt attempt is (ſuppoſing Matthew to have written, and Chriſt to have ſpoken either in Syriack or Hebrew) to examine the uſe both of the Syriack and Hebrew word, and from thence to collect a greater latitude of ſignification, than that it ſhould be confined to fornication or adultery. If it were in Syriack, then, ſaith he, זניותא was the word; if in Hebrew, ערוה turpitude. For the firſt, the Syriack זניותא is, ſaith he, agreeable to the Hebrew זנה πορνεύειν, and therefore muſt have the ſame latitude with the Hebrew; and that, ſaith he, ſignifies either primarily and ſtrictly all lying together, which is not in lawfull marriage; and that again either all kind of unlawfull conjunctions, as in the ſtories of Dinah and Thamar; or elſe ſome particular ſorts of that kind, of which adultery is but one of many: Or ſecondarily and more largely, all things that are called filthy, as that is oppoſed to honeſt, and on theſe he inſiſts at large.

Sect. 71. For the former of them we need not to contend, not onely becauſe, howſoever Chriſt ſpake, yet 'tis certain Saint Matthew wrote not Syriack (and we have no way to gueſs of Chriſt's words, or meaning, but by the expreſſions which the Evangeliſts have given us of them) but alſo becauſe of Mr. Selden's conceſſions. For if that Syriack be agreeable to the Hebrew, and that primarily denote all manner of conjunctions but that in lawfull marriage, it will be no way inconvenient for us to acknowledge, that Chriſt uſed that word in that ſenſe, but plainly conſequent thereto, that no divorce is now lawfull, but that for fornication, as that ſignifies adultery or other ſuch foul ſin of uncleanneſs. The onely teſtimony here, of which he deſires to make advantage, is that of Lev. 21. 7. where the Prieſt is forbidden to take a wife which is a whore. There, ſaith he, the Hebrew זונה is by the ancient Jews defined to be any that is not an Iſraeliteſs, or which being an Iſraeliteſs, hath been joyned in any interdicted marriage, or hath lain with any Prophane perſon, whoſe marriage with her was not unlawfull.

Sect. 72. To this affirmation out of the ancient Jews, I anſwer, That whoſoever thoſe ancient Jews were, I cannot think there is any truth in that, which is thus cited from them, that זונה which we render whore, ſhould denote one that were onely not an Iſraeliteſs. For in the ſame verſe, where he is forbidden to marry the זונה, he is alſo forbidden to marry the prophane, and that ſure is more probable than זונה to ſignifie her, that is not an Iſraeliteſs. And of this I am ſure, that the moſt excellent Paulus Fagius, and others moſt converſant in the Jewiſh Writers, interpret זונה an adultereſs, or whore, in that place, and even the word prophane may well belong to the ſame matter alſo, the whore being ſaid to prophane her ſelf and her father, verſe 9. and there לזונות is the word for playing the whore.

However

Sect. 73. However this, if granted, will be impertinent to Chriſt's interdict of Divorces, unleſs we believe that he made it lawfull to put away a wife for not being an Iſraeliteſs, (and then every Engliſh woman muſt be put away) or for not being born of Parents of the ſame true Religion. And then, as we know, the daughter may be of the true Religion, though the mother were not, (and ſo 'tis ſure many children of heathens became Proſelytes of the Jews) ſo even of thoſe Wives, that are not of the true Religion, but unbelievers, or heathens, S. Paul is expreſs, that if they will live with their husbands, they are not to put them away, 1 Cor. 7. 12.

Sect. 74. Now for the ſecundary notion of the word ערוה, that it ſignifies any deviation (at leaſt heavier tranſgreſſion) into any ſins or turpitudes whatſoever, that he endeavours to prove from the frequent uſe of it for idolatry, fornicating after other gods, Exod. 34. 15. and following of Wizards, which is going a whoring after them, Lev. 20. 6. and ſo the ſins of the Jews, and Sodomites, and Samaritans, Ezek. 16. 51. are called often fornication in that Chapter; and many the like. So Numb. 14. 33. Your children ſhall bear your whoredoms, is, ſaith he out of Onkelos, ſhall bear your iniquities. So Philo calls a vitious mind ψυχὴν πεπερ δμῶσαν a fornicating ſoul. So Wiſd. 14. 12. when 'tis ſaid of the deviſing of Idols, that it is ἀρχὴ πορνείας, the beginning of fornication, on which ſaith Holkot, that the Scriptures uſe to call by the name of fornication, omnem illicitam corruptionem, all unlawfull corruption, ſuch is Idolatry, and Avaritia, Covetouſneſs. So, ſaith he, S. Paul muſt be underſtood, when he calleth the fouleſt inceſt, Fornication, 1 Cor. 5. 1. And ſo the Whore in the Revelation is one guilty of all kind of impiety. From all which he concludes, that if Chriſt ſpake Syriack, then the word expreſſed by πορνεία fornication, may denote all kind of filthineſs, ſeu quicquid κακίας ſeu vitii nomine venerit, whatever comes under the name of naughtineſs or vice, and then the concluſion is direct, for any ſuch vice, Chriſt allows divorce, and not onely in caſe of fornication. And accordingly that πορναὶ harlots, are joyned with publicans, Matth. 21. 32. as ἁμαρτωλοὶ ſinners, Matth. 9. 11, Mark 2. 16. Luke 5. 30.

Sect. 75. Now to all this endeavour the anſwer will be brief and evident, by obſerving but two things, which quite take away all force of theſe teſtimonies. Firſt, that the people of the Jews, as ſince the Church of Chriſt, are figuratively and myſtically ſaid in Scripture to be eſpouſed by God, married to himſelf, and conſequently every degree of Idolatry or Apoſtaſie from him is, by the ſame figure, expreſſed by fornicating, or going a whoring, i. e. breaking that Covenant which they had made with God, reſembled by God to a Marriage-Covenant. And there is nothing more ordinary than ſuch figures as this in all manner of ſacred and prophane writings, which yet no way prejudge or hinder the uſe of the ſame word in the proper ſenſe without any figure in it, but contrariwiſe ſuppoſe this acception of it for the violation of the marriage-bed, or elſe there could be no place for ſuch metaphors.

Sect. 76. From hence therefore that which will be deducible is this, that where there is no place for the literal interpretation, there ſuch figurative notions are to be admitted: as when Philo mentions the fornicating ſoul, or the Scripture, whoring after other Gods, there it muſt be taken in the figurative ſenſe, becauſe corporeal fornication is not incident to ſouls, or faſtened on Gods or Idols. But when there is place for the proper or firſt ſenſe, then what reaſon can there be to prefer, or ſubſtitute the figurative? And ſo it is viſibly in Chriſt's words, where the man puts away the wife for fornication. By this means five of the former teſtimonies are evidenced to be of no force, to infer the deſired concluſion; that of Exod. 34. Lev. 20. Ezek. 16. Numb. 24. of Philo; and perhaps a ſixth, that out of the Revelation, if it be taken to ſignifie any eminent Idolater or Apoſtate.

Sect. 77. But the ſecond obſervation will conclude this matter; It is this, that in the Idol-feaſts, and Sacrifices, and Worſhips, there was a great deal of uncleanneſs and unnatural filthineſs committed, and conſequently that filthineſs is ſometimes called Idol worſhip it ſelf, ſometimes it is ſet as an effect of it, and this literally and properly without any figure. So when πλεονεξία (which is ordinarily rendred covetouſneſs, but doth alſo ſignifie any inordinate luſt, Eph. 5. 3. and is oft in the New Teſtament uſed in that ſenſe) is ſaid to be Idolatry, Col. 3. 5. and Eph. 5. 5. that is clearly the meaning of it, that thoſe inordinate luſts were the way of their worſhipping their falſe Gods. And thus in the forecited place of Wiſd. 14. 12. it is evidently to be underſtood that ἐπίνοια εἰδώλων, the deviſing of Idols, is ἀρχὴ πορνείας, the beginning of fornication, or that which hath brought a great deal of abominable filthineſs into the world; and accordingly it follows, εὕρεσις δ' αὐτῶν φθορὰ ζωῆς, the invention of Idols was the corrupting of life, in that notion wherein [corrupting] is uſed for all ſuch villany, Deut. 4. 16. and 2 Pet. 1. 4. and 2. 12, 19. and as in Philo, φθορὰ, πορνεία, and μοιχεία are joyned together as breaches of the ſeventh Commandment.

Sect. 78. And ſo that place of Holkot, taken out of Papias, is to be interpreted alſo, that fornication ſignifies πᾶσαν ἀθέμιτον ἀδικίαν, all abominable villany or corruption, (a cleanly expreſſion of that which is not to be named) ſicut eſt Idololatria, ſuch as is Idolatry, and avaritia, in the notion of πλεονεξία (not covetouſneſs, as that ſounds with us a love of money, but) inordinate luſt, which is Idolatry.

Sect. 79. If there be any queſtion of this interpretation of the words of Papias, or Holkot out of him, I ſuppoſe a plain place in the fragments of Polycarp's Epiſtle (who lived in the ſame age with Papias) will make it clear, where ſpeaking of Valens, Elder of Philippi, and his having committed ſomewhat utterly unworthy of that Calling, by his example he admoniſhes others to abſtain ab avaritia (that ſure was in Greek ἀπὸ πλεονεξίας from unnatural luſts) & ſint caſti, and that they be chaſte; adding, that whoſoever did not ſo abſtain, ab Idololatria coinquinabitur, & tanquam inter Gentes judicabitur, would be defiled by Idolatry, and judged as among the Gentiles, i. e. fall into that ſort of ſins for which the Gentiles are condemned, and of which the Apoſtle ſaith, πρνὲς καὶ μοιχοὺς κρινεῖ ὁ θεὸς, fornicatours and adulterers God will judge.

Sect. 80. And by this may be underſtood alſo to how little purpoſe a like place is by * Mr. Selden produced out of Bede on the words in Saint Matthew, Non hîc intelligitur tantùm fornicatio in ſtupro, quod in alienis viris aut fœminis committitur, ſed omnis concupiſcentia, vel avaritia, vel idololatria, qua hominem facit à lege Dei aberrare. Here is to be underſtood not onely that fornication in adultery, which is committed with others husbands or wives, but all concupiſcence (not covetouſneſs, but) inordinate luſt (the note being taken out of ſome Greek Scholiaſt, which had πλεονεξία) or Idolatry, which makes a man err from the law of God. Where the [all concupiſcence] in the front is explained by the two latter, inordinate deſire, and Idolatry, both denote thoſe filthineſſes ſo ordinary among Idolaters. And accordingly it follows in Bede, Si uxor hujuſmodi aliquid hominem cogat, If a wife bring her husband to ſuch courſes as theſe, ſeduce him into the heathen myſteries, qui talem dimittit, cauſa

* p. 556.

cauſa fornicatoris dimittit, he that puts her away doth it for fornication, Illius, quia fornicatur, ſuæ, ne fornicet, for her fornication already committed, and for his own, that he may not commit it. All which clearly belongs to the unclean commiſſions among the heathen worſhippers, not to any other diſtant ſin, contained under that title.

Which indeed ſignifies it to be the ſenſe of Bede, and of that Scholiaſt, that fornication in Chriſt's words is to be extended (beyond that of adultery) to all unnatural filthineſs, but not that it contains all other vices under it, as far diſtant from this, as love of money is from the luſts of the fleſh, coveting the houſe, from defiling the bed, the worſhipping the Idol-falſe-Gods, from the violation of the vow of wedlock, impiety, from incontinence or impurity. Of the laſt and higheſt of which (idolatry or heathenism) as the Apoſtle's opinion is given, 1 Cor. 7. 12. that it is not a ſufficient matter for divorce, ſo the text of [μὴ γίνεσθε ἑτεροζυγοῦντες ἀπίστοις] which (by our rendring it, Be not unequally yoked with unbelievers) may be thought to ſound toward it, cannot without great impertinency be applied to that ſubject, for beſides that it would rather hold againſt marrying ſuch, than for divorces after marriage, it appears by the context to be ſpoken to the Corinthians in relation to their falſe teachers, the Gnoſticks (elſewhere called ἄπιστοι, unbelievers) not to heathen idolatrous women: and the [n] ἑτεροζυγία ſignifies onely too ſtrong [o] inclinations of kindneſs which they had to ſuch ſeducers, above the proportion which they allowed the Apoſtles, which converted them. Sect. 81.

[n] Ἑτεροζυγοῦσι σωμάσι is trutina alterijugis, a balance weighing down one way, oppoſed to ἰσόζυγοι, equiliberated. [o] So in Clement's Epiſtle to thoſe Corinthians, ἐτεροκλινεῖς ὑπάρχοντες ἀφ' ὑμῶν, inclining the other way, not to, but from the Apoſtles and Orthodox Chriſtians.

What hath thus been cleared to be the ſenſe of the words in Holkot and Bede, will, I ſuppoſe, be appliable to the place in S. Auguſtine's Retractations, l. 1. c. 19. Cum velit Dominus intelligi fornicationem, propter quam liceat dimittere uxorem, utrum eam quæ damnatur in ſtupris, an illam, de qua dicitur, Perdidiſti omnem qui fornicatur abs te, in qua utique & illa eſt (neque enim non fornicatur à Domino, qui tollens membra Chriſti facit ea membra meretricis) etiam atque etiam cogitandum eſt, atque requirendum. When Chriſt affirms fornication to be the onely thing for which it is lawfull to diſmiſs the wife, it muſt be conſidered and enquired diligently, whether he mean that fornication which is condemned in adultery; or whether that, of which it is ſaid, thou haſt deſtroyed every one that committeth fornication from thee, under which that of adultery is contained, for ſure he doth fornicate from the Lord, that takes the members of Chriſt, and makes them members of an harlot. Here the queſtion propoſed by S. Auguſtine (for the reſolving of which, he deſires that his own judgment may not be taken alone, [p] but other mens thoughts compared with it) is onely this, not whether all other ſins may come under the word πορνεία, uſed by Chriſt (for he preſently adds a caution for that, non quia omne peccatum fornicatio eſt, all ſin is not meant by it) but whether it be not taken in that latitude, wherein the Pſalmiſt uſeth it, Pſal. 72. 27. And it being by him expreſly affirmed, that that notion contains adultery under it, it ſeems to me moſt reaſonable to interpret S. Auguſtine to that ſenſe, which from thoſe other more ancient and later Writers, hath now been mentioned, ſo as fornication may contain all thoſe ſins of uncleanneſs, which the Nations, that departed from God, fell into, and for which they were deſtroyed expreſly, Lev. 18. and 20. Of which as adultery is one, ſo it is but one. And ſo fornication, that comprehends all unlawfull luſts, will ſtill be that onely head of ſins, for which divorces are imaginable to be allowed by Chriſt. And whether for all the ſorts of that, is it, which by that Father is ſtill called latebroſiſſima quæſtio, a moſt obſcure queſtion, and ſuch as he is not willing to define in it. Sect. 82.

As for the place 1 Cor. 5. 1. It is moſt manifeſt, that fornication there ſignifies in the ſame extent, that it doth in the Precept to the ſons of Adam and Noah, and denotes all kind of prohibited luſt, and ſo comprehends inceſt under it, and cannot in any reaſon be farther extended to ſins of any other claſſis, or be rendred, as Mr. Selden would have it, flagitium, crimen, & deviantis animæ turpitudo, as if any ſort of great fault, or turpitude, murther or ſacrilege, &c. could be ſo called. The word and notion of fornication may certainly be allowed to be retained there, and acknowledged to expreſs fully, what the Apoſtle there meant by πορνεία. Sect. 83.

And for Chriſt's joyning πόρναι harlots with Publicans, as elſewhere ſinners are joyned, that will prove no more, but that either πόρναι, as whores, were ſinners, and a groſs kind of ſinners, as they are acknowledged to be: or 2. that the word [ſinners] being ſet to denote Gentiles, (or, as 'tis elſewhere expreſly, ſinners of the Gentiles) fornication is noted as a Gentile ſin, very ordinary, as was ſaid among the heathen: or elſe 3. that ἁμαρτωλοὶ ſinners, may peculiarly denote that kind of ſin, as the γυνὴ ἁμαρτωλὸς the ſinner woman, Luk. 7. 37. is generally reſolved to have been an harlot, and ſo in many languages 'tis ordinary. And ſo ſtill this inſtance was fit to attend the former, having as little force or propriety as any, to conclude, That all other ſins, of what ſort ſoever, are called by, or comprehended under that title of fornication, or that all other ſinners may be called harlots, becauſe harlots are ſometimes ſtyled ſinners. Sect. 84.

After the view of the Syriack word, which Chriſt is ſuppoſed to have uſed, Mr. Selden proceeds to the Hebrew, or Rabbinical, wherein it is alſo imagined Chriſt might ſpeak (although that at the ſame time he ſpake both languages it is impoſſible, and very poſſible that, ſpeaking but one, neither of theſe ſhould be the true word) And then the word that is pitched on, is ערוה, the ſame that ſignifies turpitude, Deut. 24. 1. Sect. 85.

Of this I ſhall premiſe three things: 1. That there being other words ordinarily rendred by the Septuagint to this ſenſe, נאף, with its conjugates, forty times rendred μοιχᾶσθαι, μοιχεία, μοιχὸς, it muſt follow, that the conjecture that ערוה was the very word, which Chriſt uſed, is very fallible, and unable to ſupport what is built upon it: Or if it be ſaid, that נאף, which is ſo often rendred μοιχεία adultery, is yet never rendred πορνεία fornication, then as I acknowledge that, ſo I reply that ערוה, is never rendred πορνεία neither, but γόμφωσις, αἰσχύνη, &c. which ſignifies neither fornication or adultery. 2. That although that word were imagined to be uſed in that place of Matt. 19. where in oppoſition to πᾶσα αἰτία, every cauſe, Chriſt might poſſibly be conceived to determine the cauſe of divorces to that to which in Moſes it had been determined, yet it being alſo certain, that Chriſt had ſpoken formerly of this matter, Matt. 5. it is moſt certain, that the word uſed in Deuteronomy, could not in that ſenſe, that there belonged to it, be there uſed by him, and conſequently Matt. 19. where his ſpeech is by Matthew ſet down in the ſame manner, as c. 5. it had been, can it not with any reaſon be imagined to have been uſed by him. Sect. 86.

In

Sect. 87. In that place of Matt. 5. ערוה in the notion of Deut. 24. 1. cannot be ſuppoſed to have been the word. For there Chriſt beginning his ſpeech with a reference to that which had been indulged by Moſes in that place of Deuteronomy, It hath been ſaid, that if a man put away his wife, let him give her a bill of divorce; he preſently ſubjoyns, But I ſay unto you, that whoſoever ſhall put away his wife, ſaving for the cauſe of fornication, cauſeth her to commit adultery, &c. The latter part of this ſpeech of Chriſt is a direct oppoſition to that which he had cited in the former. The [ἐγὼ δὲ, But I ſay unto you] is a demonſtrative evidence of that: But this it could not be, if fornication were no more than the turpitude in Deuteronomy, for then as there a man might for turpitude, put away, ſo here for turpitude a man ſtill might, which is not an oppoſition, but identity.

Sect. 88. Thirdly, that whatſoever language Chriſt ſpake, or Matthew firſt wrote in, it is acknowledged, that this Goſpel was rendred into Greek by ſome Apoſtle, either James, or John, or Matthew himſelf, who muſt be ſuppoſed to know what that Hebrew word was, (which we can but gueſs at very imperfectly) and have choſen thus to expreſs it; and conſequently, that no farther advantage can be made of this, than if it had been firſt written in Greek by him, but that the word πορνεία muſt in all reaſon be underſtood in the ſame ſenſe, that either in all, or at leaſt in ſome places of the New Teſtament, or in the dialect of the Helleniſts, and Tranſlatours of the Old Teſtament, it had been taken, and by that meaſure ערוה (in the notion of the word, Deut. 24.) cannot be deemed the word which Chriſt uſed, being, as I ſaid, never rendred by πορνεία.

Sect. 89. For this matter it muſt be obſerved, that the uncovering the nakedneſs, or ערוה Lev. 18. is a very diſtant thing from the מצא בה ערוה דבר finding any matter or accuſation of nakedneſs in her, Deut. 24. The uncovering, or diſcloſing in Leviticus, contains all the inceſtuous, prohibited marriages, and other breaches of the ſeventh Commandment; but the finding ערוה in Deuteronomy, ſuppoſes not the committing of any turpitude, but the diſcerning that in the wife, which is made matter of ſome accuſation or diſlike.

Sect. 90. Of either of theſe affirmations, I ſuppoſe, there neither is, nor can be any doubt; and Mr. Selden hath acknowledged l. 3. c. 21. that the word ערוה, as it is uſed in this matter of divorces, and diverſely interpreted by the School of Hillel and Sammai, Multum diſcrepat ab ea turpitudinis notione, qua inceſtus, &c. in Levitico deſignatur, Differs very much from that notion of turpitude, by which inceſt and adultery, and other unlawfull copulations, are expreſſed in Leviticus.

Sect. 91. Which (although it be not exactly true, for Inceſt is not there called ערוה or turpitude, but the diſcloſing of ערוה the uncleanneſs, or nakedneſs, or ſhame of one that is near unto him, yet) being by Mr. Selden thus granted, and it being otherwiſe evident, that it is the notion in Leviticus, and not of the word nakedneſs, but the phraſe, diſcloſing nakedneſs, which is expreſſed in Greek by πορνεία, 1 Cor. 5. 1. and Act. 15. and elſewhere, There is little reaſon to doubt, but that, if ערוה were here uſed, and in like manner rendred by πορνεία fornication, it were in the ſenſe of Leviticus, and then this whole Controverſie is at an end. But yet to prevent all poſſible miſtakes, I ſhall farther deduce this matter.

Sect. 92. The word ערוה ſignifies unclean or uncomely, and it is applied ſometimes to vices, as Deut. 23. 14. any ערוה or unclean thing, i. e. any ſin, ſuch as God diſlikes to ſee, as any pure eyes muſt do, to behold another's ſhame, but moſt frequently the uncomely parts of the body. See Habak. 2. 15. where, looking on their nakedneſs, (the ſame that was Cham's ſin againſt his father) is evidently in this ſenſe; and is anſwered, ver. 16. with a like phraſe, and let thy foreskin be uncovered. And thus 'tis generally uſed, when there is mention of diſcloſing or uncovering ערוה, which we ordinarily render nakedneſs, meaning that part which ought to be covered. In this ſecond, and moſt ordinary notion of the word, it is certain, that the phraſe Lev. 18. is to be explained; ſo as to uncover nakedneſs, is to take to wife, or uſe as ſuch; and agreeably, if the woman be ſuch as it is not lawfull for him to marry; then, and not elſe, the [uncovering her nakedneſs] is πορνεύειν, to commit fornication with her.

Sect. 93. And ſo 'tis plain that ערוה nakedneſs is very diſtant from the word πορνεία, fornication, and that the uncovering of nakedneſs is it, which is equivalent to fornication; and accordingly the title of the Precept to the ſons of Adam, which is rendred by [περὶ πορνείας of fornication] is על גלוי עריות of the revealing, or diſcloſing of nakedneſs, and not על עריות of nakedneſs, onely. And it is not impoſſible, but this may be the notion of the word in this place of Deuteronomy alſo, and ſo דבר ſignifying λόγος thing or matter; and again, αἰτία, quarrel, or accuſation, דבר עריות matter of nakedneſſes, will be a civil phraſe to denote any thing between man and wife, of that ſort, which is not plainly to be named, and the finding of that in the [wife] ſhall be the diſcerning of ſomewhat of that kind, after his coming near unto her, for which ſhe hath no favour in his eyes, and for which he diſlikes and hates her.

Sect. 94. And accordingly the former part of the verſe is rendred by the Greek, If any man ſhall take a wife, καὶ συνοικήσει αὐτῇ, and cohabit with her, and the Targum to the ſame purpoſe, noting this diſlike to be a conſequent of that.

Sect. 95. Againſt this underſtanding of the words, no inconvenience or difficulty can lie, whether we ſuppoſe דבר to ſignifie αἰτία, and αἰτία an accuſation, (as it oft doth ſignifie) or whether it be rendred matter onely. For then דבר will be negotium nuditatis, or, as Tertullian renders it, impudicum negotium, ſome conjugal ſecret, ſomewhat, I ſuppoſe, which appears odious to the husband, and may appear otherwiſe to another, to whom ſhe may accordingly be married. And as this is on all hands reſolved not to be fornication, ſo being not there rendred by πορνεία, or any word of that nature, but onely by αἶσχος πρᾶγμα, ſome unclean matter, or matter of nakedneſs, there can be no reaſon to believe, that that ſhould be the word uſed by Chriſt, which Matthew renders πορνεία.

Sect. 96. This will farther appear, if it be again remembred, that our Saviour's words are ſet oppoſite Matt. 5. to the ἐῤῥέθη, that which was ſaid under Moſes, i. e. to the place of Deuteronomy, and all the interpretations of it; which is not poſſible, if ערוה there, were all one with πορνεία here, for then the ſame indulgence ſhould be allowed, and not any ſtricter reſtraint, inſtead of it.

Sect. 97. But then the inconveniences which would be ready to attend this, if it were admitted, are of an high nature, and may yet farther deſerve to be conſidered: For it is confeſſed by Mr. Selden, That among the Jews it was moſt generally received that for light cauſes, diſlike of beauty, age, and other ſuch things, wives might might be put away. And he adds, idque ex ſacræ legis mente, and this according to the ſenſe of the ſacred law (l. 3. c. 18.) i. e. ſurely according to the ſenſe of the words in Deuteronomy. And of the three opinions in this matter, ſet down from the Miſna, of Sammai, that reſtrained it to turpitude, of Hillel, that extended it to over-boiling his meat, or any ſuch light cauſe, and of Aquiba, that if he found any handſomer, or more agreeable to him, he might put her away, It is apparent, and affirmed by the Miſna, that all of them grounded their opinions on theſe words of that Text, ערוה דבר, diverſly interpreted.

By which it is evident, what abſolute unlimited liberty is introduced, and conſequently how little the bond and vow of marriage ſhall ſignifie, if it be once reſolved, that πορνεια in Chriſt's ſpeech, is the ſame with ערוה in Moſes. Sect. 98.

For then, as Joſephus ſaith, about Chriſt's time, that a [q] man might ſeparate from his wife for any cauſes whatſoever; adding, πολλὰ δ' ἂν τις ἀνθρώποις τοιαῦτα γένοιτο, and many ſuch cauſes there are which befall men; and confeſſing of [r] himſelf, that he put away his wife after he had three children by her, μὴ ἀρεσκόμενος δὲ τοῖς ἤθεσι, becauſe he diſliked her manners: ſo muſt it be expected again, there being nothing imaginable to reſtrain Chriſtians from following the Jews, if Chriſt's words were reſolved to be the ſame with thoſe, which the learned among them ſo generally interpreted to all this liberty. Sect. 99. [q] Antiq. 4. c. 8. [r] in vitâ.

Having premiſed thus much, 'twill now be eaſie to diſcern the no force of all the proofs which Mr. Selden adds to make it probable, that the ערוה in Deuteronomy ſhould be the word here uſed by Chriſt. As firſt, becauſe, ſaith he, this was the form uſed by the School of Sammai, that divorce was not to be admitted, but for the דבר ערוה cauſam aut rationem turpitudinis, cauſe or reaſon of turpitude. To this I anſwer, That Chriſt was no diſciple of the School of Sammai, but came with Commiſſion from God to reform both Hillel, and Sammai, and Sanhedrin, and Moſes himſelf, and to give ſtricter precepts and interdicts in this matter, than had ever been given by any of theſe, and ſo is not to be imagined to have uſed Sammai's form of ſpeech, any more than to have taken his doctrine from him, but appears clearly (in his Sermon on the Mount, Mat. 5.) to have oppoſed his new doctrine [But I ſay to you] to the [ἐρρέθη, it hath been ſaid] by Moſes and others (none excepted of any later date) that were before him. Sect. 100.

His ſecond proof, becauſe the word ſignifies αἰσχυσσιν and αἴσχυνον πρᾶγμα, (I ſhall ſuppoſe it a ſlip of the Printer, for ασχημοσυνη and ἄσχημον, for, though there be οἰσχύνη from another Original, ſure there are no ſuch words) ſhame, and ſhamefull things, concludes as little. For we know, that the former of thoſe in Greek denotes the hidden parts, and the ſecond any uncomely thing, and neither of thoſe will be fitly rendred πορνεια, fornication. And though it be true, that Deut. 23. 14. it ſignifie an unclean thing, i.e. a ſin, yet that concludes as little, there being many ſins beſides πορνεία, whatever notion be aſſigned it. And indeed every iniquity is unclean and filthy in the ſight of God's pure eyes, as nakedneſs is in the ſight of men, and ſo may fitly be expreſſed by that phraſe. The ſhort is, that the word ערוה is rendred ἀσχημοσύνη, γύμνωσις, αἰσχύνη, ἀσχημοσύνη, all words to denote nakedneſs, or ſhame, and ἀσελγεια naughtineſs, Ezek. 16. 36. where we rightly render nakedneſs, but never πορνεία Fornication, or Adultery, or any word of that importance. Sect. 101.

And when he farther pretends that the word in Leviticus ſignifies another man's wife, and all that are forbidden to be taken in marriage, Firſt, that it is not true, as hath been largely ſhewed: and Secondly, if it were true, it were far from proving, that it ſignifies πορνεία, the perſon and the act being not the ſame. And ſo again, when by the Kareans 'tis defined, every thing that is uncovered, which ought to be kept cloſe; that ſtill infers, that it ſignifies the womans ſhame, but not πορνεία, whatſoever that ſignifies. Sect. 102.

As for his third proof out of the Prophets, it infers nothing leſs, than what he would prove from it. For, firſt, that of Ezek. 16. 37. I will uncover ערותך thy nakedneſs, and they ſhall ſee all thy nakedneſs, is directly in the notion of Leviticus for the ſecret parts, the diſcovering of which is a figurative expreſſion; for the bringing one to ſhame, ἐκδικησαι, puniſhing openly, and there is no pretence that it ſhould ſignifie there malitiam, flagitium, vitium, malice, ſin, vice, or if it did, it muſt do it but by a metaphor, as a man's ſin is called his ſhame. Sect. 103.

So ſecondly, that of Nahum 3. 4. I will ſhew the Nations ערותך verenda tua, thy ſhame, 'tis evidently in the former notion; and if it refer to latrocinia, &c. thefts, lyes, murthers, with which Nineveh abounded, it is but by a figure again, as the [ſhewing their ſhame to the Gentiles] is the puniſhing their ſins in their ſight, as in the place even now cited out of Habakuk did appear. Sect. 104.

As for Onkelos's rendring ערוה דבר in Deuteronomy, by tranſgreſſionem aliquam, ſome tranſgreſſion, that ſtill proves not that that tranſgreſſion was fornication, for it might be ſomewhat elſe, and it is clear by Chriſt, who oppoſes his doctrine to that in Deuteronomy, that it was. Sect. 105.

As for the concurrence of the opinions of learned men, Arias Montanus, Scultetus, Grotius, that the paſſage in the Goſpel referred or pertained to the Controverſie of the Schools of Hillel, and Sammai, Firſt, it is evidently contrary to the Text, (and cannot receive aid from any opinion of three learned men) where the Phariſees queſtion, Mat. 19. 7. τί οὖν Μωσῆς, [Why then did Moſes?] is a proof, that they underſtood Chriſt's anſwer to be contradictory to Moſes, and Chriſt's reply is a conceſſion of it: and ſo evidently in the other places. Secondly, if it be granted, that Mat. 19. the Phariſees queſtion was according to Hillel's doctrine, whether divorces were lawfull κατὰ πᾶσαν αἰτίαν, for every cauſe, or quarrel, or diſlike, yet that is no proof, that Chriſt took part with Sammai againſt him, and commanded no more ſtrictneſs, than Sammai maintained. And as that is the onely thing to be proved, ſo I believe there is none of thoſe Authours have affirmed that; or if Scultetus have, his name will add little to Mr. Selden. Sect. 106.

This he again endeavours to prove from the words of Origen upon Matthew. It is a long paſſage, and I cannot think fit to ſet it down at length; when, by that which Mr. Selden hath cited, 'tis clear, that all that Origen doth, is to recite an objection of a Jew againſt Chriſt's words, viz. that the cauſe allowed for divorces in Deuteronomy, was onely that of fornication; and conſequently that Chriſt allowing that one cauſe, did the Jews wrong in ſaying it was for the hardneſs of their hearts that that liberty was indulged them. To which I ſhall onely ſay, That if that Jew were not in the right, there is nothing to be gained from him; and if he were, then firſt was Chriſt in the wrong againſt whom he objects: and ſecondly, Mr. Selden's whole cauſe is fallen to the ground unexpectedly, for if the divorces in Deuteronomy were allowed in Sect. 107. P. 497.

no cauſe, but that of πορνεία fornication, and if res turpis, uncleanneſs, there ſignified that, then queſtionleſs there is no pretence to be had from thence (or from any other Topick of probation) that we Chriſtians may divorce for any other cauſes but adultery. For that Origen there by [πορνεία] underſtands adultery, is preſently [f] confeſt by Mr. Selden: onely he adds, that Origen makes that but an example of other ſins, for which divorces were admitted, which though it no way appear by the words cited by him, yet if it were true, it no way follows, that that example muſt infinitely be extended, or farther than to other ſins of uncleanneſs, inceſt, unnatural villany, &c. to which the word may, and by ſome others hath been extended.

[f] Nec πορνείαν ibi ſignificare vult aliud Origenes atque adulterium.

Sect. 108. And as it will eaſily be granted, that thoſe are all contained under the word πορνεία in the Goſpel; ſo there is no temptation from thence to believe, that other diſtant Sins of what quality ſoever, ſhould be contained under it, much leſs all the cauſes of divorce allowed either by Hillel or Sammai, which are not all affirmed to be ſins.

Sect. 109. Diſquiſivimus hoc tantum nos, p. 4. 7. This is all that is in that Chapter propoſed by Mr. Selden, in favour of this greater liberty, and it was but neceſſary to add, That what was here propoſed, was but by way of diſquiſition, for it is far from proving any thing. I wiſh this may be of force to ſatisfie the inquiry, that what hath ſo diligently been ſought, is not to be found any where.

Sect. 110. But this is not all: For, c. 28. another attempt is made to obtain a greater indulgence and liberty in this matter, by ſurveying the practice and uſage of men, firſt, from Chriſt's time to Conſtantine, then from Conſtantine forward, by theſe two intervals to learn, how the doctrine of Chriſt and the Apoſtles was underſtood.

Sect. 111. But to this I anſwer, Firſt, that the practices of men, even of Chriſtians, are a very infirm proof of the doctrine of the Church in any point, becauſe that which is moſt reſolved to be unlawfull, is yet many times practiſed: and ſecondly, that this method of inquiry, whether into doctrines or practices, by way of hiſtorical diſſertation, if it be partially managed, (by ſetting down what is moſt favourable to the deſired Concluſion, and omitting what is not ſo) is a ready art of infuſing and impoſing any thing on the incautious Reader, without rendring the Authour liable to anſwer for the unconcludingneſs of the Mediums, when they come to be examined. And accordingly it is here made uſe of: For, in that whole firſt interval or period of 300 years; two examples onely Mr. Selden brings of Chriſtian women, who gave Bills of Divorce to their husbands, (one, of her in Juſtin, Apol. 1. who when her husband, being an unbeliever, and a very wicked perſon, had departed from her, τὸ νεβρώδον παρ' ὑμῖν Ῥωμαϊκὸν δοῦσα ἔσχεδεν, ſhe gave him ſuch a Bill of Divorce as the Romans uſe, and was ſeparated: and this about the year of our Lord 150. The other, of Saint Thecla, the Sponſa, or eſpouſed of Thamyris in Iconium, and Saint Paul's diſciple, who, ſaith he, would not marry him, but renounced her eſpouſals.) And having named thoſe two, he then concludes, Firſt, That the Cuſtoms and uſage of this interval, are not ſo expreſly to be found in this matter: and, Secondly, that the way of conjecturing what their practice was, is by the Laws and Sanctions of Princes and Emperours in the ſecond interval, after that Chriſtianity was received into the Roman Empire, there being but a ſmall handfull of writers that preceded, and few of them touching the matter of Divorces. By which means he preſently takes liberty to ſpend the reſt of the Chapter in ſetting down ſeveral Imperial Laws in that matter.

Sect. 112. To this part of his diſcourſe I anſwer briefly by theſe degrees: Firſt, That if two examples of Divorces for other cauſes beſide fornication, were to be met with among Chriſtians in the ſpace of 300 years after Chriſt's interdict, this would be no very new or ſtrange thing, nor argument that it was not deemed to have been prohibited by Chriſt, but on the contrary, it were much more difficult to pitch on any other interdict of Chriſt, which could not appear to be many times more eminently violated, in the hundredth part of that ſpace.

Sect. 113. Secondly, That neither of theſe examples are at all to the preſent purpoſe, theſe being of women giving bills of divorce to their husbands, for which there is no pretence of liberty from Chriſt, no nor under Moſes among the Jews, and not of husbands putting away their wives.

Sect. 114. And thirdly, that even of theſe two examples, the firſt being in caſe not onely of a moſt flagitious, as well as an infidel husband, but alſo of one qui abſceſſerat, which had departed from her, her giving the Bill of Divorce, and being ſeparated from him, is no argument or example of any great liberty, but agreeable to St. Paul's determination, If the unbeliever will depart, let him depart; a believer οὐ δεδούλωται is not inſlaved in ſuch a caſe, 1 Cor. 7. 15. And for the ſecond, that of Thecla, beſides that Mr. Selden gives [t] no great heed to the ſtory, it was (ſaith Baſil of Seleucia that relates it) before marriage, and ſo onely a renouncing the ſponſalia, and refuſing to marry a perſon, that moſt bitterly deteſted Chriſtianity: and ſo Mr. Selden appeareth to acknowledge, when he firſt calls her ſponſa eſpouſed onely, not married, and adds nuptias noluit, ſhe would not marry, and ſponſalibus renunciavit, ſhe renounced the eſpouſals, which ſuppoſeth it to have proceeded no farther.

[t] Hujus hiſtoriolæ fides penes autores ſit. p. 558.

Sect. 115. But then fourthly, that the practice of thoſe times of the firſt interval ſhould beſt be judged of by the Reſcripts of the Emperours of the ſecond interval, this is moſt unreaſonable. 'Tis evident, that thoſe Reſcripts are laws to bind for the future, and not Records to teſtifie for the time paſt; and if, being delivered by Chriſtian Emperours, they did (as Mr. Selden ſaith) reſtrain the liberty formerly uſed, yet ſure that liberty was ſuch as was uſed in time of Paganiſm by Infidels, or elſe by carnal Chriſtians, not ſuch as was owned and taught by the Governours of the Church of Chriſt, which are known to have uſed a greater ſtrictneſs. And ſo there is little pretence or colour to be had from hence, that Chriſt's words were in the Primitive times interpreted to a greater liberty. For if the ſmall handfull, as it is ſtyled, of Chriſtian writers of thoſe firſt 300 years, be compared with the Reſcripts of the Emperours, which are made uſe of after, Firſt, the handfull will not appear very ſmall, or contemptible in that compariſon: and Secondly, it might have been as reaſonable to have enlarged it by taking in the volumes of the Chriſtian Fathers afterward, as to inſiſt on thoſe Reſcripts of the Emperours which were afterward. The onely difference is, that by obſerving this courſe, the reſult would certainly have been this, the thing pretended to, would not have been had: All theſe writers, that ſpeak of it, aſſerting poſitively this one onely cauſe of divorce, that of fornication.

Laſtly

Laſtly, for the Conſtitution of Conſtantine, it is obſervable, Firſt, that it doth not define what ſhall be deemed lawfull in divorces, but onely in what caſe the woman ſhould be allowed a dowry, in what not, and in what caſe the woman ſhould be allowed to marry again; and ſuch indeed uſeth to be the matter of Civil Sanctions, even of Chriſtian Lawgivers, which extend onely to the outer man, inflicting of puniſhments according as the temper of the people requires or permits, and not in defining what is before commanded or forbidden by Chriſt. Secondly, the caſes wherein Divorces are by Conſtantine (I cannot ſay allowed, but) mentioned and foreſeen, as poſſible, do not imply any very great liberty to have been uſed in thoſe times (though alſo thoſe liberties that are moſt uſed among wicked men, are ſufficiently acknowledged to be unlawfull:) For they are but three on the womans ſide; Si mœcha, ſi medicamentaria, ſi conciliatrix, If ſhe be a whore, or a witch, or a bawd, and the firſt and the laſt fall directly under the caſe reſerved by Chriſt, the bawd being preſumed a whore, and ſomewhat more. And for that of witchcraft, or practiſing on the life of the husband by poiſons, &c. (for thoſe may be comprehended under the φάρμακα or medicamenta) although the caſe be ſomewhat changed, 'tis yet but little mollified by that. However, 'tis acknowledged in ſome of the Reſcripts of Chriſtian Emperours, the reſtraints are not made ſtrictly according to Chriſt's model, and therefore there is nothing ſtrange in that of Conſtantine's. Sect. 116.

And the reaſon is plain, becauſe the Imperial Laws were to comprehend all ſorts of men that were in the Empire; and though the Emperour were Chriſtian, and many of his ſubjects alſo, yet 'tis ſufficiently known that all were not, and accordingly to his mixt dominions, the ſtrict Chriſtian Law would not conveniently be adapted. The writings of the Fathers of the Church and Canons of their Councils, which are ſuppoſed to be written peculiarly to Chriſtians, are therefore the onely Records by which we may judge what was deemed the Law of Chriſt, and thoſe I am ſure, count many things unlawfull in this kind, which they acknowledge νόμιμα legal by the Imperial Conſtitutions. Sect. 117.

Of this we have had evidences enough already, and [v] Mr. Selden confeſſing Tertullian, Chryſoſtome, alioſque non paucos, and not a few more, to be of the opinion which the Church hath maintained, will ſave me that pains, eſpecially when he is not able to name any one to the contrary, which I conclude, becauſe he hath not done it. I ſhall but mention two Teſtimonies; one, which the Edict of Anaſtaſius the Emperour, produced by Mr. Selden, in favour of divorces for ſome other cauſes, put me in mind of, out of the Epiſtles of Avitus Alcimus, which were written about that very time, Perſuaſum in Gallia fuiſſe, ſolum adulterium legitimam cauſam eſſe divortii, That the French were perſwaded that adultery was the onely lawfull cauſe of divorce; and accordingly pronounced of fornication, that it is the ſin, propter quod ſolum Deus ſeparari virum permittit à conjuge, For which onely God permits the husband to be ſeparated from his wife. The other is that of Gregory, l. 9. Ep. 39. Si dicunt religionis cauſa conjugia debere diſſolvi, ſciendum eſt, quia etſi hoc lex humana conceſſit, lex divina tamen prohibuit. Per ſe enim veritas dicit, Quos Deus conjunxit, homo non ſeparet, Quæ etiam ait, Non licet dimittere uxorem exceptâ cauſâ fornicationis. Quis ergo huic cœleſti legiſlatori contradicat? If they ſay that for Religion marriages ought to be diſſolved, they muſt know, that although the law of man hath granted this, yet the law of God hath prohibited it. For the truth ſaith, Whom God hath joyned, let no man ſever: and again, It is not lawfull to put away a wife, except for fornication. Who then can contradict this heavenly Law-giver? Sect. 118. [v] p. 555. p. 570. Ep. 49. p. 110.

The Fourth QUÆRE.

Of the Baptizing of Infants.

IN the next place I ſhall proceed to the Baptizing of Infants (meaning thereby the obligation that lies on Chriſtian Parents, and Paſtours, the one to bring their children to Baptiſm, the other not to reject them when they are duly brought) and ſhew you the baſis whereon I conceive it is founded, and ſtandeth in the Church of Chriſt. Sect. 1.

Where firſt it being remembred (what hath in the firſt Diſcourſe been, I conceive, ſufficiently evidenced) that whatſoever Command or Inſtitution hath come from God the Father (by his Angels, or by his Prophets) from Chriſt (either perſonally, or through his ſucceſſours the Apoſtles) is of infallible obligation to all, to whom it was given, (and ſo every Inſtitution of Chriſt's to all Chriſtians) and that the particular manner of conveying it to our knowledge, whether by the writings of the Old and New Teſtaments, or by any other means, is but extrinſecal to any ſuch Precept or Inſtitution of Chriſt's, or his Apoſtles, It will be abundantly ſufficient to the ſatisfying of this Quære, if we ſhall by competent arguments evince, that in the Inſtitution of Baptiſm, as a Sacrament to be continued in the Chriſtian Church, Chriſt and the Apoſtles did not reject infants, but entertain and receive them to it. Sect. 2. Chriſt's inſtitution of Baptiſm.

And the foundation of this eviction may very fitly be laid in the Cuſtomes and Uſages then among the Jews. Sect. 3.

For that the Inſtitutions of Chriſt (who came firſt a Meſſias to the Jews, was born of that Nation, lived regularly under their law, obſerved their pious Cuſtomes (ſome, as the Feaſt of Encœnia, or Dedication of the Altar, 1 Mac. 4. 59. which had not been inſtituted by God, but by the Jews themſelves in time of the Maccabees) and onely meant to reform what was amiſs, and heighten that which was imperfect) were by him drawn from the former practices and uſages of the Jews, ſome mentioned, others not mentioned, in the Old Teſtament, and ſo were lightly changed, and accommodated to his own purpoſes, might eaſily be ſhewed through many, I ſuppoſe, through all particulars. Sect. 4. Founded in Jewiſh cuſtoms.

Sect. 5. Examples of Jewiſh Cuſtoms [a]commodated by Chriſt. Diſciples.

I ſhall not inſiſt on any other, but this of Baptiſm, yet ſhall I mention a few of them. Thus, 1. the calling and receiving of diſciples, or conſtant attendants, is anſwerable to the diſciples of the Prophets among the Jews, who were to attend on, and miniſter unto them. So Joſhua to Moſes, Exod. 24. 13. Eliſha to Elias, 1 King. 19. 2. and generally the ſons of the Prophets, ſo called, not onely as thoſe that were taught by them, but alſo as attendants on them, by that Hebraiſm whereby παῖδες and ὑπηρέται, ſons and ſervants, are of the ſame ſignification. And of theſe it is known, that they were wont to be ſent on their errands, that they went to take up room, and prepare for them: and accordingly when John Baptiſt, which was Chriſt's forerunner, ſaith of himſelf, that he was unworthy to carry his ſhoes, Matt. 3. 11. it is clear, that he refers to the cuſtome of diſciples, who were uſed to ſuch perſonal attendances, and miniſteries, and went before the Prophets. And ſo Chriſt is ſaid to ſend the Seventy, πρὸ προσώπου αὐτοῦ, before his face to every City whither he meant to have it come, Luk. 10. 1. And ſo Peter and John go before him to prepare the Paſſeover, Matt. 16. 17. Thus, ſecondly, was the donation of the Keys of the Kingdom of Heaven, lightly drawn from the conſtituting the Oeconomus over the King's houſe, Iſa. 22. 21. and making him father of the houſe of Judah, by putting the Key of David on his ſhoulder. Thirdly, that of the Sacrament of the Lord's Supper, inſtituted in, and taken from their poſtcœnium and Cup of bleſſing, ſolemnly uſed by them at the cloſe of a Feſtival. Fourthly, the Impoſition of hands in confirmation, and abſolution, and ordination, from the manner both of paternal bleſſing by the uſe of that ceremony, as in Jacob to his children, and of aſſuming to the dignity of an Elder in the Sanhedrin, by the uſe of the ſame ceremony. Fifthly, the title of Apoſtles for deputies and proxies, ſent with Commiſſion or Letters of Credence, Matt. 10. 40. to ſupply Chriſt's place, and act here on earth in his ſtead. Sixthly, that of [a] Biſhops (anſwerable to the חנשיא and ἀρχισυνάγωγος, the Prince and Head of the Sanhedrin or Conſiſtory, and called ἐπίσκοπος, and the מפקד among them, the Overſeer of any publick buſineſs) and the ſame again ſtyled πρεσβύτεροι, Elders, anſwerable to the וקנים Elders, among them, either as ſtewards in the houſe, as Eliezer, Gen. 24. 2. is called πρεσβύτερος τῆς οἰκίας αὐτοῦ, and ἄρχων πάντων τῶν αὐτοῦ, the elder of his houſe, and ruler of all that he had, שליטא ſaith the Jeruſalem Targum, ruler, or adminiſtratour, Gen. 15. 2. or as the rulers of the Tribes, chief of the families, are called Patriarchs, and Elders of Iſrael, Exod. 3. 16, 18. and Captains of thouſands, i. e. rulers of Cities. Seventhly, the Deacons inſtituted by the Apoſtles parallel to the חוינים under the Synagogue, thoſe that provided for the Poor, χειροτονηθοὶ διακονίαι, ordained Curatours, in Joſephus Azanita from the Hebrew name, and from their Office, γαζοφύλακες, treaſurers, in Epiphanius, and διακονικὰς χρείας ἐπιτελοῦντες, they that performed the miniſterial duties, in Philo, and withall waited, and attended on the Elders in the Sanhedrin, as ὑπηρέται or miniſters there. Laſtly, the title of Ἐκκλησία the Church, in both notions of it, both for the People and Rulers of the Church, and thoſe Rulers either to officiate in the ſervice of God, or to govern, from their aſſembling both in their Synagogues to hear and pray, and in their Town-halls to execute judgments. To paſs by theſe, I ſay, and many more, I ſhall onely inſiſt on this one of Baptiſm, or Waſhing, a known Rite ſolemnly uſed among the Jews (as 'tis now among the Chriſtians) for the initiating of Jews and Proſelytes into the Covenant of the Lord, and ſo into the Congregation of the Jews, as among us it is into the new Covenant, and into the Church of Chriſt.

Baptiſm among the Jews.

Sect. 6. [b] Pract. Cat. l. 6. ſect. 4.

Many branches of that Cuſtome there were, which have been [b] elſewhere mentioned. I ſhall here briefly gather them together, and farther teſtifie the truth of thoſe affirmations, which may any way ſeem queſtionable to any. Firſt then, Baptiſm, or waſhing of the whole body, was a Jewiſh ſolemnity, by which the native Jews were entred into the Covenant of God, made with them by Moſes. So ſaith the Talmud. tr. Repud. Iſrael, or the Iſraelites, do not enter into Covenant but by theſe three things, במילה ובטבילה ובהרציות הקרבן by Circumciſion, and Baptiſm, and Peace-offering. So in Gemera ad tit. Cherithoth. c. 2. אבותוכים לא יכנסו לברית אלה במילה וטבלה &c. Your fathers, i. e. the Jews of old time, did not enter into Covenant but by Circumciſion and Baptiſm, &c. and tit. Jabimoth, c. 4. Rabbi Joſhua ſaid, מצינו באימהות שטבלו ולא מלו We find of our mothers, that they were baptized and not circumciſed. So Maimonides tit. Iſuri bia, c. 13. בשלשה דברים נכנסו ישראל לברית &c. By three things the Iſraelites entred into the Covenant, by Circumciſion, Baptiſm and Sacrifice. And ſoon after, What was done to you? i. e. the Jews in univerſum, בטבילה וטבילה והרצאה קרבן Ye were initiated into the Covenant by Circumciſion, Baptiſm and Sacrifice. Nothing can be more clearly affirmed by them.

Baptizing into Moſes, 1 Cor. 10. 1.

Sect. 7. And that is the reaſon, I ſuppoſe, why the Apoſtle, 1 Cor. 10. 1. ſpeaking of the fathers (the Iſraelites that came out of Ægypt) which by God's mighty hand were redeemed to be a peculiar people to himſelf, and thereby entred into Covenant with him (God giving them an eſſay of his receiving them under his wings, by covering them with a cloud, and environing them with the ſea) ſaith, that they were baptized into Moſes in the cloud and in the ſea, ver. 2. i. e. were, (by thoſe two great Solemnities, the cloud that gave them light by night, and a guard by day, and the ſea that was a wall to defend them, and a devouring deep to their enemies) received and initiated into God's Covenant under the conduct of Moſes, as ſince they are wont to be initiated by Baptiſm.

Sect. 8. [c] See Maimonides tit. Iſuri bia, c. 13.

For the confirming of which interpretation, it may be remembred, Firſt, that they that entred into Covenant with God (of which Baptiſm was the ceremony) are by the [c] Jews ordinarily ſaid to be received תחת כנפי השכי ה under the wings of the glory, or majeſtick preſence, i. e. in plain words, under the protection of God, which is metaphorically expreſſed by the ſhadow of his wings. Secondly, that the ground of this metaphor was, God's exhibiting himſelf to his ſervants by the apparition of Angels, and thoſe Angels, both there and elſewhere coming in bright ſhining clouds (whence it is that Exod. 14. in this ſtory are joyned the removing of the cloud, and the removing of the Angel of God, v. 19.) and thoſe clouds hovering over their heads, and ἐπισκιάζουσαι, overſhadowing, Matt. 17. 5. (for which Saint Peter uſeth μεγαλοπρεπὴς δόξα, the excellent glory, 2 Pet. 1. 17. or majeſtick preſence, as the Jews call it) and ἐπιφαίνουσαι, deſcending, or coming upon, or covering them, as an Eagle doth with her wings; or (ὡσεὶ περιστερὰ) as a Dove, Matt. 3. 16. And therefore, thirdly, that Baptiſm being among the Jews, the known Ceremony of ſuch initiation into God's Covenant, under the conduct of Moſes, the overſhadowing of the cloud, and the inviroming of the ſea, which were really the receiving them into God's protection, covenanted, and promiſed from him by Moſes, Exod. 14. 13. &c. are fitly ſaid to be the baptizing them into Moſes (εἰς) in or by this cloud and ſea. And ſo this is a clear interpretation of that obſcure place concerning the Iſraelites in Aegypt, ſuppoſing onely this cuſtome of entring the Jews into the Covenant by Baptiſm (which afterward came in, and was, I ſuppoſe, vulgarly known, when, and long before, the Apoſtle wrote) without which it will not be eaſie to give any probable account of it. For as on one ſide to apply it immediately to Chriſtian Baptiſm will be inconvenient, becauſe it is ſaid diſtinctly to be εἰς τὸν Μωσῆν, into Moſes, ſo to interpret it, with others, of the fathers that were perſonally at Mount Sinai at the time of receiving of the law; and, to that end, to affirm that the ſea is no more than any receptacle of waters, through which they that were to be baptized, were ſaid to paſs, and the cloud either nothing at all, or that wherein God ſpake to Moſes, which is nothing to this purpoſe, will be liable to many more inconveniences, which I ſhall not here make ſtay to ſhew, becauſe it is but incidental to this buſineſs.

Sect. 9. Baptiſm of Proſelytes.

Secondly, as the native Jews were thus entred into the Covenant by Baptiſm: ſo the Proſelytes of the Jews, thoſe that were taken in, as Proſelytes of juſtice or righteouſneſs, as profeſſing or undertaking all their Law (and not onely as Proſelytes of the Gates, to live among them) were received into their Church by Baptiſm alſo. So ſaith the Talmud. tr. Repud. of Jethro, Moſes's father in law, he was made a Proſelyte by Circumciſion, ובטבילה במים and by immerſion, or baptiſm in waters, and the manner of this immerſion is ſaid to be, that they ſhould ſit up to the neck in water, and learn in the while ſome Precepts of the Law both hard and eaſie. So the Gemara ad tit. Cheritoth, c. 2. The Proſelytes entred not into Covenant אלה במילה וטבילה והרצאת דמים but by Circumciſion, Baptiſm, and ſprinkling of blood; and tit. Jabimoth, He is no Proſelyte, unleſs he be circumciſed and baptized, and unleſs he be טביל baptized, he is a Gentile. So Maimonides, tit. Iſuri bia, c. 13. In all ages whenſoever any Gentile was willing to enter into the Covenant, and to be gathered under the wings of the Schechina, or divine majeſty, and to undertake the yoke of the law, צריך מילה ובטבילה והרצאת קרבן he was bound to have Circumciſion, and Baptiſm, and a Peace-offering, and if it were a woman, Baptiſm, and Sacrifice. And again, the ſtranger that is circumciſed, and not baptized, or baptized, and not circumciſed, is not truly a Proſelyte, till he be both. And the Gemara almoſt in the ſame words, tit. Jabimoth, c. 4.

Sect. 10.

A clear teſtimony of this we have in Arrian the Stoick Philoſophers, in his Epictetus, l. 1. c. 9. where the Jewiſh Proſelyte is by him called βεβαμμένος dipp'd, and ἐμβεβὼς taken into their ſect, or religion, and he that is ſo onely in ſhew, not in deed, ψευδοβαπτισμένος, a counterfeit baptized perſon.

Sect. 11. That of the Natives the pattern of the other.

The third thing obſervable in this baptiſm among the Jews, is, that the baptiſm of the native Jews, was the pattern by which the baptiſm of the Proſelytes was regulated, and wherein it was founded. This appears by the arguing and determining of the queſtion in the Gemara, tit. Jabimoth, c. 4. after this manner, Of him that was circumciſed and not baptiſed, Rabbi Eliezer ſaid, that he was a Proſelyte, becauſe, ſaid he, we find of our fathers, (Abraham, Iſaac) that they were circumciſed, but not baptized. And of him that was baptized, and not circumciſed, Rabbi Joſua ſaid, he was a Proſelyte, becauſe, ſaid he, we find of our mothers, that they were baptized, and not circumciſed. But the wiſe men pronounced, that till he were both baptized and circumciſed, he was not a Proſelyte: where the example of the Jews was the rule by which the obligation of the Proſelytes is meaſured. And the ſame is evident by the reaſon rendred by the Jewiſh writers, of their baptizing the Proſelytes, which is generally taken by them from that command, Numb. 15. 15. One Ordinance ſhall be both for you of the congregation, and alſo for the ſtranger (i. e. הגר the Proſelyte) that ſojourneth with you, an Ordinance for ever in your generations, as ye are, ſo ſhall the ſtranger be before the Lord, one law, and one manner (i. e. one νόμος, and one δικαίωμα, Luke 1. 6. one law for moral duties, and one law for rituals or ceremonies) ſhall be for you, and for the ſtranger that ſojourneth with you. Thus the Gemara tit. Cheritoth, c. 2. foundeth the circumciſing and baptizing of Proſelytes upon thoſe words, As to you, ſo ſhall it be to the Proſelyte. So Maimonides, tit. Iſuri bia, c. 13. In like manner, through all ages, as oft as a Gentile will enter into the Covenant, and receive the yoke of the law upon him, it was neceſſary that circumciſion and baptiſm ſhould be uſed on him, beſide ſprinkling of the Sacrifice, and if it were a woman, Baptiſm and Sacrifice; According as it is ſaid (Numb. 15. 15.) As to you, ſo alſo to the Proſelytes, &c.

Sect. 12. The original of it among the Jews.

Here the original of that Cuſtome, as far as concerns the Proſelytes, doth clearly appear, viz. that Command of God, Numb. 15. 15. founded in a former Cuſtome of baptizing the native Jews: As for the original of it among the Jews themſelves, their writers deduce it as anciently, as from before the giving the law in Mount Sinai, Exod. 19. 10. when God, to prepare them for the receiving of it, commands Moſes, Go unto the people, and ſanctifie them to day and to morrow, and let them waſh their clothes. So ſaith Maimonides, Iſuri bia, c. 13. But Baptiſm was in the deſart, before the giving of the law, according as it is ſaid, Thou ſhalt ſanctifie them, &c. And that agreeable to what we reade of Jacob to his houſhold, Gen. 35. 2. Put away the ſtrange gods that are among you, and be clean, and change your garments. So that as the Covenant made with Abraham, was ſealed by Circumciſion, ſo the giving of the law, which was the Covenant made by God, by the mediation of Moſes, with all the people, was thought to be ſealed by Baptiſm: And that, the waſhing, if not of the whole, yet of ſome parts of the body (ordinarily called קרושין ſanctifications) and the waſhing of their garments alſo. According to which we know it was anciently obſerved among Chriſtians, that Baptiſm ſhould be ſolemnized with the ceremony of clean and white garments: As the Dominica in Albis is a teſtimony.

Sect. 13. The waſhing of new born babes.

Beſide this original of the Jewiſh Baptiſm, referring to the time and occaſion of it, Another may be obſerved of the ſignificancy of this ceremony, viz. that it was taken from the Cuſtome of waſhing babes new born. Of that Cuſtome among other nations, we have many Records, that of Ælian of the Δαρδανεῖοι will ſerve for all, Τοὺς λαυσθαι μόνον (ſaith he, Var. Hiſt. l. 4. c. 1.) ἐξ ἀδίνων, γαμοῦντας, καὶ τεθνηκότας, They are waſhed but thrice onely, from the pangs, when they marry, and when they are dead. The firſt of which, being precedent to marriage, as that is to death, is not to be conceived to belong to the woman, that is newly paſt her travail, but to the child that is newly born. And ſo Stobæus hath it expreſly out of Nicolaus (Damaſcenus, I ſuppoſe) ὅταν γένωνται, &c. when they are born, p. 66. So Chalcidius in Plat. Timæ. Aqua calida confoventur recens nati, children new born are cheriſht with warm water, refreſht and cleanſed together, p. 257. And ſo of the Cuſtome among the Jews, Ezekiel is expreſs, c. 16. 4. In the day wherein thou waſt born, thy navel was not cut, neither waſt thou waſhed with water. And that this cuſtome of waſhing new born children, and not any other ſort of purification, was it, that this Baptiſm of native Jews and Proſelytes referred to, may may appear by that which in the Gemara is ſaid of the baptized Proſelyte, that he was made כקטן שנולד דמי as an Infant new born.

Sect. 14. Having thus far inſiſted on this Cuſtome of Baptiſm among the Jews, theſe things are farther obſervable of it.

Sect. 15. The Infants of Proſelytes were baptized. Firſt, that of the Proſelytes 'tis confeſſed, that not onely they that were of age, but alſo their infant children were baptized. So the Gemara Babyl. tit. Chetub. c. 1. גר קטן מטבילין אותו they baptize the little or young ſtranger or proſelyte. And the Gloſs adds, that the Rulers of the Conſiſtory take care of it, and ſo are made to him a father. And Maimonides in the forecited place, tit. Iſuri bia, c. 13. They baptize the infant or little ſtranger upon the knowledge or underſtanding of the houſe of judgment, or the Congregation, i. e. on their deſire in behalf of the children, and their promiſe to let them know what they have undertaken. Agreeably to that of Saint Auguſtine, of the Church among us Chriſtians, Accommodat illis mater Eccleſia aliorum pedes ut veniant, aliorum cor ut credant, aliorum linguam ut fateantur. Our mother the Church lends them other mens feet, heart and tongue; that they may come, and believe, and confeſs, and ſo be capable of baptiſm.

Sect. 16. Baptiſm among the Jews not iterated. Secondly, that this ceremony of Baptiſm among the Jews, as that other of Circumciſion, was never repeated but received once for all the inſuing life. And this among them is acknowledged by all as unqueſtionable. To which our Saviour ſeems to refer, Joh. 13. 10. when he tells Peter, that ὁ λελουμένος he that hath been waſhed, i. e. once waſhed all over, needs not, ſave to waſh his feet; needs not to be waſhed all over any more, but is ὅλος καθαρός, whole clean, the νίψις will for the reſt ſerve the turn, the daily waſhing of hands and feet, which they call קרושים ſanctifications, the purifying more and more daily the frailties and imperfections, and lapſes of weak nature, thoſe feet of the man (σαρκὸς ἀσθένειαν, ſaith Eulogius) which are ſtill behind after converſion.

Sect. 17. The Proſelytes regeneration by Baptiſm. Thirdly, that they that were thus received as Proſelytes by Baptiſm, put off their former relations of kindred, &c. To which ſurely our Saviour refers, when he talks of leaving father and mother, Mark. 10. 29. And Tacitus the Hiſtorian, Nec quicquam prius imbuuntur quàm exuere patriam, parentes, liberos, fratres vilia habere, their Proſelytes are firſt taught, after renouncing the gods, to put off their countrey, parents, children, brethren, to deſpiſe them all. And the latter Jews have a ſaying, that he that hath married his own ſiſter, or entred any the moſt inceſtuous bands, by becoming a proſelyte ceaſeth to have that near relation of blood to her, and may now live with her, as with a wife: which falſe ſuperſtructure in them, is yet a teſtimony of the truth, whereon it is falſly founded by them.

Sect. 18. Fourthly, that they that were thus baptized, were ſaid to be born again; and that, as if born of a new mother, as it is oft ſaid in the Talmud, to which our Saviour refers, when he talks of regeneration (of which ſaith Saint Paul, Baptiſm is the Laver) of being born again from above of water, &c. John 3. 35. And this was ſo vulgar a notion among the Jews, that v. 10. Chriſt wonders at Nicodemus, that he underſtood it not: Art thou a ruler in Iſrael and knoweſt not theſe things?

Sect. 19. The application of all this to the Chriſtian Baptiſm. That theſe ſo many things obſerved of the Jewiſh Baptiſm, were really accommodated by Chriſt to this rite of our initiation to Chriſtian Religion, there is as little reaſon for us (that ſee the foot-ſteps of them in the New Teſtament, and the continual practice of the Church) to doubt, as, that a picture was taken from that face, which it reſembleth to the life. And then by this one means we ſhall have a clear foundation of all that is at this day practiſed in the Church of God in this matter of Baptiſm: Firſt, for the receiving all that come into that profeſſion from heatheniſm, by this rite or ceremony. Secondly, all thoſe that are born within the pale of the Church. Thirdly, their infant children, being undertaken for by Godfathers, who repreſent the Congregation. Fourthly, the never-iterating this ceremony, but (in caſe of falling into ſin after Baptiſm) ſubſtituting Repentance and Abſolution for it. Fifthly, the propriety of that phraſe ſo ſolemnly received into the Church, of baptiſmal regeneration, new birth, &c. noting thereby the goodneſs of God, to make this new Covenant of Mercy with us, and the ſtrict obligation that lies on all that are baptized, by that grace of God there made over to them, to walk in newneſs of life.

Sect. 20. The example of circumciſion. By all this appears, Firſt, how little needfull it will be to defend the Baptiſm of Chriſtian Infants, from the law of circumciſing the Infants among the Jews, the foundation being far more fitly laid in that other of Jewiſh Baptiſm, a ceremony of initiation for all, eſpecially for proſelytes, as well as that, and whereas that of circumciſion belonged onely to one, this other being common to both ſexes. And yet from that example of circumciſion among them, thus much muſt needs be gained to our preſent deſign, that the child's not being able to underſtand the vow of Baptiſm, doth no way prejudice the baptizing of ſuch; for if it did, it muſt neceſſarily be an objection againſt the circumciſing the Jewiſh child at eight days old, who could then no more underſtand the Covenant, of which that was made the Sign, nor the wickedneſs that the entring into the Covenant obliged to abſtain from, than the Chriſtian Infant now can, and yet (under pain of exciſion) was commanded to be circumciſed, which being ſo far vindicated from being unreaſonable and incongruous, by that example of circumciſion, which is allowed of by all diſſenters, there will be little reaſon to fear the objections from Reaſon, or, upon that ſcore, to doubt of the practice of that, which is ſo reaſonable, when it hath, beſide the example of baptiſm among the Jews (from which it is immediately deduced) ſo adequately proportionable, and directly parallel to it.

Sect. 21. Of baptizing a whole houſhold, Acts 16. 13. So again, ſecondly, the mention in Scripture of the Apoſtles baptizing a whole houſhold at once, Act. 16. 13. is not of it ſelf demonſtrative, or convincing: becauſe, that wider phraſe may poſſibly be reſtrained to thoſe that heard and believed in that family. And although, when the cuſtome of the Jews (whence this Chriſtian rite ſo lately came) is remembred, that the Proſelyte's children, as well as thoſe of age, were baptized, and that that was ſo ordinarily known, that it needed not be more diſtinctly and particularly affirmed, there will be little temptation to doubt, but that the Gaoler's infants, if he had any, were compriſed under the πανσὶ ἀυτοῦ, all his, and were baptized alſo; (and ſo Stephanas's infants under the οἶκος, 1 Cor. 1. 16. houſhold of Stephanas, 1 Cor. 1. 16.) yet becauſe it is not certain of either of theſe, that they had any ſo young in their family, therefore 'tis confeſſed, that no concluding argument can be deduced from thence, and unconcludent arguments were in many reſpects much better waved, than made uſe of againſt gainſayers.

But

But then thirdly, that ſpeech of our Saviour, Matt. 19. 14. and Mar. 10. 6. which concludes that the παιδία or little children may, and muſt be permitted to be brought by others to Chriſt, and being ſo brought, yet are ſaid to come to him (ἐνδεῖν πρὸς, the very words of which proſelyte is made) and 2. his bleſſing them by impoſition of hands: and 3. his affirming that the Kingdom of God, the Church here, and Heaven hereafter, conſiſts of ſuch as they, are a conjunction of particulars, which although they come not home diſtinctly to baptizing of Infants (becauſe it is not affirmed he did baptize them) are yet a farther proof of the uncharitableneſs and unreaſonableneſs of the main objections (taken from the Infants not hearing, not believing, &c.) which are pretended to have force againſt this practice. For if thoſe that cannot come, may, and muſt be permitted, to be brought by others to Chriſt; if, at the youngeſt, they are capable of receiving bleſſing from him; if they are ſuch, as of whom peculiarly the kingdom of God conſiſts, then what hinders, but they may be capable of the early charity of the Church, in bringing and admitting them to baptiſm (though they do not underſtand the vow) and receive benefit and advantage by partaking of it? And the rather, when it is remembred, that Chriſt, that baptized not at all, John 4. 2. and ſo thought not fit to baptize theſe, did yet afford that ceremony to them, which in the ancient Church was preparatory and antecedent to Baptiſm; viz. impoſition of hands and bleſſing them. This, Clemens, or the Authour of the Conſtitutions, mentions, l. 7. c. 39. where having ſet down the ſeverals wherein the Catechumenus was to be inſtructed, he adds, but let him that lays on hands adore God, &c. And this, I ſuppoſe, it is that Clemens Alexandrinus refers to, Pædag. l. 3. c. 11. in theſe words, τίνι γὰρ ὁ πρεσβύτερος ἐπιτίθησι χεῖρας; τίνα δὲ εὐλογήσει; On whom doth the Presbyter lay hands? whom ſhall he bleſs? meaning, moſt probably, in that place, not the nuptial benediction, but the ſolemnity with which the Catechiſt bleſſed thoſe, that were catechized, preparatory to their Baptiſm. And ſo ſaith Euſebius of Conſtantine, l. 4. that to prepare for his Baptiſm, ὡμολογημένων τε καὶ χειροθεσίας εὐχῶν ἠξιώθη, He made profeſſion, and then was vouchſafed thoſe prayers, which were given by impoſition of hands. And thus the Holy Ghoſt's falling upon Cornelius's family, Acts 10. 44. (which was wont to be an effect of the Apoſtles impoſition of hands, but of which we have no mention there) is by Saint Peter lookt on as an evidence, that God had accepted theſe Gentiles, and ſo that they were fit to be baptized, ver. 47. can any forbid water, &c.

Sect. 22. Chriſt's receipion of little children. Matt. 19. 14. Mar. 10. 6. John 4. 2. Impoſition of hands preparatory to Baptiſm.

But there is no need of laying much weight on this, or any the like more imperfect ways of probation. The whole fabrick being ſufficiently ſupported, and built on this Baſis (the cuſtomary Baptiſm among the Jews) and that diſcernible to be ſo, if we conſider it firſt negatively, then poſitively.

Sect. 23. The true Baſis of Infant-Baptiſm. 1. Negatively, that Firſt, negatively, that Chriſtian baptiſm, which is an inſtitution of Chriſt's, lightly changed from the Jewiſh cuſtome of receiving of Proſelytes, by him appointed in his life time, and ſettled a little before his Aſcenſion, hath nothing in the pattern whence it is copied out, nothing in the copy it ſelf, as it is ſet down in the New Teſtament, i. e. in the words of the Inſtitution, or in his or the Apoſtles practice, which doth any way exclude the Chriſtians children from being part of that indefinite number, that ought to be baptized, or for whom baptiſm was inſtituted by Chriſt.

Sect. 24. Chriſt's inſtitution of Baptiſm excludes not Infants.

That there is nothing excluſive of them in the pattern (the Jewiſh cuſtome of baptiſm) hath been ſufficiently evidenced by the ſeveral branches of that, already inſiſted on. And in the New Teſtament, I cannot foreſee any words that may come under ſuſpicion of doing ſo, but thoſe of Matt. 28. 19. Go teach all Nations, baptizing them, &c. And thoſe words being duly weighed, are far from doing ſo. For the phraſe which is there uſed in the Original, is a ſingular one, not duly expreſt by our Engliſh [Teach.] It is μαθητεύσατε, make diſciples, or receive into diſcipleſhip all nations, baptizing them in the name, &c. making this form of baptiſm their ceremony of receiving them. You may ſee the word explained in a parallel phraſe, Joh. 4. 1. The Phariſees heard that Jeſus makes more diſciples and baptizeth, than John, μαθητὰς ποιεῖ, καὶ βαπτίζει, where to make diſciples, and baptize, is all one with μαθητεύσατε βαπτίζοντες, where the baptizing being immediately annexed to the making or receiving diſciples, and the receiving diſciples not ſuppoſing any precedent inſtruction, but looking wholly on it as ſubſequent (in like manner, as in this place, ver. 20. διδάσκοντες [teaching] follows after βαπτίζοντες baptizing) all that are thus brought and receiv'd ad diſcipulatum, to be for the future inſtructed and inſtituted in the Chriſtian faith, may ſurely be received by baptiſm, the ceremony which is there preſcribed by Chriſt, with which to receive diſciples.

Sect. 25. Objection from Matt. 28. 19. Anſwered. Μαθητεύειν.

To which purpoſe I ſhall (in paſſing) add this one obſervation; 1 Pet. 3. 21. Baptiſm is defined to be ἡ ἀγαθῆς συνειδήσεως ἐπερώτημα εἰς τὸν θεὸν, we render it, the anſwer, but it is rather, the queſtion of a good conſcience to, or toward God. That ἐπερωτᾶν ſignifies to ask, or demand, and not to anſwer, is as certainly known, as that quærere and inquirere, to inquire, doth ſo ſignifie, and ſo it is uſed, Matth. 12. 10. and 16. 1. Mark 11. 29. Luke 17. 20. Joh. 18. 20. Rom. 10. 20. And there is no one place where it can poſſibly be otherwiſe taken. One thing onely there is peculiar ſometimes in the uſe of the word, which differenceth it from ordinary queſtions, that it is oft uſed for ſuch a queſtioning, as we mean by conſulting, a conſulting God, conſulting the Oracle, i. e. making addreſs, asking counſel of him. So Hoſ. 4. 12. where we reade, My people ask counſel of their ſtocks; the Greek hath, ἐν συμβόλοις αὐτῶν ἐπερώτων. So Heſychius, ἐρωτησόμεθα, πυθώμεθα, rendring it by that word which is ordinarily uſed for conſulting the Oracle, and from whence Apollo had his title of Pytho, and the Diviners of Pythoneſſes. So Iſa. 65. 1. (and out of it Rom. 10. 20.) their not hoping for deliverance out of Antiochus's hand, and conſequently not ſeeking to, conſulting, applying, addreſſing themſelves to God about it, is meant by their not asking, or enquiring of God. And accordingly in that place of Saint Peter, the meaning of this definition or deſcription of baptiſm will be, that baptiſm is the coming and ſeeking to God as to the Oracle, to inquire for the whole future life, applying ones ſelf to God for his directions for all the future actions, with a, Lord, what wilt thou have me to doe? or, Good Maſter, what ſhall I doe to inherit eternal life? This is ἐπερώτημα εἰς τὸν θεὸν (but that including a good, and an upright conſcience, or [d] γνησία προαίρεσις, a genuine ſincere purpoſe to doe what is there required of him.) And accordingly Saint Cyprian hath interrogatio baptiſmi, Ep. 76. and 80. the asking or inquiring of baptiſm. From whence all that I have to conclude to the preſent purpoſe, is onely this not that baptizing of Infants is there ſpoken of, or ſo much as intimated by Saint Peter, but) that the proper ſignification of baptiſm, is the entring a diſciple, initiating a proſelyte, and doth no way prerequire actual inſtruction, but conſiſts in coming to Chriſt, and his Church to receive it, and obey it for the future: which though no grown man can be be ſaid to doe with a good reſolution, or good conſcience, unleſs he have an explicit or implicit faith of ſome part of the Goſpel, or at leaſt ſome grounds of piety toward God, which muſt make him content to be a diſciple of Chriſt, yet of children it is certain, that they may be thus brought by the care of their parents to this, as to other ſchools or diſcipleſhips, and delivered up to be ſcholars, before they know one letter, or have any actual willingneſs to acquire any knowledge. And thus we know Chriſt's calling and receiving Philip to diſcipleſhip, John 1. 44. did not ſuppoſe him to be preinſtructed by Chriſt; for there, after Chriſt's finding him, the next thing is his ſaying to him, follow me. And when the Jews, Exod. 19. 8. aſſumed to obey all the Commandments of God, which he ſhould give them, we do not ſuppoſe that the Commandments had been formerly given them, but were to follow, c. 20. In brief, the one thing prerequired to a diſciple (as to being [e] capable of Chriſt's miracles) is τὸ ἐπιτήδειον ἢ ὑπακοῆς, the readineſs to obey, and receive what is delivered, and a non-reſiſtence is ſome degree of that: and though the child which cannot obey, cannot be ſaid to have at preſent any of this, yet the earlier he is received into Chriſt's School, the Church (and we know from that place of Matth. 28. that baptiſm is the ſolemn ceremony of that) the ſurer he is to be prepoſſeſt with Chriſtian knowledge, and to receive thoſe infuſions, while he hath the leaſt prejudices and obſtructions againſt them. And that is the ground of haſtening infants to diſcipleſhip.

Learning is not prerequired to diſcipleſhip.

John 1. 44.

[e] Jobius in Phot. μυριοβ.

Sect. 27. To this may be added in the ſecond place, that his receiving of diſciples was the receiving of proſelytes to the Covenant and Faith of Chriſt, a diſciple and a proſelyte being perfectly all one, ſave onely that the latter denotes a coming from ſome other Nation or Country, which difference hath no place in this matter, where the diſciples are ſpecified to be received from all Nations.

Sect. 28. Infants capable of Proſelytiſm or reception into Covenant. Thirdly, that Infant children are not by their years rendred uncapable of reception to Proſelytiſm, i. e. of entring into this or any other Covenant, when by their parents, or the congregation, they are brought to it. That they are not uncapable, may appear by that example forementioned of the Jews, who received the Infant children of the Proſelytes, upon the deſire of the Parents, and the profeſſion of the congregation, and accordingly baptizing them alſo. Secondly, by parity of reaſon taken from the Jewiſh Natives, who entred and were admitted into Covenant with God, the infants as well as men. So Deut. 29. 10. Ye ſtand this day before the Lord your God, your Captains of Tribes, your Elders, and your Officers, with all the men of Iſrael, your little ones, your wives, and thy ſtranger —— That thou ſhouldſt enter into covenant with the Lord thy God. Where the little ones are part of the number of thoſe that enter into covenant with God, and ſo may enter into this covenant made in Chriſt, by the parity of Reaſon. And, thirdly, by the origination of the word Proſelytes (from προσελθεῖν) they that come unto Chriſt, which is the onely thing which Chriſt mentions concerning little children, Suffer little children to come unto me, and forbid them not: which infers their capacity of Proſelytiſm, and the next words ſuppoſe them particularly qualified for it: for of ſuch is the kingdom of God; They, and ſuch whoſe humility and other qualifications reſemble them moſt perfectly to children, are the perſons of whom the Chriſtian Church is to be conſtituted.

Sect. 29. All which being ſuppoſed, viz. that there is nothing diſcernible from the nature of Jewiſh baptiſm (wherein the Chriſtian is founded) nothing in Chriſt's inſtitution of it, which can exclude the Chriſtians infant children from baptiſm, but all the circumſtances concurring moſt favourably to the reception of them, there is now but one thing wanting to remove all doubt in this matter, viz. Chriſt's intention in this. And the way to evidence that, will be the opinion and ſenſe that the Apoſtles (who were acquainted with Chriſt's purpoſe, and cannot be imagined to have miſunderſtood his words) had of the intention of Chirſt to include Infants in that inſtitution of baptiſm for all Nations, and not to exclude them from it.

Sect. 30. The poſitive part of the Baſis of Infant Baptiſm. The Apoſtles practice evidenced two ways. And this is the ſecond and poſitive part of the Baſis, whereon, I conceive, the Baptiſm of Infants to be founded in the Church. And that this was the Apoſtles ſenſe of Chriſt's words, and opinion of his Inſtitution, will appear by their own uſage and practice, two ways teſtified unto us. Firſt, by one conſiderable remain or footſtep of it, in Saint Paul's Epiſtle to the Corinthians. Secondly, by the practice of the firſt and pureſt ages of the Church, which received Infants to baptiſm, and either, by ſo doing, teſtifie the Apoſtolical uſage, tranſcribed by them, or elſe farther affirm, that they received it by tradition from the Apoſtles. And the brief clearing of theſe two evidences, is all that I ſhall think neceſſary to add for the aſſerting the poſitive part of this doctrine. What elſe may be fit to be taken in, will be added more properly by way of anſwer to the Objections which are producible againſt it.

Sect. 31. And firſt, the remain or footſtep of the Apoſtolical practice, is, A reaſoning of Saint Paul's, 1 Cor. 7. which ſuppoſeth it then received, and known in the Church (at the writing of that Epiſtle) that Chriſtians children were received to Baptiſm. The ſum of which will be beſt diſcerned by the ſetting down a few verſes, and a brief Paraphraſe on them.

1 Cor. 7. 12. explained.

12. If any brother hath a wife that believeth not and ſhe be pleaſed to dwell with him, let him not put her away.

If any Chriſtian husband hath an heathen wife, and ſhe be deſirous to continue with him, he ought not to put her away, unbelief being no ſufficient cauſe of Divorce by the Law of Chriſt.

13. And the woman which hath an husband that believeth not, and if he be pleaſed to dwell with her, let her not leave him.

And ſo in like manner for the Chriſtian wife, that is married to an Infidel, if he be deſirous to live with her, let her by no means ſeparate from him.

14. For the unbelieving husband [f] hath been ſanctified by the wife, and the unbelieving wife hath been ſanctified by the husband: elſe were your children unclean, but now are they holy.

For (beſide the command of Chriſt, Matth. 5. 32. which obligeth to this) other advantages there are of the believer's living with the unbeliever, worth conſidering. For by this means it hath oft come to paſs, that the unbelieving party hath been brought to the faith by the company and converſation of the believer; and, conſidering the efficacy of good example, 1 Pet. 3. 1. and ſeaſonable exhortation and inſtruction, on preſumption of the great zeal (and conſequent endeavours and diligence) that by the Laws of Chriſtianity the husband will have to the eternal good of any ſo near him, as a wife is, there is great reaſon of hope, that ſtill it may be ſo, that their living together may produce this effect in the unbeliever, and the intuition of that (more than poſſible) effect, may reaſonably move the Chriſtian party not to forſake the other voluntarily. And this one conſideration, viz. the probability that the converſation of the believer, 1 Pet. 3. 1. ſhould gain, i. e. bring the unbeliever to the faith, and the reaſonable preſumption that it will be ſo, is the reaſon why the young children of Chriſtians, which cannot as yet be deemed believers, are yet admitted to Baptiſm, becauſe by their living in the family with Chriſtian parents, they probably will, and by the obligation lying on the parents, ought to be brought up in the faith, and kept from heathen pollutions; and the Church requiring and receiving promiſe from the Parents, doth reaſonably preſume they will. And upon this ground it is, that, though the children of Chriſtians are, yet the children of heathens are not admitted to Baptiſm.

That this is the true importance of the Apoſtle's words, and force of his arguing, doth for the former part of it appear evident; Firſt, by the word ἡγίασται hath been ſanctified, which muſt needs refer to ſome paſt, known examples, and experiences of this kind, or elſe there could be no reaſonable account given of the Apoſtle's ſetting it in the preter tenſe. Secondly, by the phraſe ἐν τῇ γυναικὶ, by, or through the wife. This the preposition [ἐν] ſo ordinarily ſignifies, that it cannot need to be farther teſtified, (and in this notion it is, that we here take it) whereas the notion, which by oppoſers is here affixt to it, that it ſhould ſignifie to (that to, which is a ſign of the dative caſe, ſanctified to the wife, (as meat to the believer) made lawfull to her to live with,] is never once found to belong to it, in the New Teſtament, nor can with any tolerable congruity, or Grammatical analogy be affixt to it. All the places that are produced for this ſenſe, are commonly miſtaken. So Matth. 17. 12. [ἐποίησαν ἐν αὐτῷ] is not fecerunt ei, they have done to him, but on him, or againſt him: ſo as ἐν is uſed for εἰς, which is an ordinary acception of it. So Act. 4. 12. There is no name δεδομένον ἐν ἀνθρώποις, it is not [given to men] but among men. And that is an ordinary notion of ἐν, for among, εἰ θεὸς ἐν ἡμῖν, is God among us? and χριστὸν ἐν ὑμῖν, Chriſt among us; and many the like. So 1 Cor. 7. 15. God hath called us, ἐν εἰρήνῃ· It is not to, as the note of a dative caſe, but unto peace, as ἐν is again taken for εἰς. So Gal. 1. 16. to reveal his own Son ἐν ἐμοὶ· It is not [to me] but, [by, or through me to others] as it follows, that I might preach him, and when it there follows, ἐν τοῖς ἔθνεσιν, it is not [to, but again, among the Gentiles.] And 2 Pet. 1. 5. χορηγήσατε ἐν τῇ πίστει ὑμῶν ἀρετὴν, is, add unto your faith vertue, &c. in the notion of ἐν for εἰς, Unto your faith, or over and above that, ἐπιχορηγήσατε ἀρετὴν, ſuperadd vertue, or fortitude, or conſtancy, that which in this time of perſecution and ſcandal of the croſs, they ſtood ſo much in need of. And ſo ſtill the rendring it [to the Wife] will be without any one example, and the turning it into quite another phraſe, as if it were γυναικὶ without ἐν; which to doe without any neceſſity or reaſon, (ſave onely δουλεύειν ὑποθέσει, to ſerve the oppoſer's turn upon the place, and ſupport his falſe opinion) muſt needs be very unreaſonable. Thirdly, this appears moſt irrefragably, by the expreſs words added on this argument, ver. 16. where [the unbeliever's having been ſanctified by the believer] (uſed as an argument why they ſhould live together) is farther explained by theſe words of an undoubted perſpicuous ſenſe, For what knoweſt thou, O wife, whether thou ſhalt ſave thy husband? Or how knoweſt thou, O husband, whether thou ſhalt ſave thy wife? where the word σώζειν [ſave] which ordinarily ſignifies to reduce (or as it is 1 Pet. 3. 1. κερδῆσαι to gain) to repentance from heatheniſm, or wicked life, is ſet parallel to ἁγιάζειν, ſanctifying, and makes it clear, what was meant by it.

Sect. 32. The confirmation of this interpretation, In the former,

Which being once yielded to be the true meaning of the firſt part, there will then be little reaſon to doubt, but that this, of the admiſſion of the Chriſtian children to baptiſm on this ſcore, is the importance of the latter part: That, and no other, being it, which exactly accords with the former reaſoning, and it being not imaginable, that this ſhould be here added in that argumentative ſtyle [ἐπεὶ ἄρα, whereas, (or, for) elſe were, &c.] if it were not an inforcing of the foregoing poſition thus proved by him.

Sect. 33.

What is thought fit to be brought for the eluding, and avoiding this interpretation, will be moſt fitly conſidered anon, in anſwer to the Anabaptiſts Plea. Meanwhile, for the confirming of it, it may be remembred, what ἅγιος, holy, is known to ſignifie in the ſacred dialect, not onely an inherent, but a relative holineſs, being ſeparate, or ſet apart to God, diſcriminated from common, ordinary things, or perſons, and as that belongs to higher degrees of ſeparation, the office of a Prophet, or the like, ſo the loweſt degree of it is that of being received to be members of the Church, into which all are initiated by baptiſm. And accordingly, all viſible profeſſours, and not onely thoſe that are ſincerely ſuch, are in Ezek. 9. 2. the holy ſeed, and in the Epiſtles of the Apoſtles called ἅγιοι, holy.

Sect. 34. And in the latter part of it.

And ſecondly, how the word ἀκάθαρτα, unclean, is uſed by Saint Peter, Acts 10. 14. for thoſe that muſt not (as he conceived) be received into the Church, as [God's having cleanſed] is God's reputing them fit to be partakers of that privilege. Whereby it appears, how fitly, receiving, and not-receiving to baptiſm, may be expreſſed by thoſe phraſes. Thirdly, how the word קדש, which is ordinarily to ſanctifie, doth among the Jews (whence this word ἅγια is taken) ſignifie to waſh (as when the High-Prieſt's waſhing his hands and his feet ten times on the day of Expiation, is called עשרת קדושין ten ſanctifications, Joma, c. 3. ſect. 3. which being the word which denotes the waſhing ſome part of the body, may perhaps be an intimation, that the Primitive Baptiſms were not always immerſions of the whole body, but that ſprinkling of ſome part, the literal importance of the קדושין ſanctifications, might be ſufficient.

Sect. 35.

Fourthly, it is known of the legal uncleanneſſes, contrary to thoſe their ſanctifications, that they were the cauſe of removing men from the Congregation, they that were ſo, ἀκάθαρτοι, unclean, might not partake of the privileges of the Temple, till they were waſhed and ſanctified, and that is proportionable alſo to the notion here given of it, that the Chriſtian's children are holy, i. e. not inherently (they are not capable of that) but, in the account of God and men, capable of ſeparation for the ſervice of God, of being entred into the Church, into Covenant, which denominates men holy, (as the Gentiles, as long as they were out of it, were unclean and unholy, Acts 10.) Now are they holy, i. e. it is the preſent practice of the Church, that Apoſtolical Church of Saint Paul's time, to admit to Baptiſm ſuch Infant children of parents, of whom one is Chriſtian, though not of others. And to put all out of queſtion, the Ancient Fathers, which certainly tainly knew the sacred dialect, call Baptism, Sanctification. So Cyprian, Ep. 59. Eum qui natus est, baptizandum, & sanctificandum, He that is born, must be baptized and sanctified; where baptizing, is sanctifying of Infants. So Greg. Naz. Orat. 40. Edit. Bill. p. 658, Κρεῖττον ἁγιασθῆναι ἀγιασθέντας, ἢ ἀνιάσθην ἀπελθεῖν, 'Tis better to be sanctified without sense of it, i. e. baptized in infancy, when they are not sensible of it, than to depart, or dye without the seal of baptism. And again, p. 648. ὃν βούλεσθε ἁγιάσθω, let him be sanctified from the Infancy, i. e. baptized then. And many the like.

Sect. 37. This passage then being thus interpreted, is a clear proof of the point in hand. And were not this the importance of it, there were no privilege imaginable, no sanctity which could be attributed to the Infants of Christians, which would not belong to the Infants of heathens also, which yet is here directly affirmed of the one, and denied of the other by the Apostle. And as this evidently concludes such a custome, known and acknowledged among Christians at that time: so it is directly the thing that the Jewish practice, in which Christ founded his institution, hath laid the foundation of, in baptizing Proselytes and their children, and to which the Primitive Church conformed. And so though that Judaical practice, taken alone, were not deemed any demonstrative evidence, that Christ thus instituted his baptism for the Gentiles, yet being taken in conjunction with this testimony of the Apostolical practice, and the Primitive usage, it brings all the weight with it, that a divine testimony interpreted by practice can afford: which is as great as any such matter can be capable of.

Sect. 38. Testimonies of Apostolick practice. It remains then that I proceed to the Testimonies of the Ancient Christian writers, who have mentioned this, either as a practice of the Church, known in the first times, or moreover as delivered them from the Apostles.

Sect. 39. Justin Martyr. And first we have the words of Justin Martyr, Resp. ad Orthod. or whoever wrote that ancient piece, Ἀξιοῦνται τῆς διὰ βαπτίσματος ἀγαθῶν τὰ βέλτιον τῆς πίστεως τῶν προφερόντων αὐτὰ τοῦ βαπτίσματος, Children are allowed to enjoy the good things that come by baptism, by the faith of them that bring them to baptism: directly agreeable to the force (and so very proper farther to confirm our notion and interpretation) of that place to the Corinthians, where, by reason of the believing husband, living with the unbelieving wife, and the presumption that one may doe good on the other, and bring her to the faith (and however bring up the children so;) the children are holy, i. e. vouchsafed the privilege of baptism, and the advantages consequent to it.

Sect. 40. Irenæus. Secondly, as we have that of Irenæus, that lived in the age of those that saw the Apostles, within the first Century after them, l. 2. adv. hæres. c. 39. who speaking of Christ that came, saith he, to save men of all ages, and specifying Infantes & parvulos, Infants and little ones, as well as pueros, juvenes & seniores, boys, young men, and old men, adds, omnes, inquam, qui per eum renascuntur in Deum, all, I say, who by him are born again to God, where the Infants being regenerate, and born again into God, must needs be interpreted after the Scripture notion of παλιγγενεσία, being born again, or regenerate by that laver of regeneration. And so 'tis known, that all the ancient Church writers understand Baptism by it, (Dominicâ & Apostolicâ phrasi, saith Fevardentius there, after the style of Christ and his Apostles) and accordingly he adds, sanctificat Infantes, he makes Infants holy, again in that sense that we had it to the Corinthians.

Sect. 41. Tertullian. Thirdly, for Tertullian, who lived also within that first Century after the decease of the Apostles, we have these words, l. de Anima, where, of the fidelium filii, children of the faithfull, he affirms, that they are, sanctitatis candidati, & sancti ex seminis prærogativa, candidates of sanctity, and holy as in other respects, so from the prerogative of their birth, which as it is again an exact parallel to that place of Saint Paul, 1 Cor. 7. 13. in our rendring and interpreting of it, and an evidence, that it was then understood thus in the Church of God, so is it a proof of the practice of the Church in his time, in receiving the Christian children to baptism. And although l. de Bapt. c. 18. he argue for the delay of baptism in some cases, when it is not necessary (præcipuè circa parvulos, especially toward children) meaning, most probably, the children of unbelievers, by others (as sponsores to promise for them) brought to baptism, as considering that those Sponsors might dye, or not be able to perform their promise, yet by that very passage produced out of him against Pædobaptism, it is most evident it was then practised in the Church on the children of Christians; and as evident, that the Sponsores, Undertakers, or Sureties, which have place onely in baptizing of children, were in his time known and customary in the Church. And of them it is accordingly affirmed by [g] Platina out of the ancient Records, that Hyginus the Bishop of Rome, and Martyr, An. Dom. 144. voluit unum saltem Patrinum, unamque Matrinam baptismo interesse, appointed that there should be at least one Godfather and one Godmother present at baptism: Sic enim, saith he, eos appellant, qui Infantes tenent dum baptizantur, for so they call those that hold Infants when they are baptized.

The antiquity of Sponsores or Godfathers.

[g] In vita Hygini.

Sect. 42. Origen. Fourthly, Origen, immediately after Irenæus and Tertullian, is expres not onely for the practice (secundum Ecclesiæ observantiam etiam parvulis baptismum dari, according to the custome of the Church, baptism is given to Infants, on Lev. c. 12. 13. Hom. 8. and again, Quia per baptismum nativitatis sordes deponuntur, propterea baptizantur & parvuli, because by baptism the filth of our birth is taken away, therefore are children baptized, Hom. 14. in Luc.) but also for the Tradition from the Apostles, in Rom. 16. Ecclesia ab Apostolis traditionem suscepit etiam parvulis baptismum dare, The Church received tradition from the Apostles, to give baptism also to little ones. Nothing can be more expres to the whole matter. And though we have not that piece of Origen in Greek, yet being translated by Saint Jerome, and so owned by him in his Epistle to Heraclius, prefixt before the Commentary, we have his authority to secure us, that these are Origen's words.

Sect. 43. In this place I shall add a testimony out of that Authour of the Ecclesiastick Hierarchy, arguing for Pædobaptism, c. 7. Πάλιν γὰ δὴ κἀκεῖ τὰτα ταῦτα φαμὲν, ἅπερ οἱ θεουργοὶ ἡμῶν ἱερουργοῦσαι, παρὰ τῆ ἀγγελικῆς αὐτοπτίσεως ἐδιδάχθησαν, εἰς ἡμᾶς περήγαγον, Of this we say the same things which our divine Ministers of holy things, instructed by divine Tradition, brought down to us. That this writer was Dionysius the Areopagite, mentioned in the Acts, I do not pretend to believe; yet as Mr. Casaubon saith of him, that he was scriptor antiquissimus, & elegantissimus, a most ancient and most elegant writer: so it appears out of Photii Bibliotheca, that the question whether these were the genuine works of that Dionysius, lay under debate, about the year, 420. For at that time Theodorus Presbyter alledged the arguments on both sides, for and against that assertion: By which it appears sufficiently, that the Authour was very ancient, when so long since, this was matter of queſtion concerning him. And after the ſame proportion, I might here reaſonably add the words of the Author of the Conſtitutions, l. 6. c. 15. Baptize your little ones, and educate them in the diſcipline and precepts of the Lord: For although I am not perſwaded that they were written in the Apoſtles time by Clemens Romanus, yet there is ſufficient reaſon to aſſure us, that they were very ancient. Of the Conſtitutions.

In the next place Saint Cyprian's authority comes, backt with the force of an African Council, which, ſaith he, determined what is affirmed by him, Ep. 59. Quantum ad cauſam infantium pertinet, quos dixiſti intra ſecundum & tertium diem quo nati ſunt conſtitutos baptizari non oportere ——— longè aliud in Concilio noſtro omnibus viſum eſt; univerſi judicavimus nulli hominum nato miſericordiam Dei, & gratiam denegandam, &c. As to the caſe of Infants, which thou ſaidſt were not to be baptized within two or three days after birth ——— It was far otherwiſe determined by all in our Council, we all judged that the mercy and grace of God was to be denied to none that was born of men. And again, A baptiſmo atque à gratia Dei neminem per nos debere prohiberi. Quod cum circa univerſos obſervandum ſit atque retinendum, tum magis circa infantes ipſos & recens natos obſervandum putamus, &c. None ought to be hindred by us from baptiſm and the grace of God, which as it is among all to be obſerved and maintained, ſo it ought the rather to be obſerved among Infants, and thoſe that are newly born, who by their tears, with which they begin the world, might in reaſon obtain more from our help, and the Divine Mercy. Sect. 44. S. Cyprian.

So after him Saint Auguſtine of the Tradition from the Apoſtles, Ser. 10. de verb. Apoſt. and more expreſly de Bapt. cont. Donatiſt. l. 4. c. 24. Nemo nobis ſubſurret doctrinas alienas. Hoc Eccleſia ſemper habuit, ſemper retinuit, hoc à Majorum fide accepit, hoc uſque in finem perſeveranter cuſtodit, Let no man whiſper to us other doctrines. This the Church hath always had, always retained, this it hath received from the faith of the predeceſſours, this it keeps perſeveringly to the end. Quod univerſa tenet Eccleſia, nec conciliis inſtitutum, ſed ſemper retentum eſt, non niſi authoritate Apoſtolica traditum rectiſſimè creditur, That which the Univerſal Church maintains, and was not inſtituted by Councils, but always continued, is moſt rightly believed to be delivered by the Apoſtles authority. And lib. 10. de Gen. ad literam, c. 23. Conſuetudo matris Eccleſiæ in baptizandis parvulis nequaquam ſpernenda eſt, nec ullo modo ſuperflua deputanda, nec omnino credenda, niſi Apoſtolica eſſet traditio, The cuſtome of our Mother the Church is by no means to be ſcorned in baptizing of children, nor yet to be accounted ſuperfluous, nor at all to be believed, if there were not Apoſtolical Tradition for it. So l. 1. de pecc. mer. & remiſſ. ſpeaking of the Pelagians, Parvulos baptizandos eſſe concedunt; qui contra authoritatem Univerſæ Eccleſiæ proculdubio per Dominum & Apoſtolos traditam venire non poſſunt, They grant that children are to be baptized, becauſe they cannot contradict the authority of the Univerſal Church delivered by the Lord and by the Apoſtles. Theſe two laſt authorities receive ſome farther weight, by conſidering that they are by him urged to his adverſaries, on whom he would not have preſſed this Tradition as Apoſtolical, if in that age there had been any ſuſpicion to the contrary. Sect. 45. S. Auguſtine.

From him, and all the Eccleſiaſtick Writers and Councils after him, I need not heap teſtimonies in this matter; it being known and acknowledged by all, how frequently they are to be met with; and that this was one great aggravation charged on Pelagius's hereſie, that by conſequence from his doctrine, he denied the baptiſm of Infants for the remiſſion of ſins (which they that did, have been cenſured by the Church for Hereticks in all ages) as may appear both by S. Ambroſe Epiſt. l. 4. Demetriadi virg. Hinc evacuatio baptiſmatis parvulorum, qui ſolâ adoptione donari, nullo autem reatu dicerentur abſolvi. From Pelagius's doctrine follows the evacuating of the baptiſm of Infants, who ſhould, by his opinion, be ſaid to be adopted, but not abſolved from any guilt. And in like manner by the definition of the Milevitan Council, Can. 2. where ſpeaking of the Catholick Church's underſtanding of Original Sin, we have theſe words, Propter hanc regulam fidei, & parvuli, qui nihil peccatorum in ſemet ipſis adhuc committere potuerunt, ideo in peccatorum remiſſionem veraciter baptizantur, &c. Upon this rule of faith (the ſenſe of the Catholick Church, ubique ſemper, every where, and always) it is, that Infants are baptized into remiſſion of ſins, that what they have contracted by generation, may be purged by regeneration. And yet of Pelagius himſelf it is the affirmation of Euſebius Emiſſenus, Hom. 5. de Paſch. that he aſſerted the baptizing of Infants, though not propter vitam, for life, yet propter regnum cœlorum, for the kingdom of God. Nay, S. Auguſtine cites it out of Cœleſtius the Pelagian, Infantes baptizari in remiſſionem peccatorum, ſecundum regulam univerſalis Eccleſiæ, & Evangelii ſententiam, That Infants are baptized for remiſſion of ſins, according to the rule of the univerſal Church, and the appointment of the Goſpel, l. 2. cont. Pel. & Cœl. c. 5. Sect. 46. The Milevitan Council.

18. This poſitive doctrine, I ſuppoſe, will not need farther confirming, it being their part, that attempt to invalidate a cuſtome or uſage, ſo authoritatively introduced, and ſo long continued, to maintain their improbable plea with demonſtrative arguments. And till that be done, as in our Nation it is acknowledged, that common uſage is common law and poſſeſſion time out of mind, is not onely eleven, but the whole twelve Points in Law; So in the Church of Chriſt (whoſe univerſal Rule hath always been that, which the firſt Nicene Council, hath made familiar with every man, τὰ ἀρχαῖα ἔθη κρατείτω, Let the ancient uſages continue in force) the proof of the uſage, or practice, is all that can be expected for the vindicating of an Inſtitution. Sect. 47.

The one thing then remaining, is to examine the arguments, that are produced againſt Infants Baptiſm, whether they have any thing in them thus demonſtrative, or no; and, till ſomewhat appear of that nature, to reſolve they are but ſuggeſtions of Schiſmaticks, which prefer their own ſingular, or private ſpirits, before the common ſpirit of the Apoſtolical Church of God. Sect. 48.

And of theſe arguments, the moſt diligent Collections that I ever met with, is that of my very worthy friend, Dr. Jer. Taylor, in his Book of Liberty of Prophecying, where he hath ſo impartially inforced the arguments of his adverſaries, that I know not where to furniſh my ſelf with ſo exact a Scheme, and ſhall therefore, upon that one account, chuſe to follow that path which he hath traced before me. And theſe [h] arguments begin firſt Negatively, or deſtructively, by taking away the force of other arguments produced before in behalf of Pædobaptiſm. To which, firſt, I anſwer in general, that my preſent engagements give me no neceſſity of replying to this ſort of the Anabaptiſts arguments, becauſe they impugn not the grounds which have been laid in this diſcourſe, but onely are brought to oppoſe thoſe arguments, which either I uſe not at all, or onely by way of analogy and accommodation. And yet becauſe I am not willing, that ſuch fallacious Sect. 49. Dr. Taylor's Collection of the Anabaptiſts arguments.

[h] Διολογ. διαλ. p. 228. Numb. 13.

reasonings should impose on any, I shall endeavour, in some instances, to shew the frivolousness of them, so far as the Reader, or this former discourse, can be any way concerned in them.

Sect. 50. First then, when he invalidates the argument taken from Circumcision, my answer is, That I have not used that argument any farther than thus, that by analogy with what was done in Circumcision, 'tis concluded reasonable, from God's own judgment (in a case directly the same) that those may be entred sacramentally into a Covenant, which do not at that time actually know or understand the condition of the Covenant, as is clear, in the child's being circumcised. Now against this pretension of ours from Circumcision to Baptism, none of his exceptions do at all conclude.

Sect. 51. As first, That Types prove nothing, except a commandment go along with them, or some express to signifie such to be their purpose. To which I answer, That I do not make Circumcision a type of Baptism, much less prove any thing by its being such, I take circumcision to be one Institution of God's, a ceremony of admitting Jews, and their children, into the old Covenant, and I pretend baptism to be another; in this agreeing with it, That it is a ceremony of admitting Christian Proselytes, and their children, into a new Covenant, not after the manner of the circumcision, but of the baptism of the Jews. For the truth of which pretension, if I had not other evidence, beyond that of the Jewish children's being circumcised, viz. the practice of the Apostles, testified by themselves, and their successours of the first ages of the Church, that received it from them, I should never conclude it from circumcision: Because, though by the example of circumcision, it were vindicated from many of the exceptions that are thought to lye against it, yet I know it doth not follow, That whatever is not absurd, must presently be; that every thing is true, which is possible, or that what is lawfull, was certainly instituted. And so against this stating of the matter, neither is [the unagreeableness of the flood with baptism, in that one was a prodigy, the other not; nor of the Passover and the Eucharist, in that one had no prescription of sacramental drink, as the other had] of any force at all, partly because a parallel Institution is more capable of being argumentative to all particulars, than a type, so remote, as the flood is from baptism, and partly because, as the Eucharist is a ceremony founded in the Jews postcœnium, and not in their Paschal Lamb (which by the way, I suppose, Christ ate not at that time, the day before his crucifixion, because the time of eating the Lamb was not come, till the evening after his death, but onely had a commemorative Passover, at the beginning of the Paschal νυχθήμερον, and therein instituted the Sacrament, being himself the true Paschal-Lamb that the day after was slain for us) and in that postcœnium there was a cup of blessing, as well as bread to be broken: so the Christians baptism is founded in (and is the accommodating of) the baptism that was among the Jews, and not in circumcision at all, as having no likeness with it, save onely in some extrinsecal circumstances, as being both ceremonies of initiation into a Church, &c. In which consequently it may well agree with it, and (when the reason is absolutely the same) must; though in other things, where the reason is varied, it be allowed to disagree.

Sect. 52. So again, when 'tis said, that though there be a correspondence of analogy betwixt circumcision and baptism, yet there is no correspondence of identity, though I confess I understand not what is meant by the latter of those phrases, yet I acknowledge not to believe the correspondence to hold in all things, among other reasons, for this, because I know females were not circumcised, which lying not against the baptism of the Jews, any more than it doth against the Christian, I there chuse to fasten the correspondence, where I find so much more reason to do it.

Sect. 53. Num. 13. In this matter there is a reason of difference pretended, why circumcision should be proper for children, and baptism not, because circumcision left a character in the flesh, which being imprinted on Infants, did its work, when they came to age; and baptism imprixts nothing that remains on the body. But this, though it be already wholly avoided, by founding the Christian in the Jewish baptism, which had no external character on the flesh, and not in circumcision, which had; yet I will not cast it off so, but if it shall appear to have any force in it, acknowledge that it will hold in some degree against our pretensions. But, I suppose, it really hath none.

Sect. 54. For although there be that accidental difference between circumcision and baptism, that one mutilates, the other onely washes the body; the one woundeth, the other lightly toucheth, and cleanseth; yet sure that difference is of no force in this matter, for in respect of all others, but onely the child, i. e. in respect of God, and the Congregation, there arises no difference from hence: for, in respect of both, both are equally signs of the Covenant, and, in respect of men, the Registers being kept among Christians, as they were among Jews, the baptism of each will there be recorded, though it be not read in the forehead. And for the difference in respect of the child, 'tis certain that at that time, when it is given, to him it signifies nothing, because at that time he hath not the gift of interpreting the Character. And that afterward he is able to doe it, is certainly from advertisement, and instruction of others: For the Character of circumcision signifies not naturally, but onely voluntarily, or by Institution; nor else were the Ishmaelites, &c. within the Covenant: and accordingly the child understands it not by strength of common notions, or as a conclusion from any principle in Nature, but as he is told by others, both what was done to him, and what was the meaning of it, and therefore the same Law that commanded the Jews to circumcise, commanded them also to teach their children; and of that information, and instruction, the Christian, that was baptized in his infancy, is as capable, as the Jew that was circumcised, and the care of the Church may be as punctual now, as it was of the Synagogue: and if that were really conceived to be an objection, it would both give the advantage on the Church's side, (which appoints Undertakers and Sureties, which in circumcision was not appointed, and adds the promise of the Godfathers, to the duty of the Parents, to secure instruction to them) and would rather perswade the providing of more Godfathers, or laying a stricter charge on them, than the removing of that Christian, ancient, innocent ceremony out of the Church, or those Godfathers that we have already.

Sect. 55. Num. 13. And if [the word] which in baptism is joyned with the water, be also made known to the child, when he comes to age, as well as the nature of the Covenant, into which he was entred, there will then be as little force in the second part, or suppletory to the argument, as there was in the first, supposing [the word] to be a part of the Sacrament, and to signifie the words, that are used in Baptism, the form of

Baptizing

Baptizing in the name of the Father, and Son, and Holy Ghost. But, I conceive, [the word] which when it is joyned with the Element, is by the Fathers frequently ſaid to make up a Sacrament (Accedat verbum ad Elementum & fiet Sacramentum) may more properly ſignifie Chriſt's Inſtitution of Baptiſm (for that is it that makes dipping or ſprinkling with water, a Sacrament) and proportionably to that, the Text of Scripture, that gives commiſſion to the Church, to receive, and embrace Chriſtians children. And if that ſhould be the notion of [verbum, the word] it is then the Congregation onely, that is concerned in that, and thereby receives warrant for what they doe, and the child's want of underſtanding is no hindrance to it, any more than it is to the efficacy of the prayers of the Congregation, for the obtaining from God all thoſe Chriſtian graces, that, as ſoon as the child is capable of them, God can early grant, and, when they are received, the child make uſe of.

So when he proceeds farther to invalidate the parallel betwixt Circumciſion and Baptiſm, in theſe two reſpects: Firſt, Becauſe the Chriſtian Infants are not baptized ſtrictly on the eighth day, as the Jews were circumciſed; Secondly, That the females are baptized, which were not circumciſed: It already appears, That this is not of force againſt me, who do not undertake to make Chriſtian Baptiſm parallel to Circumciſion, but to the Jews baptizing of Proſelytes, and that ſure belonged to their females, as well as males, and was no more bound to the eighth day, than our baptiſm is, but yet was conſtantly allowed to the Proſelytes children, as well as to themſelves that were of full age. Sect. 56.

As for the placing the analogy betwixt Circumciſion and Baptiſm (and ſo betwixt the adherences of both) in the letter of the one, but in the ſpirit and ſignification of the other, that as Infants were circumciſed, ſo ſpiritual Infants ſhould be baptized, i. e. that they that are baptized ſhould be children in malice, &c. That is, firſt, but a fancy, and a new way of making parallels betwixt Sacraments: for Sacraments, as ſuch, are all ſignificative, and ſo are both theſe, and in that ſenſe both ſpiritual, and not one to be taken in the letter, and the other in the ſpirit. And indeed, baptiſm is no more ſpiritual circumciſion, than circumciſion is ſpiritual baptiſm, but both of them are rites of Initiation among the Jews, and one of them by Chriſt continued among Chriſtians. And ſo for the adherences of them; The baptizing of children may as well ſignifie, that the men that are baptized, ought to be like children (or, as Chriſt ſaith, enter the kingdom of God as that little child, i. e. be children in malice, regenerate and born again) as the circumciſing of Infants may be ſaid to fore-typifie it. The truth is, the ſpiritual child, i. e. the pure, and innocent, is equally the ſubject of both. All which, though it make it moſt reaſonable, that they that are not circumciſed, or baptized till full age, ſhould then with vows of new life enter the Covenant of Mercy, that belongs to none, but to ſuch as do ſo, and undergo thoſe ſignificative rites accordingly; yet doth it no way prejudge the receiving of real Infants alſo, who (as children in wickedneſs, as well as in age) have as yet a ſmall proportion of either, and ſo are as capable in that ſenſe, as the others repentance, and vows of new life, have rendred them. Sect. 57.

And if the Primitive Church did give milk and honey to the baptized, with that intention, to ſignifie, that if they were men in age, they ought yet to be children in wickedneſs: All that that will conclude is, That the little children were propoſed to the men, as their patterns, if they aſpired to baptiſm: and if theſe qualifications were neceſſary to be tranſcribed from them, to give the men a capacity of baptiſm, ſure they, who had them in the originals, would not reaſonably be thought uncapable, unleſs ſome other incapacity were proved againſt them, which is not yet pretended in this reaſoning. Sect. 58.

The next attempt is to invalidate the inference, which is ſaid to be made from Chriſt's bleſſing of Infants: Where, if the inference were, that all Infants are, i. e. ought to be baptized, upon this (and no other) ground, becauſe Chriſt bleſſed them, I ſhould acknowledge the concluſion to be weakly built: But when (as it hath formerly appeared) all the concluſion inferr'd by us hence, is onely this, That the Infants are capable of being bleſſed by Chriſt, though they underſtand not what Chriſt is; and conſequently that it muſt be uncharitable in thoſe, who deny them this means of Chriſt's, for deriving this bleſſing to them, upon no other reaſon, but becauſe they do not believe, or underſtand. And when the contrary concluſion (pretended to be more probably inferr'd) [that becauſe Chriſt bleſſed theſe Infants, but diſmiſſed them without baptiſm, therefore Infants are not to be baptized,] is ſo very far from being inferred probably. Firſt, becauſe from a particular omiſſion, to conclude an univerſal unlawfulneſs, is moſt unreaſonable; as if one ſhould thus argue [Chriſt, when he prayed in the Mount, did not then preach, but onely pray, therefore 'tis not lawfull to preach.] Or, ſecondly, becauſe though Chriſt baptized not thoſe Infants before mentioned, yet 'tis for all that poſſible he might baptize other Infants. And thirdly, becauſe Chriſt did not, that we know, baptize himſelf at all, Joh. 4. 2. but appointed his diſciples to baptize, as the Biſhop now ſeldom baptizes, but ordains others to that function. Therefore, I ſay, for all theſe reaſons, I ſuppoſe, the pretenſions of that Section, Numb. 14. are no way inferred againſt us, who do not ſo confine the power or mercy of Chriſt, as if he had no other way of bringing Infants to heaven, but onely by baptiſm, but acknowledge, that when the Sectary himſelf may for his ſchiſm and uncharitableneſs fall under the diſpleaſure of Chriſt, the poor Infant, which is no way guilty of the parents pertinacy, or unkindneſs, may be abundantly ſupplied by the Covenant and grace of Chriſt, without receiving this ſign of it, and wanting the ordinary means, may be allowed extraordinary. Sect. 59. Num. 14.

And the ſame reply is ſufficient to all that is added, Num. 15. for we that think and pronounce, that God may bring children to heaven which are not baptized, and acknowledge the unbaptized Infant, to be in that perfectly guiltleſs, and ſo unpuniſhable in the juſtice of God, for the omiſſion of the parents, do not conſider or aſſert the Inſtitution of baptiſm, as the appointing of a rule, without which the ſupernatural end cannot be attained, and therefore are guiltleſs of having argued invalidly in that particular. And if we were as confident, that God hath commanded Infants to be baptized, as againſt us 'tis pretended for the Anabaptiſts, that they are ſure, he hath not commanded it, yet we that think no perſon puniſhable for the breach of a command, but him who knowingly hath deſpiſed, or omitted it, muſt conclude nothing, but good hope of the unbaptized Infant, and onely deſire to reduce the Parent, or the Congregation, or Curate of the place, to the acknowledgment of their duty, which if neglected, may juſtly become blameable, and dangerous to them, who have neither the ignorance, nor impotence of the child to plead for them. Sect. 60.

And

Sect. 61. And this, as it is a full answer to that branch of the arguing (Numb. 15.) so it is acknowledged as undeniably true, and built on Num. 16. viz. that whatever the consequent of Original sin is, either it shall not be charged on Infants, or that God's goodness will secure them, if he take them away, before they can glorifie him with a free obedience: which, and all the rest, which is added to that sense, in Num. 16. we acknowledge most true, as far as concerns the Infants present interest toward eternal life, (for we are far from the opinion of him, whose doctrine of the efficiency of that instrument, so signal, that where it was omitted, there was no place for hope, justly intituled him a hard father of Infants;) but yet conceive there are other reasons beside those there named, why Infants should be brought, and received to Baptism, wherein, as the Infants imperfect condition secures them from being blamed, or mulcted for the omission of Baptism, so they that are of age to know what kindness, and obedience signifies, and so are capable of the crime, and guilt of being unkind, and disobedient, may fitly be admonished of their own sin and danger.

Sect. 62. One sort of those reasons I suppose my self to know, viz. that children may be thus early received into the Covenant, and thereby, First, by Oath, and all other the most pretious concernments and obligations, pre-engaged to the actions of a pious Christian life (assoon as they can be instructed in any part of this Oath) without ever being adventured to the hazards of the contrary infusions, that the timely taking into the Church, may prevent the pollutions of the world, and Satan be supplanted by this speedy giving up the name unto Christ. And secondly, that by the Promises of God also signed in that Sacrament, they may be more solemnly secured of a right in the inward assistences of the spirit of Christ, (which yet I hope will not without their guilt be withheld from them, in case they be not baptized) and the outward advantages, and prerogatives of being members of his Church, (such are participation of the prayers, and instruction of the Ministery, and other benefits of confirmation, and the Lord's Supper, which certainly belong not to them that are not baptized) assoon as ever they are capable of receiving them. And that certainly is much earlier for most of them, than that part of the age, wherein they can be supposed (by having been sufficiently instructed in the whole Christian doctrine, and having in full purpose of mind undertaken Christ's yoke) to be voluntarily, and by free choice (without this obligation) rendred capable of that baptism, which belongs to those of full age, and for which the Anabaptist pretends. To these I may farther add, that as baptism is to Infants an Institution of Christ, so it gives a virtue to the external act, and words pronounced by the Minister, so far as to make them members of Christ, and children of God, and heirs of his kingdom. And this hath been the doctrine of the Church of God. Besides, the fear of being continued in the state of Original guilt, is to be considered also, and hath by the Fathers been generally considered in this matter, and without defining the damage to those, who have been, without their own fault, detained from it, the Church hath delivered it for certain doctrine, that children being baptized, have all things necessary to their salvation, and are undoubtedly saved.

Sect. 63. And though I could name no more of those reasons, yet as long as I ought to suppose an Institution of Christ, or practice of his Apostles to be founded in weightier reasons: then 'tis certain (or necessary) that I know, there will be no way to disprove the reasonableness of the practice, but by taking away the Apostolicalness, of the ground, and so the no-fear of the Infants losing heaven by the parents unkindness, will never prove, That there is no need of baptizing Infants, which is the sole pretension of the 16. Numb.

Sect. 64. And truly, that parents, who in this Section are supposed to convey Adam's sin and punishment to their Infant-children, and do also know that it is taken away by Christ, but withall, that Christ commands all that desire to be partakers from him of that benefit, to be baptized, and so born anew of water and of the holy Ghost (though they, whose fault it is not, that they are not baptized, shall, I hope, never be punished, or deprived, without all guilt) should not contribute their utmost to the cure of this hereditary evil, and be instruments of conveying to them the Antidote, as they have been the conduits of the Poison, and so joyn as far in the latter, as they are by the disputer confessed to be engaged in the former part of the solemnity, seems either a great sloth, or a great unkindness or an itch of disputing, and innovating, and is indeed much more heinous than any of these, a causless disrelish, and fastidious contempt of an Institution of Christ. For all which, they that have no weightier exceptions against an act of charity, and another of obedience, than what are here produced, have sure no competent reward in their prospect, to recommend such unamiable, and unnecessary vices to them.

Sect. 65. This clears us from the reproach of the narrow conception of God Almighty, that because he hath tied us to the observation of ceremonies of his own Institution, therefore he hath tied himself to it] No, our doctrine is not pressed with any danger, or fear of such inconvenience; all that we conclude, is, That if God have tied us, we are bound to obey. And as, when we are allowed to acknowledge that God can bring a child into the World without the help of a Midwife, we yet think our selves doubly obliged both to the mother and the child in the womb to bespeak a Midwifes presence and assistence to the first throw: so need we not be suspected to shorten God's hand, or prejudge his power or goodness, if, as soon as the child is born in the World, we desire by the Minister's aid, to help it to a new birth, and introduce it into the Church also.

Sect. 66. That which is added in the close of that number, that 'tis most unreasonable on our own head to carry Infants to God this way without his direction] signifies little to us, who do not, what we contend for, in this matter, on our own heads, having certainly the continued example, and practice of the Church to go before us in it, nor, as we suppose, without his direction, which we think we can better infer from the Apostles practice, and clear that practice by greater evidence, and consequents from Scripture, than any man can pretend to do the contrary. And yet let me add, ex abundanti, that they that from analogie of an indefinite command of Christ (that of baptizing all Nations) shall extend that command to the baptizing the Infants of the converted Nations, when, if the analogy doth not exactly hold, yet it is thought to hold so far as it is extended (and for so thinking, the opinion and practice of the whole Church of God for so many hundred years is produced, and no shew of prohibition can be by any pretended against thus extending it) cannot, with any shew of reason, be censured for most unreasonable; many things being very lawfull to be practised, which are neither commanded, nor directed by God, as long as the contrary is not directed: and if such be practised upon grounds of supposed obedience, either to Christ, or his Apostles, or the Church of God, and upon charitative ends, they will be found as commendable, and as highly reasonable, as either disobedience, or uncharitableness, ritableneſs, are unreaſonable. So far is the conceit we defend, from being poor, and low (as, if it undertook to retrench God's power, it might juſtly be ſuppoſed) or the action conſequent to it, to be too bold and venturous, unleſs exceſs of meekneſs, and fear of offending, may be ſtyled too bold, or abundance of caution, and charitable care too venturous.

The ſame argument is again repeated Num. 17. without any farther improvement, and every word of it being wholly ſpent on God's care of Infants, the Infants incapacity of doing acts in order to ſalvation, God's immediate mercy to them, without any external act or miniſtery, or confinement to particular rite, and this as well now, as before the Inſtitution of Circumciſion or Baptiſm] may very ſecurely be acknowledged by us, as far as concerns the child. Onely let me demand, whether the caſe were not ſomewhat altered in reſpect of a Jewiſh parent, after the inſtitution of Circumciſion, from what it was before? and whether, if upon the wilfull omiſſion of circumciſing the child on the eighth day, the Angel ſhould come and kill the child, (though the devils did not ſeize on him to torment him eternally) that mother, and that wife, that were guilty of this omiſſion, were not a bloudy mother, and wife, and, the death of this child being a puniſhment to the father, whether that parent that were thus puniſhed, were not thereby ſuppoſed criminous, though the child were but haſtened to heaven, and not hindred by this means? If this queſtion cannot be anſwered Negatively, as I ſuppoſe it cannot; and if the Inſtitution of Chriſt extended to Infants, as I ſuppoſe it doth, and hath formerly been teſtified to extend, there will then be nothing left that can be thought to need anſwer in the 17 Num. Sect. 67.

This again is the argument of the 18. Num. There is no danger that Infants ſhould periſh for want of this external miniſtery, much leſs for prevaricating Chriſt's precept of [Unleſs a man be born again, &c.] And 'tis already evident, that this is granted by us, and that it yields the oppoſers no kind of advantage againſt us. And when the concluſion is ſafely granted, the pains of confuting the reaſons that are uſed to infer it might, one would think, be ſecurely ſpared alſo. But there are many things in that 18. Num. which are not rightly ſuggeſted, which, if they were, might be thought to have ſome validity in them, farther than the inferring the Concluſion, which they are produced to confirm: As firſt, That water and the ſpirit, John 3. 5. ſignifie the ſame thing, and by water is meant the effect of the ſpirit, cleanſing and purifying the ſoul. Theſe words I conceive to be ſo far from bringing any evidence of truth with them, that they do, one branch of them, ſufficiently confute the other; for if the water were acknowledged to be really an effect of the ſpirit, yet would that be far from concluding thoſe two words [water and ſpirit] the ſame thing, becauſe never any thing is the cauſe or effect of it ſelf; but when 'tis onely pretended, that by water is meant that effect, i.e. that the cleanſing and purifying of the Soul, which really is an effect of the ſpirit, is onely ſignified by the water, this is as far from proving the words to ſignifie the ſame, as our affirming water to be the Sign, and purifying the ſoul the grace, and baptiſm the rite of conveying that grace, can be deemed to conclude it our opinion, That water, and grace, and baptiſm, are all one. And then the onely thing to be interpoſed in this matter, will be; That men ought to be wary, that they do not ſuffer different things to be impoſed on them, as if they were the ſame, nor believe a propoſition to be evidenced by that explication, by which it is really confuted. If the meaning be no more than this, that the water ſignifies the ſpirit, conſidered in one effect of it, of cleanſing the ſoul, then, (though I think it ſignifies ſomewhat more alſo, a death unto ſin, and a new life unto righteouſneſs, in the ſenſe that is affirmed by our Church, and interpreted * elſewhere, yet) I think, 'tis from thence clear, that it ſignifies not the ſame thing that the ſpirit doth, any more than a ſign, and the thing ſignified, ſignifie the ſame. The ſign ſignifies the ſubſtance or grace; but the ſubſtance or grace is it, and doth not ſignify it. And this is no nicety, but the very thing wherein the difficulty (all that is in this matter) conſiſts. For, ſuppoſing the water to be the ſign of the cleanſing power of the ſpirit, and ſo baptiſm by water the thing inſtituted by Chriſt, to ſignify the neceſſity of our being waſhed ſpiritually; Chriſt's affirming the no-poſſibility of entring the kingdom of God, without being born again, both of water, and of the holy Ghoſt, and not onely of one of them, though it exclude not thoſe that are guilty of no fault, in not being baptized with water, cannot yet be doubted to make baptiſm by water regularly neceſſary, and ſo (though not excluſive of all other means of God's beſtowing heaven on Infants, yet) unfit to be adviſedly laid aſide, omitted, or contemned by any, either for themſelves, or for others, that are by God or Nature committed to their truſt. * Pract. Cat. l. 6. ſect. 155. Sect. 68.

But afterward, when it is alledged, that the equipollence of theſe two, water and ſpirit, appears in its parallel place of Chriſt's baptizing with the ſpirit and fire, I profeſs to believe it evident that thoſe places are not parallel. The mention of Baptiſm with water and the ſpirit] was made by Chriſt to Nicodemus in a wide indefinite latitude [Except a man be thus regenerate, he cannot enter, &c.] Joh. 3. 5. and it referred clearly to the initiating men indefinitely (i.e. all men) into the Church, (proportionably to the Baptiſm among the Jews, which was the ceremony of admitting all, both natives and proſelytes, and their children) and belonged to all that would enter into the Kingdom of God, to every Chriſtian. But that of baptizing with the holy Ghoſt, and with fire, Matt. 3. 11. was ſpoken by John Baptiſt of Chriſt, and by Chriſt to the Apoſtles, and refers to the deſcent of the Spirit upon them, and not upon all Chriſtians. And what if, beſide the literal fulfilling of it at Pentecoſt, there be morally more in it? i.e. though it ſignifie the effect of the holy Ghoſt, and his productions on the ſoul; Yet, firſt, it ſignifies not the ſame production that water ſignified, the water was preſumed to ſignifie ſanctifying grace, the fire, in form of tongues, ſignified the gift of tongues, that was given in it, and perhaps more, the fire, that ſhould ſoon come out, and devour the gainſayers, the deſtructions that are elſewhere deſcribed by fire (and ſo in that place, ver. 12.) that were ſoon after to fall on unbelievers, when this laſt method was fruſtrated, and as Chriſt long before, ſo now the holy Ghoſt blaſphemed alſo. And ſecondly, this doth not prove that water was not a ceremony inſtituted by Chriſt, to ſignifie that production, which were the onely thing for the Anabaptiſts intereſt to be concluded by it. Sect. 69.

And whereas it is added, that Chriſt baptizes all that come to him, with the holy Ghoſt and with fire; and that attempted to be proved, becauſe John tells the Jews, not Chriſt's diſciples, that Chriſt ſhall baptize them with fire and the holy Spirit, Mat. 3. 11. i.e. all that came to him, as John did with water, for ſo lies the Antitheſis,] Sect. 70.

To

To this I anſwer, Firſt, that John's ſaying theſe words unto the Jews, doth not conclude, that all the Jews, that ſhould come to him, ſhould be baptized with fire, 'twere ſufficient to the verifying of the words, that ſome of them, eſpecially choſen, and for the uſe of all the other, were to be thus baptized, ſignally conſtituted Apoſtles, by that means, to preach to them, and all nations; and the Antitheſis being acknowledged to be by way of compariſon betwixt John and Chriſt, not by way of contrary oppoſition, might be very well made up thus. John uſed no higher element than the water in Jordan, but Chriſt ſhall ſend fire from heaven, a much more convincing evidence of his power, on the heads of elect witneſſes to give them (more than an entrance of Proſelytes) a commiſſion of Apoſtles and Governours of the Church. And this is ſufficient to ſhew the unconcludingneſs of that pretended parallel.

Sect. 71. But I conceive it is yet farther diſtant from the truth, and that by the fire, which John tells the Jews they ſhall be baptized with by Chriſt, after the coming of the holy Ghoſt in tongues as of fire, and being contemned by them, was (as was before noted) meant the deſtruction of the obdurate Crucifiers. For ſo the two verſes immediately incompaſſing thoſe words, do ſeem to incline it, The ax is laid to the root of the tree, therefore every tree that bringeth not forth good fruit is hewn down and caſt into the fire, v. 10. that ſure is a fire of deſtruction among the Jews, and upon that [I indeed baptize with water, &c.] a quenching as well as a cleanſing element, and if you repent timely, I aſſure you from God, the impendent ruine ſhall be averted; [but he that cometh after me is mightier than I] and may in reaſon be expected to doe more than I have done, baptize you with the holy Ghoſt, uſe all powerfull means to bring you to repentance by the Apoſtles preaching over all your Cities, after your crucifying the Meſſias, and if all that doe no good, then baptizing you with fire alſo, immerſing and overwhelming you over head and ears in that fiercer element (as afflictions are elſewhere deſcribed by βαπτίζεσθαι, being baptized, Matth. 20. 22.) and accordingly it follows, ver. 12. whoſe fan is in his hand, and he ſhall throughly purge his floor, that is the previous work of the Spirit, to purge, and ſeparate the penitent from the impenitent, but the chaff ſhall he burn with unquenchable fire. And if, as the context inclines, and the event was agreeable, ſo that be reſolved to be the meaning of the baptizing them with fire, then, as it may belong to the Jews indefinitely, i.e. the impenitent Jews of all ſorts, ſo will it take away all appearance of validity from the objection. And I ſhall be content to conclude thence, that as the Infants of the believers were then to be baptized with water, ſo the unbelievers, or obdurate, ſhould paſs through, or rather periſh in the fire alſo. But this ex abundanti.

Sect. 72. And whereas the argument proceeds to acquire more ſtrength from St. Peter, who when he had ſaid, that Baptiſm ſaves us, adds by way of explication, not the waſhing of the fleſh, but the confidence of a good conſcience toward God, plainly ſaying, that it is not water, or the purification of the body, but the cleanſing of the Spirit that does that, &c. I conceive the concluſion to be much larger than the premiſſes: For all that St. Peter ſaith, is, either to deny, and exclude the external ſacramental Baptiſm from being available to ſalvation, without the addition of a good conſcience, which I do not pretend it is) or to define that Baptiſm, which is available, to be compounded of an inward, ſubſtantial performance, as well as an outward ſignificative rite, or to attribute more to the good conſcience, or the ἐπερώτημα of that (not the confidence, but the enquiring, or ſeeking to God, as hath been ſhew'd) than to the bare outward waſhing, which ſtill is no way of prejudging the uſe of that ceremony (any more than the precept in Joel, of rending the hearts and not the garments, was a prohibition or interdict of that outward expreſſion of mourning, the rending of the garments) but onely the due preferring of the more ſubſtantial part, and requiring that we do not leave out, through over-valuing the ceremony, the more pretious inward part of that Sacrament.

Sect. 73. And therefore if our Saviour's ſpeech to Nicodemus be ſuppoſed to be expounded, by analogy to this of Peter (by the way, it hath already appeared, that that other of being baptized with fire, is far from any neceſſity of paſſing for ſuch a parallel) it will no-way be conſequent from thence, what is pretended [that it can conclude for no man, that he is obliged to the right of Baptiſm] nor will the ſame be at all made probable by Chriſt's ſpeaking thoſe words, Joh. 3. before Baptiſm was ordained. For, firſt, though Baptiſm being ſuppoſed an Inſtitution of Chriſt, cannot ſafely be neglected by thoſe, that have received the faith of Chriſt; yet we do not think, that it will be available to him that doth not obey that Doctrine (which is the ſum of St. Peter's words) and ſecondly, Baptiſm being before this time, even among the Jews, the rite or ceremony of receiving Proſelytes, and ſo of a metaphorical new birth (and therefore Chriſt wonders at Nicodemus a ruler in Iſrael, that he underſtood not thoſe words of his) It is no way improbable, that our Saviour having before thoſe words Joh. 3. received Proſelytes, called, and entertained diſciples, had accommodated this ceremony of the Jews thereto, and received them by Baptiſm. For ſo we ſee it (Joh. 4.) ſpoken, as of a thing paſt, that the Phariſees had heard, that Jeſus made, and baptized more diſciples than John, whoſe title yet it was to be the Baptizer. And though it be added ver. 2. that Jeſus baptized not, but his diſciples: yet certainly what they now did, was by Commiſſion from him, as his officers, and miniſters, and therefore though at his departure from the world the Commiſſion was given them in a larger manner, as far as extended to all the world, Gentiles, as well as Jews, yet 'tis evident that ceremony was already ordained by Chriſt, as the rite of receiving believers into the Church, and conveying remiſſion of Sins unto them, and being ſo uſed by the diſciples of Chriſt, might very properly be mentioned to Nicodemus, as every ones duty, that would enter into the Kingdom of God, though not ſo, as to exclude any that were not guilty of the neglecting of it, or as to avail any that were not inwardly purified, as well as externally baptized.

Sect. 74. And when 'tis added in the ſame Num. that the words of Chriſt to Nicodemus, do no more infer a neceſſity to give Infants Baptiſm, than thoſe other words, Except ye eat the fleſh of the Son of man, and drink his bloud, ye ſhall not enter into the Kingdom of Heaven, infer a neceſſity to give them the holy Communion, and that thereupon the ancient Church did with an equal opinion of neceſſity give them the Communion] To this I anſwer, by theſe degrees; Firſt, that thoſe words Joh. 6. 59. of eating the fleſh of the ſon of man, &c. do no-way appear to belong to the Sacrament of the Euchariſt, it being apparent, that at the ſpeaking of thoſe words that Sacrament was not inſtituted, nor till long after (the night before his crucifixion) and therefore that they are not at all appliable to this matter.

And

And indeed from the whole context, Chriſt's comparing and preferring himſelf before the Jews Manna, in reſpect of the miraculouſneſs of the deſcent, and efficacy to nouriſh their ſouls, it is ſo unavoidably inferred, that their feeding on his fleſh is their believing his doctrines, and nothing elſe, that the Romaniſts whoſe pretenſions for the fleſh and bloud of Chriſt in that Sacrament, would be much favoured by this interpretation of this Text, do yet (the learnedſt of them) diſclaim it: and indeed St. Chryſoſtome's way of interpreting the 63 verſe, It is the ſpirit that quickneth, &c. is moſt clear, that as the ſoul is that which enlivens, and not the body, ſo 'tis not the fleſhly hearing that profits any, but his doctrine received into their hearts, and not onely into their ears, that will quicken them into a ſpiritual life here, and that prove a foundation of eternal life hereafter. Sect. 75.

Secondly, ſuppoſing, what the objection doth not prove, but ſuppoſe, that the place did belong to the Sacrament of the Euchariſt, and that the words were excluſively ſet, as thoſe others of Baptiſm, that whoſoever received not that Sacrament, were not capable of eternal life, yet ſeeing many circumſtances are neceſſary to be taken in, to diſcern the full importance of any obſcure place, it will appear in many reſpects very reaſonable to make ſome difference between the perſons to whom thoſe Sacraments belong. For firſt, Baptiſm being founded in the Jewiſh rite of receiving Proſelytes, may reaſonably be thought to belong to all, that among the Jews were uſually baptized, i. e. (as it hath already appeared) to the Infant-children of Proſelytes, and agreeably it hath been deduced from the Apoſtolical practice, that Infants were baptized, whereas on the other ſide, that other Sacrament being inſtituted in their poſtcœnium, in all reaſon was to belong to none, but ſuch as thoſe that were at that, or are uſually preſumed to come thither, and thoſe are not wont to be Infants, but onely thoſe of full age: Or if the Euchariſt were ſuppoſed anſwerable to the eating of the Paſchal Lamb (as indeed it is not, it being the commemorative Paſſover onely, in the cloſe of which this was inſtituted, and the Lamb not eaten till the evening, after Chriſt our Paſſover was ſacrificed for us) yet Infant-children cannot be ſuppoſed partakers of that, becauſe they could not come up to Jeruſalem, where onely this Lamb was eaten, no more than they could eat ſtanding, which was a rite of that Paſchal Supper. And laſtly, the Euchariſt being ordained to be obſerved in remembrance of Chriſt, the Infants could not be due partakers of that, as in Baptiſm (ſuppoſing it the Sacrament of initiation into the Church) 'tis manifeſt they might be then initiated, that age being as capable of receiving ſuch benefits, as it is of food, but no more capable of performing actions of piety, commemorating of Chriſt, &c. than it is of acting, or ſpeaking, &c. Sect. 76.

And therefore, thirdly, if in any age of the ancient Church, that cuſtome prevailed, of [i] communicating Infants, it is apparent, that, as that was without any obligation, from that place, Joh. 6. (and yet in all probability from a miſunderſtanding of that place) ſo the univerſal Church of Chriſt, which afterward diſcerned that miſtake, and diſuſed that practice, did ſtill continue that other of baptizing Infants. And if they that did thus, did ſo punctually define and diſtinguiſh in this matter, and were not at all moved by the arguments upon which they left off communicating of Infants, to leave off the baptizing of Infants, (but were rather more ſtrict in obſerving it) Then what reaſon can be brought from hence, why they that deſire to make uſe of the practice of that Church in the one, the leaving off to communicate Infants, ſhould not think themſelves obliged to obſerve it in the other; or indeed, that they that neither follow that age, nor that Church, where children were both baptized and communicated, nor that, wherein communicating Infants being upon reaſon laid down, baptizing them was thought ſufficient, ſhould yet think fit to draw arguments againſt us from the practice of the Church, whereby they will not themſelves be obliged, and never conſider what the Church hath done, to imitate it, but onely to furniſh themſelves with pleas to divide from it? Sect. 77.

[i] Paulinus Ep. 12. Inde parens ſacro ducens de fonte ſacerdos Infantes, niveos corpore, corde, habitu, Circunclanſque rudes feſtis altaribus agnos, Pura ſalutiferis imbuit ora cibis. Vide Vincent. Rich. ad Or. 14. Procli. p. 413. &c.

Fourthly, if the ancient Church, having no Precept from Chriſt, nor Practice from the Apoſtles, were ſo tender, leſt they ſhould deprive Infants of any the moſt improbable part of their due, that they communicated them, and cannot truly be charged of a crime, though perhaps of a miſunderſtanding of an obſcure Scripture in ſo doing, (for ſure to give them bread or wine, was an indifferent ceremony, and as much in the power of the Church to uſe, as the giving them milk or hony) then what ſhall be ſaid in excuſe of an uncharitable age, that will rather venture to unravell all, to oppoſe an univerſal cuſtome at leaſt, nay an Apoſtolick practice, and as we have all reaſon to think, an Inſtitution of Chriſt, than retain an harmleſs innocent ceremony, of bringing their children into the boſome of the Church, to receive thoſe benefits, of which they are capable at the preſent (ſuch acknowledgedly is Chriſt's benediction) and to be in a poſture of receiving all others, as ſoon as ever they are capable? Sect. 78.

Fifthly, to ſpeak yet ſomewhat more particularly of the ancient Churches communicating of Infants, As it is certain that St. Auguſtine, interpreting that paſſage of Chriſt's, Joh. 6. literally of the Sacrament, founded on it the neceſſity of exhibiting it to Infants newly baptized, and preſſed the Pelagians with this, as Eccleſiæ totius dogma, the opinion of the whole Church: So theſe two things are obſervable of it, Firſt, the original, from whence this was firſt derived to Infants, viz. the cuſtome (very proper and laudable) of adminiſtring the Lord's Supper to all adulti, or grown men and women, preſently (the ſame day at leaſt) after their Baptiſm, from whence it came by degrees to Infants alſo. But then ſecondly, this was done with a conſiderable difference: Thoſe of age received that Sacrament, ſub utraque ſpecie, under both kinds, both of bread and wine, but Infants onely under that of the wine, if Hugo de Sancto Victore may be credited (Pueris recens natis ſacramentum in ſpecie ſanguinis eſt miniſtratum) adding that reaſon for it, quia tales naturaliter ſugere poſſunt, becauſe ſuch are naturally able to ſuck. Thirdly, that when this of communicating Infants was left off, yet the cuſtome of giving the Sacrament to the Adulti immediately upon Baptiſm, laſted longer in the Church, and is mentioned by Theophylact on the 10*th* of Luke: and ſo as this came in by miſtake, it was deliberately, and upon grounds of knowledge left off again. Fourthly, that even in the ages wherein this was uſed, and with ſome earneſtneſs urged by St. Auguſtine againſt his adverſaries, it is by him mentioned but as a dogma or opinion of the Church (ſuch are all the ceremonies of the Churches conſtituting) and neither as a Doctrine of Scripture, nor Tradition from the Apoſtles, as by the ſame St. Auguſtine, and thoſe which are ancienter than he, the baptizing of Infants is affirmed to be. Sect. 79.

L. 1. [d] de Sacr. c. 20.

Sect. 80. Laſtly then, I conceive, that the giving of wine to the baptized Infants, differs much from admitting them to that Sacrament, and was at the moſt but an occaſion of allowing them the Prayers of the Church, that they might be partakers of the death of Chriſt, and all the benefits thereof, which ſtill was but the kindneſs and charity of the Church toward them. But then it is evident, that beſide this, there is much more in that Sacrament, and particularly the offering to God our reaſonable ſacrifice, and plighting of our charity one to another, and of taking up Chriſt's Croſs, and ſo communicating with his ſufferings. And to this it is not pretended that Infants were admitted, either by themſelves or their Sureties (as in Baptiſm they are perſonally admitted to the benefits of the Covenant, and by their proxies they vow the duties of the Covenant) nor conſequently that they were brought to the Lord's Table at the uſual times of thoſe adminiſtrations, but onely were allowed ſome minute parts of the holy wine, in imitation of what was ſolemnly done to the adulti on the day of their Baptiſm, and in compliance with the literal ſound of the words of Chriſt, Joh. 6. 53. And on the other ſide, through the moſt flouriſhing ages of the ancient Church, we know that thoſe that had been baptized in their infancy, but were not yet ſufficiently inſtructed, were ſolemnly diſmiſt out of the Church when the Lord's Supper was to be celebrated, moſt ſtrictly interdicted to be preſent to ſee, or approach thoſe holy Myſteries, As is known by the Ite miſſa eſt, the younger ſort were to depart, when the offertory-ſervices began.

Sect. 81. In the next place Num. 19. is attempted the diſproving of all argument brought in defence of Pædobaptiſm from Peter's words, Act. 2. 39. The Promiſe is made to you, and to your children.] To which I anſwer, That if any have made uſe of that very unconcludent argument, I have nothing to ſay in defence of them; I think the practice is founded on a better baſis than ſo, and that the word children there, is really the poſterity of the Jews, and not peculiarly their Infant children.

Sect. 82. As for the anſwer that Num. 20. is rendred to that place (on which I acknowledge to lay ſome weight) 1 Cor. 7. 14. [but now are your children holy] I am obliged to examine that, and view it in its utmoſt force. The anſwer is, that [thoſe words ſignifie nothing but that they are holy by deſignation, juſt as Jeremy and John Baptiſt were ſanctified in their mothers womb, i. e. deſigned and appointed for holy miniſteries, but had not the Promiſe of the Father, the gift of the holy Ghoſt for all that ſanctification, and juſt ſo the children of Chriſtian Parents are ſanctified, i. e. deſigned to the ſervice of Jeſus Chriſt, and the future participation of the Promiſes.] The invalidity of this anſwer will be diſcerned, Firſt, by the method of the Apoſtles arguing in that place, for the cohabiting of the believing wife with the unbelieving husband, &c. becauſe the unbelieving husband hath been ſanctified by the believing wife, or elſe were your children unclean, but now are they holy: That muſt needs be this, Unleſs there were ſome hope that the cohabiting of a believer, ſhould be a means to bring an unbeliever to the faith, 'twould certainly follow, That their children were unclean. Now I demand of this pretended interpretation, whether it be poſſible that St. Paul's argument ſhould conclude, being underſtood in this ſenſe? Suppoſe Jeremy's, or John Baptiſt's parents had been one a believer, and the other an unbeliever, could it of them be concluded, if they did not, upon the hope of doing good one upon the other, cohabit, their children could not be ſanctified by God, i. e. ſecretly deſigned to any holy miniſtery? This were abſolutely to confine God's deſignations, and predeſtinations of this kind, to none but the children of believers, as if the child of parents, either, or both heathen, could not by God be made uſe of to his higheſt miniſteries, as well as a blaſpheming and perſecuting Paul, who yet, we know, when ſuch, was ſo predeſtinate.

Sect. 83. It is known that Jeremy's and John's ſanctification, or deſignation to holineſs, was a work onely of God's, and that depends not upon ſuch accidental conditions, as is the cohabiting of the parents, and therefore cannot have place in this matter. And if it be ſaid, that the meaning of the word is, that the children of ſuch are not actually holy, but onely by deſignation, meaning by that, the deſignation of the Church, as Jeremy was ſanctified by the deſignation of God, and that the [as] is to be extended no farther, than to compare them in reſpect of deſignation, and not in reſpect of thoſe, by whom they were deſigned, then indeed as this is the onely way I can think of, to avoid the former abſurdity, ſo it is in effect the confeſſion of what we pretend to be the force of theſe words. For all that we underſtand by holy in that place, is, holy by deſignation of the Church, i. e. by Baptiſm, to which when they are brought by the Congregation, and admitted by the Miniſter, they are thus conſecrated and devoted to God; and if this be the onely way of avoiding our concluſion from that Text, the concluſion will be the more eſtabliſhed, inſtead of being weakened by it.

Sect. 84. And herein it is farther to be obſerved, that in fitting the parallel betwixt the holineſs of the children in St. Paul, and of Jeremy or the Baptiſt, this difference is acknowledged, that they two were deſigned to holy Miniſteries, and theſe to the ſervice of Jeſus Chriſt, and the future participation of the Promiſes] which again ſeeing it cannot be ſaid of God's ſecret deſignation (for ſure he may deſign thoſe to this end, whoſe parents are neither of them Chriſtian) muſt needs be applyed to the deſignation of the Church, and then that is the very thing I mean by bringing, and receiving them to Baptiſm (which is the deſigning, or devoting them to the ſervice of God, and future participation of the Promiſes) and is all that I pretend to conclude from that place.

Sect. 85. There is but one thing in which that anſwer can be thought to be uſefull to the Anabaptiſts purpoſe, viz. that as Jeremy's being ſanctified in the womb, was his being deſigned onely to receive, and not his having actually received the gift of the holy Ghoſt: So the ordinary Infant's being ſanctified, is onely his being deſigned to the grace of God, not his having actually received it. To which I anſwer, that this concluſion with ſome limitation (and that equal on both parts of the compariſon) will be ſafely acknowledged by us, viz. that as Jeremy, and the Baptiſt had not from the womb the gift of the holy Ghoſt, neceſſary for their Prophetick office, as being at that time, through want of underſtanding, uncapable of exerciſing it, but yet had at that time that ſpecial favour of God (vouchſafed to, though unknown by them) of being deſigned to that ſpecial office of dignity; ſo the Chriſtian Infant-children have not the gift of faith, &c. infuſed into them, as long as they are uncapable of exerciſing it, but yet have the favour from Chriſt and his Church, the favour of being deſigned to the participation partem of that, and other the like graces neceſſary for their ſtate, as ſoon as they are capable of receiving them, unleſs they by [k] ſatisfying their part of the Covenant, diſengage God of performing his part of it. [k] falſifying, or failing in.

To the anſwer (inſiſted on Num. 21.) to the words of St. Peter [be baptized, and ye ſhall receive the holy Ghoſt] viz. that the receiving the holy Ghoſt there was the rite of Confirmation, and that not as an effect of Baptiſm, but onely a conſequent of it] I ſhall make this return, that if the whole arguing be admitted, and granted by us, and ſo the concluſion from it, that thoſe words recited, are incompetent to prove that the holy Ghoſt (which is there mentioned as conſequent to) is received in Baptiſm, this will be far from aſſiſting the Anabaptiſts againſt us: For firſt, we muſt have leave to take notice, that by this anſwer, the rite of Confirmation, and that intitled a myſtery, is aſſerted from St. Peter's words (though Baptiſmal grace be not aſſerted) and I ſhall believe, that the acknowledgment of the Apoſtolicalneſs of that rite, may ſtand the Church in as much ſtead againſt the Anabaptiſts, as any other advantage, that could be pretended to from thoſe words. For certainly, if the holy Ghoſt be given in Confirmation in that richer latitude, (as the ſtate of the perſon confirmed is more capable) Then nothing hinders, but that by Baptiſm (an inſtitution of Chriſt himſelf, which is thereby to have the precedence of Confirmation, that pretends onely, though from, and under Chriſt, yet no otherwiſe than as by Apoſtolical inſtitution) ſuch lower graces may be given as that lower ſtate is capable of: Or however the very receiving into Covenant, and being made capable of ſuch ſuperinveſtitures, as this of Confirmation is, and with it of the holy Ghoſt, of which without Baptiſm they are not in that Text ſuppoſed capable, is a gift and benefit, and ſo a grace of Baptiſm, very well worth the valuing. Secondly, that which of Baptiſm is not proved by thoſe words there repeated, may yet (as far as by our former anſwers it appears to be aſſerted by us) be proved by other Texts, either ſingle, or in conjunction with one another, as by that of the childrens being holy, in reſpect of their Baptiſm, by that title of Baptiſm that it is the laver of regeneration, compared with Chriſt's words, Except ye be born again of water and the ſpirit, &c. Sect. 86.

But I ſhall not need to go farther than this Text it ſelf, when it is recited intire, as now it was uſefull to the Anabaptiſts pretenſions that it ſhould be mutilated. For St. Peter's words are, Act. 2. 37. Repent and be baptized every one of you in the name of the Lord Jeſus to the remiſſion of ſins, and ye ſhall receive the holy Ghoſt: Where, though the perſons to whom he ſpake are not imagined to be Infants, but thoſe that were pricked at the heart, ver. 37. yet to this point, of Baptiſm being the means to convey the Promiſes, for which the argument ſets indiſtinctly the holy Ghoſt, meaning thereby not all, but ſome graces of the holy Ghoſt, theſe words are a pregnant evidence. For leaving the λήψεσθε, ye ſhall receive] in the future, to the rite of Confirmation, yet ſtill at preſent this Baptiſm is εἰς ἄφεσιν ἁμαρτιῶν, to remiſſion of ſins; That pardon of ſins, which is certainly a principal Promiſe, and a ſpecial and moſt valuable gift of God, is ſet down as an effect of Baptiſm. And though for actual and habitual ſins, ſuch as are there ſpoken of, Repentance be alſo required, as to prepare for Baptiſm, ſo to make capable of remiſſion; yet in children that are not guilty of thoſe ſins, nor capable of that repentance, there is little appearance of reaſon from that place either to exact repentance, to qualifie for remiſſion, or to doubt, but, as habitual ſins may be remitted by Repentance and Baptiſm, ſo, Original ſin may be remitted by Baptiſm alone without Repentance, the very receiving into the Covenant of Grace, the Evangelical Covenant, which is the effect of baptiſm, being interpretatively the quitting us from that debt, and ſetting us right in the favour of God, and giving us title to the peculiar cuſtody and protection of Angels, Matthew 18. 10. till by our wilfull breaches and perjuries, we again forfeit our Tenure. Sect. 87.

I cannot diſcern any thing more in this 21. Num. which looks like an advantage againſt us, and may conſequently want any reply. For that they that are capable of the ſame grace, are not alway capable of the ſame ſign, as females among the Jews, that were not capable of Circumciſion] is of no force againſt us, who know that females were initiated among them by Baptiſm, and that that is the thing for which we contend: And again, that beſide the capacity of the grace, the Inſtitution of the ſign is alſo required to make any thus capable of the ſign, and conſequently that though they, for whom a ſign is not inſtituted, are not capable of that ſign, yet of another ſign they are capable, which was inſtituted for them. Sect. 88.

And ſo likewiſe, that [God doth not always convey his graces in the ſame manner, but to ſome mediately, to others immediately,] 'tis not our intereſt to queſtion, who contend onely for the Chriſtians obſervance of the Inſtitution of Chriſt, and ſo for the bringing all to Baptiſm, who are allowed to be admitted to it, and not for the confining the graces or mercies of Chriſt within any limits of ours, or the annexing them to the miniſtery of others ſo inſeparably, that they that are not involved in the guilt, ſhall be involved in the ſufferings or puniſhments of their neglects. Sect. 89.

To the 22. Num. which ſuppoſes the aſſertors of Pædobaptiſm to complain againſt God, and not to be content with him, unleſs they may baptize their children, taking exceptions that God did more for the children of the Jews] the anſwer will be brief, that there is no ſuch complaint made by any of us, nor imaginable cauſe for ſuch complaint, in caſe it were true (as we pretend it moſt falſe) that God had excluded our children from baptiſm. For truely we look upon God's inſtitutions not as natural, but as moral inſtruments, and conſequently no farther neceſſary to us, than God hath will'd they ſhould be, and therefore conclude that God, who inſtituted Circumciſion among the Jews, a ſeal of their Covenant, but not inſtituted it to us, will make good his richeſt Promiſes to us, though we be not circumciſed. All our complaint is of men, not of God, in reſpect of him we look upon it as a mercy, not an unkindneſs, that our children are not obliged to ſuch a bloudy rite, as Circumciſion was, and ſhould confeſs our ſelves an adulterous generation indeed (though we conceive Chriſt's words do little belong to that matter) if we ſhould ſeek after that ſign. But of men, who being freed from a bloudy ceremony (by the bloud of Chriſt, who was himſelf circumciſed, and therein ſhed bloud, but ſoon after nail'd that to his Croſs) will not yet allow Chriſt to continue a much more gentle rite, and that alſo of old required of them, while they were under that heavier yoke, and who being ſo guilty themſelves, complain of us for complaining. Of theſe, I ſay, though it be not very ſeaſonable to complain, Sect. 90.

we may have leave to requeſt this one favour, That we may not be deemed their enemies, becauſe we tell the truth, and have no other deſign imaginable in this diſpute, but to reduce them to a due value of, and obedience to Chriſt's Inſtitution.

Sect. 91. For the other particulars in that 22. Num. which make a difference betwixt Circumciſion and Baptiſm, in reſpect of the remanency of the ſign in the fleſh, but not of this, &c. we have already ſpoken ſufficiently. But when in the cloſe it is pretended, That we are guilty of the greateſt vanity in the World, in affirming, that unleſs the mercies of God be conſigned in Baptiſm, we ſhall want the comfort of it; I muſt, as formerly I have done, anſwer this, by diſclaiming the argument which the Padobaptiſt is ſuppoſed to uſe, and to which this is juſtly objected. For, as in reſpect of God, if it were granted, that his Promiſes were made without any ſign at all, we could abſolutely rely on his Word, and never think he could falſifie that, and ſo want no comfort in reſpect of that; ſo now that we are perſwaded, he hath inſtituted this ſign, we ſhall never be deprived of our comfort, by being deprived of the ſign, unleſs when it is done by our own default, and ſo we are deprived of our innocence alſo. For if through the preſentneſs of danger, we are intercepted the liberty of calling for the miniſter, from him regularly to receive this ſign, or when by his unkindneſs, or neglect of his duty, or by an in-rode of Schiſm we are deprived of, and denied that privilege of bringing our Infants to Baptiſm, we can very comfortably depend on the Promiſe of God, that our infelicities ſhall not be our guilts, much leſs the injuſtices of others, the betraying of thoſe innocents, and ſo we ſhall not want comforts, either when we look on our unbaptized children, or reflect on our ſelves, who diligently ſought it for them. All the uncomfortableneſs of our condition is, to ſee the Inſtitution of Chriſt laid aſide, the practice of the Apoſtles, the perpetual uſage, and Canons of the Church deſpiſed, and our ſelves ſcoffed at, as Formaliſts, or Impoſtors, that deſire to reduce our brethren to the unity of the Church, from whence they are departed, and to the obedience of Chriſt, in all his Ordinances and Inſtitutions, which is a part of that meekneſs, and charity, and peaceableneſs, that was ſo paſſionately by Chriſt recommended to his diſciples, and without which no man hath right to that appellation.

Sect. 92. The 23. Num. begins thus, Now ſince there is no ſtrength in the doctrinal part, the practice and precedents Apoſtolical and Eccleſiaſtical, will be of leſs concernment, if they were true, as is pretended, becauſe actions Apoſtolical are not always rules for ever. That the Practice Apoſtolical ſhould not be of much concernment in this matter, will appear ſtrange to any that remembers but this one thing, That Baptiſm is a Sacrament, that Sacrament an Inſtitution of Chriſt's, that Inſtitution not founded in any reaſon of immutable truth, but onely in the poſitive Will of Chriſt, and ſo that there is nothing conſiderable in this queſtion (or any of this nature) but how it was delivered by Chriſt. And when any queſtion ariſes of that, or ſuch like fact, and that not fully determined by the words of the Inſtitution ſet down in the ſtory of Chriſt, Is there, or can there be any thing of ſo much concernment imaginable, as the Apoſtles practice; and, after that, the Precedents Eccleſiaſtical? When, concerning the other Sacrament of the Euchariſt, any queſtion is made of the meaning of the words of the Inſtitution in the Goſpel, can there be any better way of judging, than by knowing the Apoſtles ſenſe of ſuch words, or ſurer way of diſcerning that, than by their practice, eſpecially if it be ſet down by themſelves? Certainly, this is not a matter for Reaſon to judge in, unleſs it be by deducing conſequences from Chriſt's words, or the Apoſtles, or one or both of their practices. For matters of fact, as theſe are, Teſtimonies are our onely Arguments of probation: And of them, whoſe Teſtimonies are authentick, and who cannot be deemed to have regulated their practice by any rule, but that of Chriſt's Inſtitution, nor to have been deceivable, or fallible in judging of that, Practice is the moſt lively, and infallible Interpreter.

Sect. 93. And if the rule be not univerſal, that All actions Apoſtolical are always rules for ever: yet when the actions are of ſuch a ſacred, and publick nature, that all the ſucceeding world are as much concerned in them as they, and when it is the action not of one Apoſtle alone, upon ſome private impellent, but of all in conjunction, doing the ſame thing, and when in a matter of divine Inſtitution, wherein to doe any thing contrary to the intention of Chriſt, is to violate that truſt repoſed in them, as Proxies, and Commiſſaries; and laſtly, when there is no character in the action, nor propriety in the circumſtances of it, to conclude their practice a temporary practice, deſigned for the preſent onely: When, I ſay, all theſe concur, (and when nothing interpoſes to the contrary to make their practice a rule for the future Church,) there is little gained by pretending againſt us, that actions Apoſtolical are not always rules for ever; when the practice is once granted (and in this part of the diſcourſe it is ſuppoſed) then to render it unconcludent, or no rule for ever, it would be neceſſary to ſhew the grounds of doing it, proper to thoſe circumſtances, and not competible with others, and not to throw off, upon a bare poſſibility or probability, that it may, that which no way appears to have been deſigned temporarily. Nay, that what was done by the Apoſtles, if it were not a rule for ever, was yet an effect of ſuch a rule formerly given by Chriſt, and interpretable by this practice to be ſo, there cannot be a better way to proye than the conſtant practice of the following Church, who, if it were but a temporary Inſtitution, cannot be deemed ignorant of that, or fit to be inſtructed by us in it, and who cannot be imagined to have univerſally joyned in a conſpiracy, to retain that for ever, which they knew to be otherwiſe deſigned by thoſe, from whoſe practice they took it.

Sect. 94. One reaſon or motive is offered us in that 23 Num. why the baptizing of Infants, might be convenient in the Apoſtles times, till they had engaged a conſiderable party, and not after, becauſe 'twas then the new-ſpring of Chriſtianity, and ſo it might be uſefull, by this means to make them parties againſt the Gentile ſuperſtition, and, by preoccupation, to aſcertain them to their ſect, when they came to be men. And truely, if this were a motive for the Apoſtle to baptize Infants at that time, to keep them by this early preoccupation from being heathens; then, Firſt, there is to be acknowledged ſome uſe of baptizing Infants, though they underſtood not then what is done to them, nor yet have any remanent durable quality impreſſed on their fleſh (which was formerly argued againſt:) And ſecondly, 'tis evident, That that reaſon is ſtill as perfectly in force, as ever it was, the danger being ever ſince as great among us, that vicious practices (as contrary to the Law of Chriſt, and irreconcilable with the Promiſes, as the heathen ſuperſtition was) will earneſtly, and irreſiſtibly inſinuate themſelves, if there be not early means uſed to prevent them. And the vow of Baptiſm is as diſtinctly oppoſed to theſe, and the Grace of Chriſt (implored and beſtowed there) as effectual to the preventing, or ſupplanting of them, as of heathen ſuperſtitions it could be ſuppoſed to be.

Sect. 95. And for any other reaſon not tranſmitted to us.] I confeſs not to be moved with ſuch remote, and onely poſſible fears, nor to apprehend (any more than I can be bound to anſwer) the force of a reaſon before it be made known to me. And the rather upon this confidence, that if this reaſon in the Clouds, this reaſon not tranſmitted to us, had yet been tranſmitted to former ages, and by thoſe accounted to be of any weight, It is not imaginable, that through all time, that reaſon would have been oppoſed by the contrary practice of the pureſt, as well as leſs pure ages, and never have prevailed with any, till it met with an handfull of men in theſe laſt and worſt days, to whom alſo 'tis ſuppoſed in the argument, that the reaſon was not tranſmitted, to which it is conſequent, that it did not come down to them.

Sect. 96. In the cloſe of that Num. 23. 'tis again interpoſed, that the queſtion of fact it ſelf is not ſufficiently determined, and the precept of baptizing all nations doth as little advantage to prove it, as any of the reſt, becauſe other parallel expreſſions of Scripture, expound themſelves to a ſenſe that includes not all abſolutely, but onely thoſe that are of a capable condition, as [Worſhip God, and, Sing to him all the nations.] To which I anſwer, Firſt, that I do not believe, or pretend that that precept of Chriſt doth neceſſarily infer (though it do as little deny) that Infants are to be baptized, and ſo this argument thus produced for the Padobaptiſt, is another of the blind and the lame, that are of more uſe to betray and loſe, than defend and ſecure that fort, in which they are placed. Secondly, it is leſs reaſonably pretended, that we ſhould think this place, which is onely a Precept, to be a Proof of the fact, as that ſignifies (and ſo it muſt) the practice Apoſtolical: And yet thirdly, the inſtance that is produced to hinder this Text from concluding, is very infirm alſo: for though in a command to Sing and Worſhip, given to all nations, they that can doe neither, cannot be ſuppoſed included, yet in a command of doing that to others, of which all others are equally capable from thoſe, to whom the command is given (as ſure 'twas as eaſie for the Apoſtle to baptize the Infant as the grown man) there is no reaſon to determine or reſtrain it. And that is the caſe in hand, where the command is not given to all nations to ſeek, or prepare for Baptiſm, but to the Apoſtles to gather and baptize them, and of being carryed and waſhed the child is capable, though of acting and adoring it be not capable.

Sect. 97. To the anſwer Num. 24. rendred to a like argument, pretended to be urged by us from the mention of Stephanas's family [that it is but conjecture at the beſt] I return my explicit conſent, and think it unreaſonable that the Apoſtles bare mention of baptizing his houſhold, 1 Cor. 1. 16. ſhould be thought competent to conclude, that Infants were baptized by him, when it is uncertain, whether there were any ſuch at all in his houſe. What uſe is to be made of ſuch teſtimonies as theſe hath formerly been ſet down, ſo as to yield them unconcludent to this matter; and therefore I ſhall not need to ſay any more of that, but that inconcludent arguments are more advantageous to the enemy, than to any man elſe, and are the moſt favourable account that can be given of the Anabaptiſts Schiſm from the Church, that ſeeing ſome ſuch arguments inſiſted on, which they juſtly believed to be of no force, they likewiſe perſwaded themſelves that others of greater ſtrength, were of as little, and though not by them, were yet by ſome other as eaſily to be avoided, and anſwered alſo.

Sect. 98. The 25 Num. proceeds to conſider Tradition in this matter; and, Firſt, to diſclaim all value of that allegation, Tradition being rejected by the reformed Churches: And ſecondly, to demand how, if the Topick from the Tradition were good, Tradition could be truely pretended for this? To both of theſe the anſwer muſt be joyntly given, firſt, by defining, then by diſtinguiſhing of Tradition.

Sect. 99. Of Tradition. For firſt, the word Tradition ſignifying no more than delivering, and that metonymically taken by Saint Paul for the thing delivered, i. e. either for practices or doctrines delivered by word of mouth, or by Epiſtle, and yet farther brought by cuſtome of ſpeech, to denote thoſe peculiarly, that were delivered by word of mouth, though not by writing, It is evident that what is thus truly delivered, is of the ſame authority with that which is truly written, ſuppoſing the perſon that ſpeaks or writes, and the deliberation uſed by him to be the ſame in both caſes. Thus it is certain, that what is ſpoken, and ſo delivered by Saint Paul, is as truly the doctrine of Saint Paul, and alſo that what is ſpoken by him hath all the authority that belongs to him, as much, as what is written by him.

Sect. 100. A Tradition then being thus defined, that it is either a practice or doctrine delivered by word of mouth, it muſt in the next place be diſtinguiſhed, and that firſt, in reſpect of the perſons, whoſe practice or doctrine it is pretended to be; and ſecondly, in reſpect of the means by which it appears to be truly his, whoſe it is pretended to be. In the firſt reſpect it may be either the doctrine, or practice of Chriſt, or of his Apoſtles, or of ſome following Governors of the Church, or of ſome other either later, or inferior to them. In the ſecond reſpect, it may be either, ſufficiently, or elſe inſufficiently teſtified, to be the practice or doctrine of thoſe, whoſe it is pretended to be.

Sect. 101. This definition and diſtinction being thus premiſed, and it being moſt improvident to define any one thing of that, which contains things ſo diſtant under it, it will be as unreaſonable to make uſe of the authority and practice of the Reformed Churches, to abandon or caſt off Tradition in general, and without diſcrimination, all Traditions, as to conceive that they that rejected errors for appearing to be ſuch, reſolved, whenſoever they ſhould find truths miſcalled by that name, to reject them alſo.

Sect. 102. The firſt queſtion then will be, What ſort of Traditions have been rejected by the Reformed Churches? and then, Whether the baptizing of Infants be of that ſort? and if it be, to give over all farther pleading for it.

Sect. 103. Firſt then, I ſhall ſuppoſe, that whatſoever doth ſufficiently appear to be the practice or doctrine of Chriſt, or his Apoſtles, howſoever it appear, or by what way of conveyance ſoever it comes to us, will not by the Reformed Churches be rejected under the notion of Tradition. For this I am ſure was wont to be the queſtion betwixt the Reformed and the Roman Church, not whether that were to be received, as Christ's, &c. which did sufficiently appear to be his, though it were not written, but whether many things were not falsly affixed to him, and the Apostles, as delivered by them, which did not sufficiently appear to descend from them. Or again, in matters of inferiour nature, Whether that which is by the Romanists affirmed to be the practice, or doctrine of the Governours of the Church, the Apostles successours in the Primitive times, can sufficiently be approved to come from them; or whether it be not of some inferiour or later original, to whom that authority and reverence is not due, which is acknowledged, and willingly paid to the former.

Sect. 104. And therefore, having no necessity to descend to any more minute considerations, the whole matter will be resolved into this one enquiry, Whether the baptizing of Infants doth sufficiently appear to be of the institution of Christ, or Practice Apostolical? and if it do, we have all that we pretend to upon the score of Tradition; and if it do not, we are obliged to disclaim that means of maintaining our plea, or inferring our Conclusion.

Sect. 105. And because the way of satisfying this enquiry, is but the saying over again all that hath been formerly said on this subject, this whole discourse having laid the weight of all upon this one basis, the Institution of Christ, and Practice of the Apostles, It will be unreasonable to doe this any farther, save onely upon a brief recapitulation, to refer it to the judgment of any sober Christian, Whether first, by Christ's founding of the Institution of this Sacrament in the Jewish custome of baptizing of Proselytes, which appears to have belonged to the Infant-children of the Proselytes; and secondly, by his being so far from excepting against the age of children as a prejudice, or hindrance to their coming to him, (i. e. to their Proselytism) that he affirms them to be the pattern of those, of whom his Kingdom is to be made up, and though he be not affirmed in the Gospel to baptize such (when indeed Jesus baptized not at all, but his disciples) yet he took them into his armes, and laid his hands upon them, and blessed them, Mar. 10. 16. (which being the ceremony used in the Church for those that were fitted for Baptism, and distinctly preparative to it, they that were by Christ afforded that, cannot be thought by him less capable of Baptism than of that;) And thirdly, by the expres words of the Apostle, that their children are holy, interpreted by the context, so as to infer from the Apostle's way of arguing, That it was the custome of those Apostolick times to baptize the children of the Christian parents, and so interpreted by the Christian writers of the first and purest ages; And fourthly, by the Testimonies of all the Ancients, that are found to speak of this matter, without any one pretended to dissent, that this was the practice of the Apostles: Whether, I say, these four things being put together (the truth of each which hath been before more largely evinced) it be not sufficiently evident, That the baptizing of children is of the Institution of Christ and Practice Apostolical. If it be not, I desire to know what is farther necessary to sufficient conviction in a matter of this nature, and whether by any more (or equally) competent arguments, the contrary may be evinced to be the Practice of the Apostles, i. e. that they refused to baptize the children of their Proselytes.

Sect. 106. But if it be, I shall not need to take notice of the other branches of that Num. 25. For first, by the Testimonies already produced out of Justin Martyr, Irenæus, Tertullian, as well as Origen, and then by the expres words of the Authour of the Ecclesiastick Hierarchy, and of the Constitutions, and of St. Cyprian, (to which might be added St. Jerom and St. Ambrose) as well as St. Augustine, it is clear, That the Authority for the Tradition, depends not wholly on the Testimony of Origen, as the one person from whom St. Augustine had it. And secondly, there be other arguments to joyn (and which are in force by their conjunction) with these Testimonies for the Tradition, so far, that although it were yielded, that Justin's and Irenæus's, as well as Origen's affirmation might be fallible, that baptism of Infants is by Tradition from the Apostles; and again, that St. Augustine might have it from Origen, and be fallible also; yet when those other circumstances concur with that, which is affirmed by Origen, and no testimony or circumstance in the Institution be producible against it; and Augustine, and the following Church, which condemned all Origen's errours, doth yet appear to agree with Origen in asserting this, as truth, certainly the aspersing of Origen in other respects, will not invalidate, or weaken his Testimony in this.

Sect. 107. So again when it follows, that the necessity of Pædobaptism was not determined in the Church till the eighth age after Christ, this will be of little importance against us, supposing the meaning of that to be, the defining it absolutely necessary to the salvation of the child. For we do not pretend it to be thus necessary, necessitate medii, but derive the necessity of it from the Institution and Practice of Christ, and his Apostles, and charge that onely upon the parents, and the Congregation, whose guilt it is, if the ordinance be neglected, or despised, but not on the Infants, whose want of understanding renders them uncapable of contumacy, and wilfull sin, though not of being baptized or brought to Christ.

Sect. 108. And thirdly, it being granted by the objector, that Pædobaptism was by Canon established in the Milevitan African Council, Ann. Ch. 418. yet, as long as it is also confessed, that it was practised in Africa before, there will be little concluded against us. For what stood by Apostolical practice, and known custome, needed not to be prescribed by Canon, as that which prevails by force of a greater, need not be assisted by a weaker authority. And indeed, while the footsteps of so authentick a Tradition were so lively, and no adversary, or disputer started up, no question, or opposition yet made against a Common Usage, 'twere ridiculous for Councils to convene, and fortifie it by Canons. And so the onely thing reasonably deducible from the lateness of those Canons, is, that all that while it was universally received without opposition: I mean not, that no Infant of any Christian, was unbaptized, through the space of those first Centuries, but that the extending of the Institution to Infants was not opposed in the Church, till about Pelagius's days, whose opinion of Original sin (utterly denying the guilt of it on Adam's posterity) was such, as might consequently produce some change in his opinion of Pædobaptism. But of that I have formerly spoken Sect. 46. As for the saying of Ludovicus Vives, Neminem nisi adultum antiquitus solere baptizari, it is not of such weight, as that I should here stop to examine the truth, or grounds of that citation, the book being not present by me to do so: I suppose it belongs to the Infants of Heathens.

Sect. 109. But Num. 26. the undertaking is somewhat more considerable, viz. that there is very good evidence from Antiquity, that Infants ought not to be baptized: Whether this be justly suggested, it will concern us to enquire warily. For it is affirmed to be clear in the sixth Canon of the Council of Neo-Cæsarea. The words of that Canon are these, Περὶ κυοφορούσης, ὅτι δεῖ φωτίζεσθαι, ὁπότε βούλεται, οὐδὲν γὰρ κοινωνεῖ ἡ τίκτουσα τῇ προαιρέσει διὰ τὸ ἰδίαν εἶναι τὴν προαίρεσιν τὴν ἐν τῇ ὁμολογίᾳ δείκνυσθαι. A woman with child may be baptized when she pleaſe: for the mother hath nothing to doe with the child, becauſe it is each ones will or reſolution, which is expreſſed or ſignified in the confeſſion (or profeſſion, which is wont to be made in Baptiſm.) This certainly is far enough removed from a clear affirmation of what was undertaken to be proved by it, viz. That children ought not to be baptized. For as for the latter part of the words, which is conceived to do ſo, it is no more than this, that the confeſſion or profeſſion of a woman, that being with child is baptized, doth onely belong to her ſelf, not to the child, and conſequently that her Baptiſm belongs onely to her ſelf, alſo. The words being a proof of what was immediately antecedent to them, that the parent hath nothing to doe with the child, οὐδὲν κοινωνεῖ, hath nothing common with him, but hath ἰδίαν προαίρεσιν, a will or choice peculiar to her ſelf, (as ἴδιον is oppoſed to κοινὸν, peculiar, or proper to common) And ſo all that can be concluded from hence, is, that the child of ſuch a parent, that was baptized, when that was in her womb, muſt, when it is born, have a baptiſm for it ſelf, and the baptiſm of the parent not be thought to belong to it. And this in oppoſition to the conceit of ſome Jewiſh Rabbins, (taken up, it ſeems, by ſome Chriſtians) who ſay, Si gravida fiat proſelyta, adeóque lavacro ſuſcipiatur, proli ejus baptiſmo opus non eſt, That if a woman great with child become a proſelyte, and be baptized, her child needs not baptiſm when 'tis born.

As for the giving demonſtration of election or choice required in the baptiſmal confeſſion, of which the child is ſuppoſed incapable, this place doth no farther affirm of it, than it is known to be acknowledged by us, viz. that no baptiſm ought to be adminiſtred but upon condition, and ſuppoſition of a vow to be undertaken then, and after to be performed on the part of the baptized, which, as in thoſe of full age, it muſt be done by themſelves; ſo that in Infants it is not ſufficient to be done by proxies and undertakers, is no-way affirmed, or intimated by that Canon which belongs quite to another matter. Sect. 110.

And for the known cuſtome of interrogating Chatechumeni in baptiſm, and the pretended egregious prevarication in asking queſtions of them, who are known to be uncapable of giving anſwers; this is of no farther force than the uſual exceptions againſt Godfathers, and that cuſtome hath [1] elſewhere been ſufficiently vindicated, and as far as the preſent objection preſſes us, is juſtified abundantly by the capableneſs of the ſureties, or proxies that free the action from all prevarication, and the obligation that from thence devolves upon the child, aſſoon as he comes to years of underſtanding, which will make up and ſupply what other defect ſoever can be imagined in that matter. Sect. 111. [1] Pract. Cath. VI. Sect. 2.

This of the unreaſonableneſs of ſupplying the childs incapacity by the anſwer of the Godfather, and no ſenſible account to be given of it] is farther inſiſted on Num. 27. And the means to prove this unreaſonable, are theſe, 1. That the pretence of the Roman cuſtome of ſtipulation performed by Tutors in the name of their pupils, is an abſolute vanity.] To this I anſwer, That the Tutor's being, by reaſonable men, and by the Roman Law, allowed to ſtipulate, and bargain for his pupil, as it is perfectly agreeable to the caſe in hand (the Infant exactly parallel to the pupil, his real no-will, to the others no-will in Law) ſo it is an example which will juſtifie this practice from the cenſure of unreaſonable, and egregious prevarication, and to that it will be conſequent, not that God muſt be tyed, and Chriſtian Religion tranſact her myſteries by proportion and compliance with the Roman Laws, but that it may without prevarication (in any degree) or unreaſonableneſs, be thus appointed and tranſacted by them in this caſe, as in other kinds of ſtipulation it hath been without danger of ſuch Cenſure. Sect. 112.

For as to the caſe of a notable benefit accrewing to the minor, wherein Stipulation is ſaid by indulgence to be permitted; Firſt, this is not true in any circumſtance. Secondly, if it were, 'twere as reaſonable in baptiſm, as in any other caſe. Firſt, 'tis not true that this was a permiſſion by indulgence, for it was a known diſtinct Law, the Tutor may ſtipulate for the minor as freely, and in all caſes, wherein the man of full age may ſtipulate for himſelf, and not onely in caſe of notable benefit accrewing to the minor, but in caſe of ordinary and equal bargain. And ſecondly, if it were but on indulgence, and permiſſion of grace, why ſhould not the Chriſtian child be as well, and as kindly treated by Chriſtian Religion, as the minor, by the Laws of thoſe heathen Romans? And be the benefit accrewing to the minor never ſo notable, yet being ſuppoſed but a temporal benefit of this life, ſure the favour of admiſſion into the Church, to be a member of Chriſt, to the grace of preſent pardon, and right to all the benefits of the Covenant, as ſoon as they are capable of them, may deſerve to be compared with that notable benefit, that the minor is ſuppoſed to be concern'd in. And though again God can, and, I doubt not, will beſtow thoſe benefits and advantages on that child, whoſe fault it is not, that they are not ſo conſigned to him, this ſtill is a mercy of his, which will no-way juſtifie them, who contemn the uſe of this Sacrament. Sect. 113.

But it is farther inforced, that though 'tis true, God might, if he would, have appointed Godfathers to give anſwer in behalf of the children, yet we cannot find any authority or ground that he hath; and if he had, 'tis to be ſuppoſed he would have given them Commiſſion to have tranſacted the ſolemnity with better circumſtances, and given anſwers with more truth, than to ſay in the child's name, I do believe, in preſent, when the Infant is uncapable of believing. For anſwer to this, it muſt be recounted, what was the original practice in this matter. Among the Jews, ſaith the [m] Gemara Babyl. the Infants uſed to be baptized על דעת upon the profeſſion, or confeſſion of the houſe of judgment, the Conſiſtory; and the Gloſſe ſaith, the Triumviri are ſet over Baptiſm, and are neceſſary to it, ודין נעשין לי אב, and ſo they become to him a Father: and [n] Maimonide, וצריך לטבול בפני שלשה he muſt be baptized before the Triumviri. By this it appears, that among the Jews, from whom Chriſt was pleaſed to tranſcribe this ſacred rite of Baptiſm, this cuſtome alſo was to be found of the Congregation, or Rulers thereof, to anſwer for the Infant, according to that forecited from Saint Auguſtine, that the Church lends them others feet, and heart, and tongue, to come, to believe, to profeſs, &c. Sect. 114. [m] Tit. Chetub. c. 1. [n] Tit. Iſuri Bia. c. 13.

Among the firſt Chriſtians in the Apoſtles age, the ſame uſe ſeems to be continued; for the cuſtome then being to baptize thoſe of age, onely by propoſing to them the faith of Chriſt, and reformation Sect. 115.

of life, and Baptiſm in the name of Jeſus Chriſt for the remiſſion of ſins, Acts 2. 38. and whole multitudes, 3000. on a day, receiving the faith on theſe terms, and being baptized, ver. 41. without any greater formality of queſtion and anſwer; nay the word ἐπερώτημα, 1 Pet. 3. 21. noting not an anſwer, but a queſtion (ſuch as is mentioned Act. 2. 37.) on his part that is baptized, and ſo a coming to God as to the Oracle, ſeeking, making addreſs to him, deſiring upon Chriſt's terms to be received by him, there is no difficulty to underſtand how children being brought by others, that were themſelves baptized, were alſo upon their requeſt, and upon this general declaration of the ends of Baptiſm before the Congregation, which were the terms on which the Infant was ſuppoſed to enter into that Covenant. But ſoon after, when the Church was formed into ſtanding Congregations, and the vow of Baptiſm was contrived into a ſetled form, then, as every Catechumen or inſtructed Proſelyte anſwered for himſelf, ſo every one that was not able to doe ſo, was by ſome perſons of the Congregation (in this particular repreſenting the whole) brought to the βαπτιστήριον, or font, and the queſtions being asked, as in the Baptiſm of the adulti, thoſe that brought them, and ſo helpt them to legs, were their proxies alſo, and helpt them to tongues, and ſo anſwered in the preſent tenſe, i. e. in the ſame form, wherein the adulti did anſwer, which ſignifies not their affirmation, that thoſe Infants did then actually believe (which is the thing charged of untruth) any more than a Tutour ſtipulating, as the proxy of his Pupil, can truely be ſaid to affirm, that the pupil makes ſuch a bargain, of which he knows that he knows nothing. All that is underſtood by ſuch ſpeeches of the Godfathers is, that this is the manner of proxies ſtipulating for others, and that unleſs thoſe others, when they come to full age, think fit to perform in their perſons what was thus ſtipulated by their proxies, they ſhall reap no benefit of that Covenant.

Sect. 116. And this is all that is chargeable on theſe anſwers, far from any degree of untruth, if truely underſtood, (for the Godfather bearing a double perſon, is ſuppoſed to ſay truely in his own, that he doth believe, and as the other's proxy, he deſires that his profeſſion may be in Law accepted for the other, ſo far as to make him capable of Baptiſm, the ſign of God's Promiſes,) no more indeed than moſt ceremonies, and forms of Law may be ſaid to be, the deſigns of which are ſufficiently known by ſober men, and accordingly the words are to be interpreted, I believe, i. e. This child ſtands bound by theſe preſents to believe, and is not to expect any benefit of this Covenant, except, when he comes to years, he do actually (and de præſenti then) believe all the articles of the Chriſtian faith, &c. for which we that do believe them all have now in his behalf, and to his benefit, undertaken it.

Sect. 117. And whereas it is added as the advice of Tertullian, that, Cunctatio baptiſmi utilior eſt, præcipuè circa parvulos, That delaying all baptiſm is more profitable, eſpecially about Infants; and, Quid enim neceſſe eſt ſponſores periculo ingeri, &c. What need is there that the Godfathers ſhould be put upon dangers? and then that Gregory Nazianzen makes mention of ſome, to whom baptiſm was not adminiſtred διὰ ἀνηβότητα, by reaſon of infancy, and that the parents of St. Auſtin, St. Hierome and St Ambroſe, although they were Chriſtians, yet did not baptize thoſe their children before they were thirty years of age. This heap of exceptions will neither ſingly any one of them, nor all in conjunction, conclude any thing againſt us. Not that of Tertullian, which pretends to conclude no more, but that in his opinion it was, in ſome reſpect, advantageous to make ſome ſtay of baptiſm, and that eſpecially in the caſe of little ones, which if it were granted, yet will not that advantage of delay conclude the baptizing of Infants unlawfull, or wholly inconvenient, any more than the baptizing thoſe of age, where delay, in his opinion, might be uſefull alſo. But on the contrary, 'tis a clear teſtimony of the practice in his time of baptizing children, as well as others, and hath been ſo applyed by us, in the former part of this diſcourſe among the teſtimonies prohibited in this matter. And ſo likewiſe is the other paſſage for the uſage of Godfathers, or ſponſores in the Church in Tertullian's days. What the utility was, which Tertullian had in his view, or how well grounded his advice, I ſhall not need now to enquire, his words being a plain proof of the uſage in his time, and therefore not producible againſt us.

Sect. 118. And for Gregory Nazianzen, who is acknowledged to be for haſtning of baptiſm in caſe of neceſſity, and ſo to acknowledge a neceſſity of giving Infants baptiſm in ſome caſes (which is more than ſufficient to our pretenſions) If in his time there be mention of ſome, who were not baptized διὰ ἀνηβότητα (granting that to be tenderneſs of years, and ſo Infancy, whereas it may be otherwiſe, ignorance or want of inſtruction in thoſe of elder years, νήπιος is ἀνόητος, ἄφρων, ἀφωνέστερος, an ignorant, or weak perſon of ſmall underſtanding, as well as νεογνὸς, νεώτερος, μικρὸς, in Heſychius) yet ſure this will conclude nothing againſt us, who are able to make the ſame relations in theſe times, of ſome that have done more than ſo, abſolutely withheld baptiſm from their dying children, and yet know that the doctrine of the Church in this age is contrary to thoſe ſingular practices. And that it was ſo in Gregory Nazianzen's time, may be demonſtrated by this doctrine in this matter, Τίς δ' ἂν εἴποις περὶ τῶν νηπίων, καὶ μήτε τῆς ζημίας ἐπαισθανομένων, μήτε τῆς χάριτος; τί καὶ ταῦτα βαπτίσωμεν; Πάνυ γε εἴπερ τις ἐπείροι κίνδυνος, κρεῖττον γὰρ ἀνεπαΐστως ἁγιασθῆναι, ἢ ἀπολιπεῖν ἀσφράγιστα καὶ ἀτέλεστα. Orat. 40. What wilt thou ſay of children, which neither are ſenſible of the loſs, nor the grace? ſhall we baptize them? Yes, by all means, in caſe of urgent danger. For it is better to be ſanctified, i. e. baptized, without ſenſe of it, than to dye unſealed, unbaptized. And not onely in caſe of danger, but abſolutely, ſaith he, Νήπιόν ὅτι σοι; μὴ λαβέτω καιρὸν ἡ κακία, ἐκ βρέφους ἁγιασθήτω, ἐξ ὀνύχων παιδευθήτω τῷ πνεύματι. Haſt thou a young child? let not wickedneſs receive the advantage of time, let it be baptized from an Infant, let it be early conſecrated by, or to the Spirit, ibid.

Sect. 119. And for the example of the parents of thoſe three Fathers, it will not be producible againſt us, unleſs it be alſo aſſented to and approved by them that urge it, and ſo it be defined exemplary, and imitable not to baptize any before that age of thirty. That baptiſm in thoſe Fathers times, and before their birth, was afforded children, is too well known, to want proving. And St. Auguſtine's doctrine is confeſſed to be extremely contrary to the Anabaptiſts pretenſions: And the grounds of deferring the baptiſm of ſome in that age, were not ſuch as were allowed by the then preſent Church, but effects of an opinion of the greater (not of the leſs) neceſſity of baptiſm, and ſo the unfitteſt evidence, that could have been pitched on, to infer the deſired concluſion.

For

For the Clinici, we know, would not be baptized, till their death-beds; and the reaſon was, becauſe being to be baptized but once; and attributing ſo extremely much to that ceremony, and hoping ſo little for pardon of ſin from any other inſtrument, they durſt not be baptized too early, leſt they ſhould ſin again, and have no remedy. And the deferring baptiſm till thirty or forty years old, was but a ſpice of this fancy, attributing ſo hugely much to baptiſm, and ſo nothing to any thing elſe. But then they that did ſo, were the moſt impatient of any to miſs baptiſm, when they thought they were near their laſt, and would never ſin ſo far againſt their hypotheſis, as to let any Chriſtian's Infant dye without that viand, and ſo doing what they did upon a ſcore ſo contrary to the Anabaptiſts, it were ſtrange if it ſhould be producible in favour of them. Sect. 120.

For the 28. Numb. which is the proving Pædobaptiſm to be againſt the perpetual analogy of Chriſt's doctrine, the firſt offer of a reaſon is, becauſe Chriſt never gave precept to baptize them, nor ever himſelf nor his Apoſtles (that appears) did baptize any of them. To this the anſwer is already given, that Chriſt's baptiſm being founded in the Jews cuſtome of baptizing of Proſelytes, and the cuſtome among them being known to be this, to baptize the Proſelytes, and their children, the indefinite command of baptizing all Nations, was all that was needfull to comprehend the children alſo of thoſe, that received the faith of Chriſt, eſpecially when Chriſt, by a ſpecial expreſſion of his pleaſure concerning Infants, aſſured his Diſciples, that they were capable of ſolemn benediction, which by parity of reaſon will conclude, they were not uncapable of baptiſm alſo. Sect. 121.

As for Chriſt's not baptizing any, that will equally be of force againſt all baptiſm, for the Text is plain, Chriſt baptized not, but his diſciples, John 4. 2. And for the Apoſtles, 1. the negative argument will be of as much force for us, that the Apoſtles (that appears) never rejected any from baptiſm, (nor probably durſt, after they had been rebuked by their Maſter, for ſomewhat of that kind, Mar. 10. 14.) as it can juſtly be deemed againſt us, that they did not baptize any. The truth is, neither of them is argumentative. But then 2. that in the Apoſtles times children were baptized, ſeems plain by that place to the Corinthians, and then there will be but little reaſon to doubt, but the Apoſtles did baptize ſuch, at leaſt (which is all one) that they confirmed and approved that practice. Sect. 122.

The next proof of the propoſal, is from Chriſt's and the Apoſtles requiring ſuch previous diſpoſitions to baptiſm, of which Infants are not capable, viz. faith and repentance, as appears by that one place, Mar. 16. 16. He that believes and is baptized, ſhall be ſaved, but he that believeth not, ſhall be damned. To which I anſwer, Firſt, that in thoſe that are capable of faith and repentance, both thoſe are thus previouſly required, and in thoſe that, through invincible defects, are uncapable at the preſent, they are again required ſo far, that if, when they are capable, they have them not, baptiſm will ſtand them in little ſtead. And this is all that can be concluded from that place of Mark: For ſure that ſentence of damnation ſhall not fall on him that believes not, unleſs he were capable of believing. Nay, ſecondly, it is evident from the words, that Chriſt doth not annex belief to baptiſm, as a neceſſary adjunct to it, at that preſent, for he ſaith not [He that is baptized and believeth] but onely adds Baptiſm to Belief, [He that believeth and is baptized] and ſo belongeth not to this matter. Sect. 123.

But becauſe in the progreſs of that Numb. there is, I ſee, no more concluded from that Text, than that if children are excuſed from a neceſſity of faith, ſo that the want of that does not regularly damn them, then 'twill be ſottiſh to ſay the ſame incapacity of reaſon and faith ſhall not excuſe from the actual ſuſception of Baptiſm. I ſhall need reply no farther, being perfectly reconciled to the concluſion, as far as concerns the excuſing of the child, and not having the leaſt fear, that the child ſhall ever ſuffer for another's negligence in this matter. But then ſtill the child having a capacity of ſuſception of Baptiſm, i.e. of being baptized, though not of faith or repentance, or neglecting or ſeeking of baptiſm; they that deny the child that privilege, of which it is ſuſceptive or capable, may become uncapable of that excuſe, when the innocent Infant ſtands in no need of it. Sect. 124.

As for the queſtion, Whether Infants have faith, Numb. 29. I ſhall profeſs to be none of thoſe, who are concern'd in it, I freely confeſs to believe faith to be ſo neceſſarily founded in underſtanding, that they that have not underſtanding, cannot have faith, whether actual or habitual; and when the Apoſtle ſaith, that faith cometh by hearing, I ſuppoſe he hath fully ſtated that queſtion. For whatſoever can be ſaid of infuſed habits, thoſe muſt ſuppoſe the ſubjects capable of them, or by being infuſed, render them ſo. As the gift of ſtrange tongues, when 'tis ſupernaturally infuſed, muſt either ſuppoſe the ſubject prediſpoſed with underſtanding, and ability of ſpeaking ſome language, or muſt make him ſo by that infuſion. And beſides, what graces are imaginable to be infuſed into Infants, will in reaſon be concluded to be infuſed at Baptiſm, or as effects and conſequents of that, and ſo will be equally unfit to qualifie for Baptiſm (which is to be done by previous diſpoſitions) as if there were no ſuch habits acknowledged. Sect. 125.

And ſo the reaſon taken from the Infant ſent to the Mahumedane Province] is yet ſtronger, than is pretended. For, unleſs the Infant, that is to be baptized, be before his baptiſm ſo imbued by divine overſhadowing, or infuſion, that, if in ſtead of being carryed to the font, he ſhould be carryed to a Prieſt of Mahomet, and there circumciſed, and inſtructed in the Turkiſh principles, he would yet, as he came to years of underſtanding, produce acts of Chriſtian faith, there will be little reaſon to affirm, that Infants of Chriſtians have habitual faith previous to their Baptiſm. Sect. 126.

The ſame inconveniences, I ſuppoſe, will lye againſt ſeminal faith in Infants, Firſt, becauſe if that be taken in, as a ſuppletory, to give the child capacity of baptiſm, it muſt then be ſuppoſed previous to, and not beſtowed in, or after baptiſm: And ſecondly, 'tis apparent that the ſeeds of faith are ſown in inſtruction, or catechizing (and ſo, as faith cometh by hearing, ſo doth hearing by the word of God) and they grow not up, till they have been thus ſown. Sect. 127.

As for the imputative faith, I ſuppoſe they that ſpeak of it, mean no more than thus, that the children of Chriſtian Parents, though they have not faith actually, habitually, ſeminally, may yet lawfully be admitted to Baptiſm, becauſe their Parents being Chriſtian, and they likely to be brought up in a Chriſtian ſociety, this may ſo far ſtand them in ſtead, that upon preſumption of the care of the Parents (who deſire Baptiſm for them) that they ſhall be brought up in the faith of Chriſt, and upon the preſent undertaking of the Godfathers (which are by the Congregation appointed to repreſent the child, and ſtipulate in his name) they may (though they are at the preſent uncapable of faith, or Sect. 128.

new vows) be admitted to Baptiſm, and ſo pre-engaged, before any rival luſt, or falſe profeſſion be able to ſolicite them. And if this be the meaning, then, though it cannot be ſaid, that they have imputative faith, for they have not faith themſelves, and other folks faith will never be imputed to them ſo, that they ſhall be thought to have it, yet it may truly be affirmed, that they are look'd on to this purpoſe as kindly, and are as fit to be hoſpitably received by the Church, i. e. to be baptized, as if they had faith, the extreme probability of the hope at preſent, that they will be competently inſtructed, when they come to years (and that ſecured as well, as humanely it can be) being ſufficient to ſound their Baptiſm upon, though it be not certain that they will ever believe; As the profeſſion made by one of full age is his ſufficient qualification, though the Church is not ſure that he is not an hypocrite at that minute, or that he will not be an Apoſtate the next, and, when perſecution ariſes for the Word, be ſtreightway ſcandalized.

Sect. 129. The 30. Numb. demands, If baptiſm be neceſſary to the ſalvation of Infants, upon whom is the Impoſition laid? upon the Parents, or the Children? Not the Children, for they are not capable of a Law; not the Parents, for then God hath put the ſalvation of innocent babes into the power of others. To this I anſwer, by renouncing the whole hypotheſis affixt, by this way of arguing, to the maintainers of Pædobaptiſm. For we do not at all pretend it neceſſary to the ſalvation of Infants, upon the very ground that the Diſputer preſumes it unneceſſary, becauſe it being acknowledged by all that it is not the omiſſion, but contempt of Baptiſm, that damns, theſe two are not diſtinguiſhable in Children, who can be ſaid no more to omit, than to contemn it. All the neceſſity we pretend to in this matter of Infants, is præcepti, not medii, not that it is a means, without which they cannot be ſaved, for then the argument would hold that they might be damned, or not ſaved by another's default, without their own, but that, firſt, having foundation in the Inſtitution of Chriſt (as that being founded in the Jews baptizing of Proſelytes, belonged conſequently to their young children alſo) and ſecondly, authorized farther by the Apoſtles practice, and thirdly, uſed through all ages of the Church accordingly; and fourthly, when the perverſneſs of heretical men queſtioned and oppoſed it, defined by Councils; and fifthly, at length commanded by the Church. From hence, I ſay, the neceſſity reſults, and not from any other principle. And this being underſtandable onely by men of age, is not ſuppoſeable to be given to any others, and ſo the guilt in this matter is acknowledged to lie onely on thoſe, i. e. either on the Parents that refuſe, or neglect it, diſlike, or ſeek it not for their children, or on the Miniſters, who refuſe to give Baptiſm, or on the Diſputers, that infuſe theſe ſcruples unneceſſarily into mens heads, or on the factious, that break the unity of the Church on ſuch cauſeleſs diſlikes as theſe, and inſtead of returning to the Church, exclude all regular obedient Sons thereof from their communion.

Sect. 130. The 31. Numb. propoſes ſome inconveniences, which the baptizing of Infants ruſhes men upon: The foundation of which is laid in this dilemma, Either Baptiſm produces ſpiritual effects, or it produces them not, &c. To prevent all force of thus arguing, I ſay, that if by ſpiritual effects are meant Grace and Glory, Baptiſm of Infants produces not ſuch effects, and conſequently they are not the nearer to heaven, if they are (i. e. as an effect from a cauſe, by their being) baptized, nor, if it be neglected, the farther off. And conſequently the argument that ſuppoſed without all peradventure, that all Pædobaptiſts would ſay, that their baptiſm did produce ſpiritual effects, is preſently at an end. All that we ſay of Baptiſm is, that it is a federal ceremony of Chriſt's Inſtitution, to waſh away Original guilt, and to admit us Proſelytes unto himſelf by his Church, the conduit by which Chriſt is pleaſed to convey Grace, and ſo gives us a ſolemn legal ſeizure of the advantages and benefits of the Covenant (all that at the preſent they are, or for the future ſhall be capable of) on condition they perform on their part (as ſoon as they are able to perform it) what on their part is promiſed in their names: wherein if they do not willingly fail, as, in caſe they dye in infancy, 'tis certain they do not, there is no queſtion, but the mercies conſigned in Baptiſm, may by God's gracious ſupplies belong unto them. And it being as certain, that when, without any fault of theirs, they are unbaptized, that defect will never be charged upon them for evil, it muſt be reſolved, that thoſe advantages that are conſigned in Baptiſm, are not effects produced by it, and conſequently that the inconveniences or rocks imagined in that arguing, have been without that admonition very cautiouſly foreſeen, and avoided by us.

Sect. 131. As for the ſum of the argument compacted into little, that either Baptiſm is a mere ceremony, or it implies a duty on our part: if a ceremony onely, how does it ſanctifie? if it implies a duty, how can children receive it, who cannot doe duty at all? I anſwer, That it is a ſacred ceremony, which contains in it a duty to be performed on our part, aſſoon as we are able to perform it, but requires it not of us, whilſt we are unable. And this is a perfect anſwer to all that follows in that Number, charging us to make Baptiſm a mere outward duty, a work of the Law, &c. which is all unjuſtly imputed to us, who do as verily believe it an inward duty, ſhadowed by the outward ceremony, when 'tis uſed to an Infant (and that, the being baptized into Chriſt's death, and the crucifixion of the old man, &c.) as when 'tis uſed to the grown man; onely with this reſerve, that it is no ſooner nor farther required of either, than they are capable of performing it.

Sect. 132. As for the Syllogiſm, that whoſoever are baptized into Chriſt, have put on the new man, Gal. 3. 27. But to put on the new man is to be formed in righteouſneſs, and holineſs, and truth, Eph. 4. 24. therefore they who are not formed new in righteouſneſs, &c. they who remaining in the preſent incapacities, cannot walk in newneſs of life, &c. they have not been baptized into Chriſt. The anſwer is obvious, that in the major Propoſition, the words of the Apoſtle [have put on Chriſt] muſt neceſſarily be interpreted not of actual putting him on, for 'tis certain that many men that have been baptized, have not actually done ſo, It is clear in Simon Magus, Acts 8. 21. and in all that bring not (as Cyril ſaith in Præfat. Cat. p. 1.) Ὑγιοῖαν προθυμίαν, a gennine purpoſe along with them to the baptiſtery, and 'tis certain, that the Apoſtle could not ſo underſtand it of any of thoſe Galatians, to whom he then wrote, whom he acknowledged to be fooliſh (ἀνόητοι, without underſtanding, and if that be not as great, 'tis yet a more deſperate incapacity, than being νήπιοι babes) and bewitched, or ſeduced not to obey the Goſpel of Chriſt; but ſo onely, as to note the obligation that lay upon them from their Baptiſm, and from thence the preſumption of the Apoſtle, that they had undertaken and reſolved it. As many as were baptized into Chriſt have put on Chriſt, i. e. are moſt ſtrictly ſtrictly obliged thereby, and are preſumed to have reſolved, and undertaken to put on Chriſt, and the new man. This is all that is deducible from thoſe words, (unleſs I farther add, that they have the prohibens, the obſtacle which kept Chriſt from them or them from Chriſt, (i.e. original guilt) removed) and that is as truly affirmed of the Infant, as of the grown man, with the ſame reſerve again, when he ſhall be able to perform it, as the ἐπερώτημα ἀγθρώπε, as Arian calls it, the Promiſe of every reaſonable creature, when he hath firſt leave to become ſuch, the ὅρκος ἐνσεμνύθ, the oath ineſſentiate with us, i.e. the obligation that our Creation lays upon every child of Adam, is actually required of thoſe onely that are of age to perform it, but may be in the mean time preſumed even in the womb of the Mother to be undertaken by us; This by our being deſigned to the uſe of Reaſon, as that by our being Proſelytes to Chriſtianity.

The ſame anſwer ſuffices for that which is brought from Saint Peter's definition of the ſaving Baptiſm, that 'tis not onely the waſhing with water, but the ἐπερώτημα of a good conſcience. For this is as true of that Baptiſm which belongs to children, as to any other, onely the duty of it is not required, till they come to years, and ability to perform it, and then, if they keep not a good Conſcience, it will be little available. And if this be of any force againſt baptizing Infants, it will have been of the ſame force againſt circumciſing them, ſince Saint Paul, Rom. 2. 28, 29. doth as much invalidate the external part of Circumciſion, as Saint Peter here doth that of Baptiſm. Sect. 133.

It is added in the cloſe of that Numb. that vows made by perſons under others names, ſtipulations made by minors, are not valid, till they by a ſupervening act, after they are of a ſufficient age, do ratifie them. But this is not exactly true, as it is ſet, and as far as it is true, 'tis not prejudicial to our Pretenſions. For firſt, Stipulations made by minors, or by the Tutor in the minor's name, are valid by law, as long as he continues in minority, and when he comes out of that, then it is in his power to reſcind, or annull the bargain, or on the other ſide to confirm it, and if he do ſo, it needs not to be by way of new ſtipulation (which is a matter of more ſolemnity in law) a bare confirmation under hand and ſeal gives it a perpetual unretractable validity. And juſt ſo it is in this caſe; the Covenant is entred into at Baptiſm, the ſtipulation made by the Godfather in the name and behalf of the Infant, and remains valid to all uſes, ſo long as the child remains ſo. Afterward, when he comes to chuſe for himſelf, if he like not the bargain that is made for him, he may reſcind it, and turn heathen again, or he may ratifie it, and then by undertaking the vow of Baptiſm deliberately, and upon judgment, in his own name, he is capable of Confirmation. And this is ſo far from proving that which is of the Anabaptiſts turn, that it is fully ſatisfactory to all his pretenſions againſt it. For whatſoever defect he complains of in Pædobaptiſm, or entring into the Covenant by Proxy, is ſupplied and repaired by Confirmation, which is the renewing the vow of Baptiſm in his own name, and being ſuperſtructed on Baptiſm, is the performing all that, which in the child is ſuppoſed wanting to the conſummation of that Sacrament. Sect. 134.

And therefore when it is demanded, Why the Infants (I ſuppoſe it ſhould be children catechiſed) may not as well make the vow de novo, as de novo ratifie that which was made for them ab antiquo, when they come to years of choice; I anſwer, that the reaſon is, firſt, in reſpect of the matter, becauſe it is unneceſſary, and wholly uſeleſs; Confirmation will ſerve the turn as well. And that being granted, a ſecond reaſon will be taken from the Authority of the Church, and expreſs Canons of Councils, and, I ſuppoſe, from the Apoſtolick Inſtitution of Confirmation. All which are ſure of ſuch weight to any obedient ſon of the Church, that in a matter ſo perfectly lawfull on that ſide, that the inſtitution lies, it is not onely ſafe to comply (and that is enough againſt the Anabaptiſt, who pretends it unlawfull) but matter of obedience, and Chriſtian duty, which obliges us to ſubmit to thoſe that are ſet over us, at the leaſt not to ſeparate from any for no other crime, but of obedience to theſe Parents of ours, in ſuch lawfull (perfectly lawfull) Commands. Sect. 135.

Numb. 32. proceeds to prove the Anabaptiſts way the ſurer, and the onely medium is, that it is moſt proportionable to an act of reaſon and humanity, and it can have no danger. For to ſay that Infants may be damned for want of Baptiſm, is to affirm that of God, which we dare not ſay of any wiſe and good man. To this I anſwer, that I am abſolutely reſolved, that no child ſhall be damned for want of Baptiſm, and that upon the very reaſon rendred, becauſe it is not a thing in their power to acquire, they being perſons not yet capable of a law, and conſequently not capable of tranſgreſſing it. But this doth not yet conclude it the ſurer courſe, nor yet ſo ſure as the contrary, becauſe that which hurts the Parents, or thoſe, whoſe ſoever the duty is to bring the children to Baptiſm, cannot be ſaid to be innocent. And indeed, the very ſuppoſition, that the Infant's incapacity of the command ſecures him from receiving hurt by the omiſſion of Baptiſm, implies, that, if it were imputable to him, it would do him hurt, and therefore muſt be deemed to do ſo to thoſe, that being capable (and now offered matter of conviction by this paper, both from the inſtitution of Chriſt, and practice of the Apoſtles, and the uſage, and (at length, when it was needfull) commands of the Church, not to deny it to Infants) do ſtill with contumacy, reject, and vilifie it. And for proportionableneſs to acts of humane Reaſon, it is certainly moſt ſo, in providence, to take the ſureſt for all ſides. That in caſe there be any neceſſity of it, more than we are aware of, in caſe any bleſſing of a preſent benefit, either from the Protection of Angels, or from preparing and prediſpoſing grace to the child, accompanying the Parents obedience, or the benediction of the Church, then by bringing the child to Baptiſm, we make ſure of it, but make no ſuch proviſion by omitting it. Sect. 136.

Numb. 33. is a congeries of charges, every one of great weight, but without offer of proof of any one of them, I ſuppoſe, upon a preſumption, that they are proved before in the former arguments, which if it be a due preſumption, then by the ſame reaſon I may flatter my ſelf, that they are not to be cauſes of new trouble to us, now that the precedent reaſons, which are thought to infer thoſe odious concluſions, are each of them anſwered in the premiſſes. Sect. 137.

Onely to the laſt branch, that they that baptize Infants invocate the holy Ghoſt in vain; the addition of theſe words [doing as if one ſhould call on him to illuminate a ſtone or a tree] being reducible to ſome ſhew of a reaſon, why it ſhould not be done, My anſwer is, That an Infant, that hath the firſt power or faculty of reaſon in him, which a ſtone or a tree hath not, is truly capable of receiving benefit by this Sect. 138.

prayer, if not while that firſt power is not reduced into act, yet afterwards, whenſoever it is, and if it may be but one minute the earlier illuminated, or one dram the more effectually indued with preventing and inciting grace, in anſwer to thoſe prayers of the Church, this ſure will be a teſtimony and evidence, that the prayer is not in vain. And if that may not be, it will be hard to affirm, and prove, that any thing elſe may be advanced, or wrought by that means, and then all other prayers (if the Anabaptiſt will allow any) ſhall be concluded to be vain alſo.

Sect. 139. I have paſſed through all the ſeveral heads of arguments, that are here propoſed, and conſidered them, as nicely as I could, ſo as not to let fall one word that ſeemed to me to have any ſhew of validity in it, or in the conſequence of it, and muſt conſent to the truth of the Authour's obſervation, that the Anabaptiſts have been encouraged in their errour more by the accidental advantages given them by the weakneſs of thoſe arguments, that have been brought againſt them, than by any truth of their cauſe or excellency of their wit. And indeed, though againſt the arguments premiſed by this Authour, in behalf of Pædobaptiſm, the contrary arguments have ſeemed unto many, to have been ſucceſsfull and victorious, yet againſt the grounds, which have here been briefly laid for this practice, in the beginning of this diſcourſe, and againſt the practice, as 'tis ſtated and maintained by us, it will, I believe, be ſoon diſcerned, that neither any, nor all of them, will be applyable with any advantage or ſucceſs.

Sect. 140. If I had the ſagacity to foreſee, or had been ſo diligent, as to obſerve any other head of Objection or exception againſt this practice of the Church, I ſhould now farther enlarge this Paper to conſider, it, but being not ſure, that I have any reaſon to do ſo, and having ſhew'd how far Chriſt, and his Apoſtles, and the Church have gone in this buſineſs, and how little excuſe any intelligent perſon can probably have, in rejecting the uniform reſult of all theſe, I ſhall joyn fraternally and cordially in the concluſion, and be no forwarder, nor no more peremptory to preſcribe to others, than theſe Authorities will juſtifie me to be (certainly not ſo forward as the Anabaptiſts, or Antipædobaptiſts are to preſcribe to us, and to charge on us things of ſome weight (if Num. 33. ſay true) the polluting the bloud of the everlaſting Covenant, &c.) And God forbid, we that deſire to reduce diſſenters to the unity of the Church, and cannot probably have any other deſign or aim in that endeavour, but the eternal good of others, ſhould ever think of damning, killing, or perſecuting any that diſſent in this or any other particular.

Sect. 141. Our deſire is that of Ignatius, τὸς παρεξυσμὸς ἐμβροχαῖς πάυειν, to allay the ſharp humour, by applying the ſoft Word, and to cure by embrocation, not by cauſticks or exciſion. And I think it but duty to pray againſt that treacherous proſperity, which ſhould be able to infuſe any greater degree of unkindneſs, or roughneſs in the minds of men, whether ſons, or fathers of the Church, than what I here avow to be ſtrict duty in every Chriſtian.

The Fifth QUÆRE.

Of Impoſition of Hands for Ordination.

Sect. 1. TO the next queſtion concerning Impoſition of Hands for Ordination, although much may be ſaid, yet I ſuppoſe that which is neceſſary to the ſatisfaction of any reaſonable man, may be contrived within a moderate compaſs. Firſt, by examining the words, by which it is expreſſed, and in one of them the Ceremony, Impoſition of Hands, which is uſed in it, and then proceeding to that of which it is the ceremony, the office, or power conferred by it.

Sect. 2. The words by which Ordination is expreſt in Scripture. καθιςῆσαι, χειροτονεῖν. For the firſt of theſe, there are four words uſed in the New Teſtament to expreſs this matter: Firſt, καθιςῆσαι, Tit. 1. 5. to conſtitute, where Paul is ſaid to have left Titus in Crete, to conſtitute Elders in each City. Secondly, χειροτονεῖν, a word that literally ſignifies to ſtretch out or hold up the hand; but being uſed among the heathens for chuſing, or any ſort of ſuffrage, or giving of ſentence, which among them in popular Judicatures, or choices, was wont to be done by that ceremony of ſtretching out, or lifting up of hands, it is in vulgar uſe among heathen, and Jewiſh, but eſpecially among Chriſtian Writers, brought to ſignifie, without any reſpect to giving of ſuffrages, (indifferently, whether by one, or more) conſtituting or ordaining, which is directly all one (and no more) with καθιςῆσαι before named.

Sect. 3. This is not ſo generally acknowledged by late Writers, but that it may be uſefull to give ſome few Teſtimonies of it out of thoſe Writers which were neareſt the times of the Scripture. Thus Philo Judæus of Joſeph, βασιλέως ὕπαρχος ἐχειροτονεῖτο, He was ordained Governour of all Ægypt under the King, where it is clear, that without any other ſuffrages, he was by Pharaoh ſo conſtituted, Gen. 41. 40. Pharaoh ſaid unto Joſeph, Thou ſhalt be over my houſe: and Pſalm 105. 21. He made him Lord of his houſe, and Ruler of all his ſubſtance; and Acts 7. 10. the very word [καθίςησι] is uſed of it, Pharaoh conſtituted him Governour over Ægypt, and over all his own houſe. So again of Moſes, ἡγεμὼν ἐχειροτονεῖτο, He was conſtituted their Ruler, not by any choice of theirs, but onely by God's appointment. So of Aaron's ſons, ἱερεῖς ἐχειροτόνει, God inſtituted them Prieſts. So in Joſephus, Ant. l. 13. c. 5. Alexander ſon of Antiochus Epiphanes writes to Jonathan, χειροτονῦμέν σε ἀρχιερέα Ἰεδαίων, καὶ φίλον ἡμῶν καλεῖσθαι, We (i. e. I, in the regal ſtyle) conſtitute thee chief Prieſt of the Jews, and to be called my friend. So Lucian of Alexander's kindneſs to Hepheſtion, Θεὸν χειροτονῆσαι τὸν τετελευτηκότα, that he made him a God when he was dead. So in Hierocles ſons are ſaid to be ζωκόοι καὶ ἱερεῖς ὑπ' αὐτῆς χειροτονημένοι καὶ καθιερωμένοι τῆς φύσεως, Prieſts choſen and ordained by nature it ſelf to perform due offices to the parent. See Stobæ. p. 462. And when the word is uſed of the Romans, as oft oft it is in Appian, Dio, &c. it muſt neceſſarily be taken in this ſenſe, becauſe that of Election by lifting up of hands was not in uſe among them, but onely among the ancient Grecians. For the uſe of it among Chriſtian writers, it is moſt evident, that it belongs not to elections by the ſuffrages of many, but to Ordinations by ſingle Apoſtles; Take one place for many, in the Author of the Conſtitutions, l. 7. c. 45. Κλήμης μετὰ τὸν Λίνου θάνατον ὑπὸ Πέτρου δι' ἐπιθέσεως χειροτονήθη, τῆς δὲ Ἐφέσου Τιμόθεος ὑπὸ Παύλου, Ἰωάννης δὲ ὑπὸ Ἰωάννου, Clement after the death of Linus, was ordained Biſhop of Rome by Peter, and Timothy was ordained Biſhop of Epheſus by Paul, and John by John. Where it is evident, that three ſingle perſons, St. Peter, St. Paul, St. John, are each of them, in ſeveral Congregations, affirmed to ordain Biſhops, and this word peculiarly choſen to expreſs it. And though there be queſtion made of the Author, and authority of thoſe Conſtitutions, yet ſure for the uſe of a word their Authority is ſufficient, and might be backt with many others, who have never been queſtioned. By all which it appears, that the word is ſimply uſed for conſtituting, without any conſideration of any ceremony of lifting up, or ſtretching out hands, whereby it was done. And thus it is uſed in the New Teſtament, Acts 10. 41. where Chriſt's diſciples are ſaid to be προκεχειροτονημένοις ὑπὸ τοῦ Θεοῦ, deſigned, or foreconſtituted by God, the witneſſes of his Reſurrection. So Acts 14. 22. of Paul and Barnabas, χειροτονήσαντες πρεσβυτέρους κατ' ἐκκλησίαν, conſtituting, or creating Elders in every Church. Where they that have look'd ſo far back to the original of the word, as to think it neceſſary to render it ſuffragiis creare, to create by ſuffrages, are ſure guilty of very impertinent nicety: for to ſay that they created them by their own ſuffrages, is to ſay no more but that they joyntly did create them, and indeed being but two, there could be no place for ſuffrages; and to affirm they did it by the ſuffrages of others, is not agreeable to the pretended uſe of the word: For where it is uſed of chuſing by ſuffrages (as when the people are ſaid χειροτονεῖν to ſtretch out their hands, and chuſe) it is certain that their own, not others ſuffrages, are meant by it.

Sect. 4. Συγκατεψηφίσθη, Act. 1. miſtaken.

The like miſtake it is, whereby συγκατεψηφίσθη, Act. 1. 28. is (in favour to ſome mens intereſts) rendred, Communibus calculis annumerabatur, he was by joynt ſuffrages choſen and numbred with the eleven Apoſtles, merely by looking on the original of the word, and the parts of it taken aſunder, σὺν with, and καταψηφίζω, to number, or to chuſe by ſtones or the like; whereas 'tis clear, Firſt, that Matthias being there choſen by lot, was not choſen by conſent, or ſuffrages of men; and ſecondly, that ψηφίζειν ſignifying originally two things, 1. giving ſentence, or voice by ſtones (on which the cuſtome was in elections to inſcribe a name, Rev. 2. 17.) and 2. to number by ſtones, as counters (whence ψῆφος is expreſſed in Heſychius by λόγος, (as that ſignifies counting) as well as κρίσις judgment) it may moſt probably in that place ſignifie no more than [was numbred] and ſo be all one with καταριθμηθεὶς τοῖς σὺν ἡμῖν, he was numbred with us, ver. 17. and that explained by ἔλαχε κλῆρον, he obtained his portion in this miniſtery, i.e. office Apoſtolical: Or if it ſhould poſſibly refer to the notion of election, muſt denote God's choice of him ver. 24. by the diſpoſing of the lot to fall upon him, (and not any ſuffrages of others, which cannot be appliable to that matter) and in compoſition with σὺν ſignifies no more than was expreſſed ver. 22. σὺν ἡμῖν γενέσθω, his being by the lot joyned with the eleven, to be an Apoſtle or witneſs of Chriſt's Reſurrection.

Sect. 5.

But this by the way, which yet was ſeaſonable to be added here, becauſe in that place καταψηφίζειν, if it ſhould ſignifie chuſing, would be all one in effect with χειροτονεῖν before mentioned, neither of them relating to the manner of chuſing, but both ſimply denoting to conſtitute, or appoint.

Sect. 6.

By all which appears the no great weight or ſolidity of thoſe Grammatical contentions, concerning the [a] identity or difference of χειροτονία and χειροθεσία, the [χεὶρ, hand] which is the ſame in both, perſuading ſome for the identity, and the difference betwixt extending and laying on, perſuading others that they differ: whereas the truth ſeemeth to lye (as moſt commonly it doth) in the midſt between the contenders, the agreement betwixt them being not from the common mention of the hand, but upon another ſcore, becauſe χειροτονεῖν ſignifying to ordain, and conſtitute in general, without referring to any ceremony in doing it, may fitly (ſeeing it doth not exclude any ceremony) be uſed for the ordaining a Biſhop, who is conſtituted with that ceremony of impoſition of hands. And thus the obſervation of Zonaras will ſtand good, Νῦν μὲν χειροτονία καλεῖται ἡ τῆς εὐθειρίστου τῆ ἱερᾷδι λόγου τελειουργία, ᾗ τὸ ἁγίου πνεύματος ἐπίκλησις διὰ τῆς τῶν Ἀρχιερέων τείνεων τῶν χεῖρα ἀλογοῦντα τὸν χειροτονήσαντα. Now the word is uſed for the conſecration of the Prieſt, and invocation of the Spirit, becauſe the Biſhop ſtretcheth out his hand when he bleſſeth him that is ordained; (and accordingly Theophylact on 2 Tim. 1. 6. inſtead of St. Paul's, διὰ ἐπιθέσεως τῶν χειρῶν μου, by impoſition of my hands, hath ὅτε σε ἐχειροτόνουν ἐπίσκοπον, when I ordained thee Biſhop: And when Johannes Antiochenus mentions Evodius being made Biſhop of Antioch, he expreſſes it by, τὴν χειροτονίαν τῆς ἐπισκοπῆς ἔλαβεν, he received Epiſcopal Ordination, and many the like) and the difference between them on another account alſo, becauſe χειροθεσία impoſition of hands, together with that of conſtituting, denotes alſo that particular ceremony uſed in ſome, but not in all deſignations and conſtitutions, and ſo muſt needs be of a narrower extent, than the other is, which belongs indefinitely to all, and doth not refer to that, or any other ceremony.

[a] See Zonaras and Balſamon on the Apoſtol. Can. I.

Sect. 7.

The ſhort of it is, χειροτονία ſignifies originally ſtretching forth the hand, and though that ſtretching out may be preparative (as it is in Jacob, Gen. 48. 14.) to laying on in benedictions, yet being of an heathen, not Jewiſh origination, as in vulgar uſe it is taken for any kind of appointing, or conſtituting, ſo onely (and in no other reſpect) it is made uſe of in the Scriptures of the New Teſtament, for the conſtituting, or deſigning to any office in the Church, whether by God, or by men, (Apoſtles, that derived power from God) or by the whole Church, as in the nominating one to travel with Paul, 2 Cor. 8. 19. and that is all that is meant by, or can be juſtly collected from the Word.

2 Cor. 8. 19.

Sect. 8. Ἀφορίζειν. Exod. 13. 2.

A third word there is once uſed Acts 13. 2. ἀφορίζειν to ſeparate] the holy Ghoſt ſaid, Separate unto me Paul and Barnabas for the work, the ſame word that is uſed Exod. 13. 2. in conſecrating to God the firſt-born, deſigning, ſetting them apart to thoſe uſes, to which God hath called, or ſhall pleaſe to employ them.

Sect. 9. Χειροθεσία.

The fourth and the laſt word is (that which was even now mentioned, and now muſt more largely be ſpoken of) χειροθεσία, impoſition of hands; which, how, or by what peculiarity it belongs to this matter, muſt briefly be explained.

To

Sect. 10. Impoſition of hands in the Old Teſtament.

To lift up the hands was a ceremony in prayer, Exod. 17. 11. and accordingly to lay the hands on any (differing no otherwiſe from lifting up, than by the determining that action to a particular object, the perſon that was prayed for) was generally among the Jews a ceremony of benediction, uſed firſt by the father to the children, in beſtowing the bleſſing upon them (and with that the ſucceſſion to ſome part of his eſtate, the inheritance) as appears in Jacob's bleſſing the children of Joſeph, Gen. 48. 14.

Gen. 48. 14. he ſtretched out his hand, and laid it upon Ephraim's head, and ſo his left hand on Manaſſes, and ſo he bleſſed, &c. ver. 15. from thence it was accommodated among them to the communicating any part of power to others, as aſſiſtents, or to the deriving of any ſucceſſive office from one to another. Thus when Moſes had from heaven received, and long uſed this commiſſion, to be, under God, the ruler of

Numb. 11. 17. the people, and firſt, the Seventy Elders were by God's appointment aſſumed to aſſiſt him, Num. 11. 17. and part of his ſpirit was by God put upon them, ver. 25. this, ſaith Maimonides Sanhedr. c. 4. was done by Moſes laying hands upon them. And at length a little before his departure out of this life, when a ſucceſſour was to be provided for him, God commands him to take Joſhua, and lay his hands

Numb. 27. 18. upon him, Num. 27. 18. and that as a token of his putting his honour upon him, ver. 20. i. e. making him the ſucceſſor in integrum of the whole dignity, and authority which he had enjoyed ſo long, that, as the Text ſaith, all the Congregation of Iſrael may be obedient, paying him the ſame obſervance, that they had paid to Moſes. And accordingly it was done, Moſes laid his hands upon him, and gave him a charge as the Lord commanded by the hand of Moſes, ver. 23. i. e. by that ceremony derived to him the authority, which himſelf had had, conſtituted him his ſucceſſour in that Government.

Deut. 34. 9. And ſo 'tis repeated again, Deut. 34. 9. Joſhua was full of the ſpirit of wiſedom, for Moſes had laid his hands upon him, and the children of Iſrael harkened unto him, &c. And ſo for thoſe ſeventy Elders (that were, by God's immediate deſcent into a cloud, conſtituted aſſiſtents unto Moſes, and conſequently had their original immediately from heaven alſo) 'tis certain from the Jewiſh writings, though the ſacred Scripture have no occaſion to mention it, that the ſucceſſion of theſe (under the name of the συνέδριον or Sanhedrin, or Council) was continued through all ages by their creating others in the place of thoſe that dyed, by this ceremony of the סמיכה impoſition of hands. To this purpoſe are the clear words of Maimonides tr. Sanhedr. c. 4. השבעים וקנים משרה רבינו סמכם ושרתם עליהן שכינה ואותן הזקנים סומכו לאחרים ואחרים לאחרים ונמצאו חסוכין איש מפי איש עד בית דינו של יהושע ועד בית דינו של משה &c. Moſes our Maſter created the ſeventy Elders by impoſition of hands, and the divine Majeſty reſted on them, and thoſe Elders impoſed hands on others, and others on others. And they were found created, unto the houſe of judgment of Joſhua, and unto the houſe of judgment of Moſes, i. e. from time to time, aſcending to the Sanhedrin in Joſhua's and Moſes's time.

Sect. 11. In the New.

From theſe three uſes of this ceremony, Firſt, in praying for another; Secondly, in paternal benediction; Thirdly, in the creating of ſucceſſours in power, either in whole, or in part; Three ſorts of things there are in the New Teſtament, to which this ceremony of laying on of hands is accommodated. That of Prayer ſimply taken, was of two ſorts, either for the curing of diſeaſes, or pardoning of ſins, and each of theſe was accompanied with this ceremony, Diſeaſes, the corporal bands, Luke 13. 16. were cured by impoſition of hands, Acts 9. 17. and 28. 8. (and ſo it was foretold, Mark 16. 18. they ſhall lay hands on the ſick, and they ſhall recover) and ſo ſins, the bands, and diſeaſes of the ſoul, they were done away by that ceremony alſo, and to this it is (the abſolution of penitents) that that exhortation of Paul to Timothy belongs, that he ſhould not ſuddenly (or without due examination, and proof of 1 Tim. 5. 22. their penitence) lay hands on any, 1 Tim. 5. 22. leſt by ſo doing he ſhould be partaker of thoſe ſins, for the mortifying of which, the Cenſures of the Church were deſigned. And in that ſenſe, I ſuppoſe, it is to be taken Heb. 6. 2. For as the βαπτισμοὶ, baptiſms uſed among the Jews and Chriſtians,

Heb. 6. 2. both by John and Chriſt, for the admitting of Proſelytes, may fitly refer to the faith toward God, the qualification of all, that would thus be admitted, Heb. 11. 6. ſo the ἐπιθέσεως χειρῶν, laying on of hands, may refer to the repentance from dead works, and ſo peculiarly denote abſolution of the penitents.

Sect. 12. From the ſecond, that of paternal benediction, was borrowed, firſt, that of bleſſing Infants, with that ceremony of impoſition of hands, as that differed from baptiſm, Mark 10. 16. and ſecondly, that

Mar. 10. 16. of confirming thoſe of fuller age, that had been formerly baptized.

Sect. 13. Laſtly, to creating ſucceſſours in any power, or communicating any part of power to others, as to aſſiſtents, is anſwerable to that impoſition of hands in Ordination, ſo often mentioned in the New Teſtament, ſometimes in a lower degree, in the ordaining of Deacons, Acts 6. 6. conſtituted or ordained,

Acts 6. 6. ἐπὶ χρείας ταύτης, for that particular employment, and elſewhere in the higheſt degree, ſetting Governours over particular Churches, as generally when by that laying on of hands, it is ſaid they received the holy Ghoſt, where, as the holy Ghoſt contains all the χαρίσματα required to the Paſtoral function, and alſo ſignifies power from on high, Luke 24. 49. the authority and function it ſelf, ſo it being given

Luke 24. 49. by impoſition of hands, makes the parallel exact between this of Chriſtian Ordination, and that obſerved in creating ſucceſſours in the Jewiſh Sanhedrin.

Sect. 14. For as in the firſt creation of Moſes, and after of the Seventy, thoſe functions were inſtated on him, and them, by God's ſpeaking (and appearing by Angels) to him, and by his taking the ſpirit that was on Moſes, and its reſting upon them, Num. 11. 25. and agreeably all that by impoſition of hands were after created to ſucceed them, were ſaid to have the Majeſtatick Preſence, שכינה reſt upon them, and the Spirit, Deut. 34. 9. (the שכינה Divine Preſence, and רוח הקדוש holy Spirit, being all one in the Jewiſh writings) and this (as it is there ſaid, becauſe, &c.) by means of impoſition of hands; ſo in the New Teſtament the holy Ghoſt firſt deſcended viſibly upon the Apoſtles, and thereby they were inſtated in that power, which Chriſt deſigned and promiſed them, and then they by impoſition of hands, as they made Deacons for lower ſervices, to aſſiſt them, ſo they conſtituted others their ſucceſſours, and the holy Ghoſt, i. e. not onely the χαρίσματα, gifts and graces, to fit them, but eſpecially the function it ſelf, deſcended on them.

Sect. 15. Acts 8. 17. Of this ceremony thus uſed, the ſeveral mentions there are: Firſt, Acts 8. 17. where, after Philip the Deacon had preached and baptized in Samaria, Peter and John the Apoſtles came from Jeruſalem to perfect the work, and laid hands on them (not on all that were baptized, but ſome ſpecial perſons whom whom they thought meet) and they received the holy Ghoſt. So Acts 13. 3. by praying and laying on of hands, Paul and Barnabas were ſeparated to the Apoſtleſhip. So Timothy's being made a Biſhop is expreſſed, 1 Tim. 4. 15. by the χάρισμα, gift, or function, that was given him διὰ προφητείας, by prophecy (direction from the Spirit of God) μετὰ ἐπιθέσεως τῶν χειρῶν τῆς πρεσβυτερίου, by the laying on the hands of the Preſbytery, referring either to ſome number of Apoſtles, St. Paul, (2 Cor. 1. 6. the gift which is in thee by the laying on of my hands) and Barnabas, and ſuch others that were Apoſtles, or apoſtolical men (in the ſenſe that the Apoſtles are called by [b] Ignatius πρεσβυτέριον ἐκκλησίας, the Preſbytery of the Church) or elſe by ſome aſſembly of Biſhops joyning with St. Paul in this Ordination.

[b] Ep. ad Philadelph.

And thus much may ſuffice for the firſt thing propoſed, the examining the words, by which it is expreſt, which will have prepared the way to the ſecond, that of the office or Power conferred in Ordination.

Sect. 16. The power conferred in Ordination.

To which purpoſe it muſt firſt be laid for a foundation, that Chriſt Jeſus, the eternal Son of God, was ſent down in our humane fleſh to exerciſe in his own perſon (and ſo to found) an office of Government upon the earth. Thus was it propheſied of him, Iſa. 9. 6. that the Government ſhould be upon his ſhoulder; and Iſa. 61. 1. that the Lord God had anointed (which the Chaldee Paraphraſe generally renders by רבא exalting) him, and (as a preparative to that) that the Spirit of the Lord was upon him, to preach the Goſpel, &c. and proclaim the acceptable year of the Lord. Which Prophecy is acknowledged to be fulfilled in Chriſt, Luke 4. 18. 21. that Spirit of God, upon his being baptized by John, immediately deſcending upon him, Matt. 3. 16.

Sect. 17. Chriſt's Miſſion and Power.

Iſa. 9. 6.

Iſa. 61. 1.

Luke 4. 18. 21.

Matth. 3. 16.

What this office was, is by himſelf ſet down, firſt negatively, then affirmatively. Negatively, that he was not conſtituted a Judge of Civil Intereſts, Luke 12. 14. and John 18. 36. that it was not a Kingdom of this world, which he pretended to. And ſo all pretenſion of right from him to interpoſe in, or diſturb Civil Governments, or Judicatures, or to make any change in the Principalities of the world, is utterly diſclaimed in the foundation. And they that from Chriſt incarnate think to deduce, or plead any ſuch Charter, are upon the Chriſtian Principles to be look'd on, as Impoſtors, and deſigners againſt the peace of the world, and the quiet, and ſettlement of the ſeveral Kingdoms in it, which Chriſtian Religion was deſigned to ſecure, not onely by preſcribing continual Prayers for all that are in authority, but alſo by enacting and enforcing the ſtricteſt Laws for obedience to the Supreme Powers (to be performed by all, without exemption of any, even of Chriſt himſelf, when he was here on earth, or the Apoſtles and Governours of the Church afterward) to defend, and perpetuate it.

Sect. 18. His Office ſet down Negatively.

John 18. 36. No Civil Power.

In recompence to which it is foretold in Scripture, that Kings and Queens ſhould be the nurſing fathers and mothers of the Church, which is a very diſtant Title from that of Subjects, or Pupils, or Children of it. And when it is foretold of Chriſt, that he ſhould have on his veſture, and on his thigh a name written, King of kings, and Lord of lords, Rev. 19. 16. that ſure is but a Prophetical expreſſion, to ſignifie that the Kings of the earth ſhould generally receive the faith, not that any Secular Dominion ſhould be ſet up over them by Chriſt, who had ſo profeſſedly diſclaimed it. Thus far is Chriſtian Religion from laying any grounds of undermining, or ſhaking the Political order, or cutting aſunder any of thoſe ſinews, whereby it was formerly compacted.

Sect. 19.

Rev. 19. 16.

And, as negatively, ſo alſo affirmatively is his office ſet down, Firſt, in general, that he came to call ſinners to repentance, to ſave that which was loſt, to bring the ſpirit, and ſouls of men into a regular complyance with the Laws of God, to rule, and reign in mens hearts by faith; and then in particular, firſt, to preach, and reveal the Will of God: Secondly, to gather Proſelytes, and admit them by baptiſm into his Church, the ſociety of thoſe which profeſs the faith of Chriſt: Thirdly, to confirm, and farther build up, and inſtruct thoſe that are thus admitted: Fourthly, to remove thoſe from the privileges of that ſociety, who walk unworthy of them, by that means moſt probably to reduce them, as withdrawing of mercies is the moſt profitable diſcipline for thoſe that ſurfeit of them: Fifthly, to receive theſe, upon teſtification of their repentance, into the embraces of his arms, the communion of the Church again. And laſtly, to communicate this power to others in what meaſure he thought expedient.

In all theſe reſpects he is ſaid to be ſent into the world, Joh. 17, 18. ſent by his Father Joh. 20, 21. (as Governours are ſaid to be ſent, πεμπόμενοι δι' αὐτοῦ, 1 Pet. 2. 14. ſent by the Supreme Ruler with Commiſſion to that purpoſe) to have power on earth to forgive ſins, Mat. 9. 6. to have all power delivered to him in heaven and in earth, Mat. 28. 18. and particularly to be the teacher, and Lord of his Church, or diſciples, Joh. 13. 13. Our High Prieſt and Apoſtle, Heb. 3. 1. the great ſhepherd of the ſheep, Heb. 13. 20. and ſo the onely Paſtour, and Biſhop of our ſouls, 1 Pet. 2. 25.

All which is, in every branch of it, clear from the expreſs words of Scripture.

Sect. 22. Chriſt's perſonal exerciſe of his office on earth.

That they had this Commiſſion from him, were in his life time called Apoſtles, that title denoting Proxies, or Procuratours, which act in the name, and ſtead of him, whoſe Proxies they are, according to the known rule of the Jews, Apoſtolus cujuſque eſt ut quiſque, Every ones Apoſtle is as himſelf, to which our Saviour ſeems to refer, Matth. 10. 40. He that receiveth you receiveth me, and he that receiveth me receiveth him that ſent me, making himſelf his Father's Apoſtle, or Proxy, and the twelve, his. But at his departing from the World, then he ſolemnly inſtated his power on them, ſealed their Commiſſion to them, Joh. 17. 18. and 20. 21. as it had been ſealed to him by his Father.

Sect. 25. Acts 1. 25. [c] Diſſert. III. c. 1, 2, 3, 4, 5. Matth. 19. 28.

This power (wherein the Apoſtles, not all of them together, but Peter, Matth. 16. 19. and each other of them ſingle, in his κλῆρος, or ἴδιος τόπος, Province, or proper place, Act. 1. 25. (as hath [c] elſewhere been largely ſhewn) ſucceeded Chriſt) being thus, not in part, but intirely conferred on each of them, a ſeveral Throne for every one, Mat. 19. 28. and being of ſo viſible uſe, not onely for the firſt planting, but propagating, and conſervation of the Church, it cannot be imagined, that it ſhould be temporary, and determine in the perſons of thoſe twelve. The neceſſity of order, of rules, both for the ſupply of thoſe things, which ſhould be found wanting for the well-being, and preſervation of each Church, Tit. 1. 5. and alſo for the ſecuring of the flock from the λύκοι βαρεῖς, Acts 20. 29. the wolves, the hereticks, which it was foreſeen would ſo early infeſt them, and the plantation, and propagation of the Chriſtian faith, without any aſſiſtence of the Rulers among the Jews, and the Emperours and Princes among other parts of the heathen world, nay, when it was ſo oppoſed and perſecuted by them, is a competent collection of Reaſons to aſſure us, That that power which Chriſt gave the Apoſtles, which were but ſhort-lived, and ſhould, many of them, be put to death by thoſe Perſecutors, was deſigned to endure longer than their time. But Reaſon is not a commodious medium to infer, or conclude a matter of fact, and therefore that muſt of neceſſity be done either 1. by affirmation, and Promiſes of Chriſt touching this matter, or if thoſe be not ſo clear, as to convince gainſayers, then 2. by ſupplying that want of light from the Hiſtories and relations of thoſe times, by which it will as clearly appear, as any thing in ſtory can, that the office of power in the Church beſtowed by Christ on the Apoſtles, was not to determine in their perſons, but to continue in their ſucceſſours to future ages.

Their office not temporary.

Sect. 26. The proofs of that, 1. Chriſt's affirmation, John 17. 18. 20.

For the former of theſe we may diſcern ſomewhat perhaps from that paſſage in Chriſt's Prayer to his Father, John 17. where having ſpoken of his Apoſtles, whom he had ſent, as his Father ſent him into the world, ver. 18 i. e. given them (in deſignation) Commiſſions for the Governing of his Church; and then to his Prayer for them, ver. 17. (that God would ſanctifie them ἐν ἀληθείᾳ, in, or for his truth, i. e. conſecrate them for the preaching of the Goſpel, as St. Chryſoſtome expounds it) adding farther, ver. 19. that for their ſakes he ſanctifies himſelf, i. e. offers up himſelf a Sacrifice, for the conſecrating of them, that they alſo may be ſanctified for the truth, i. e. conſecrated, and ſet apart for this function, and after his example venture their lives in their preaching of God's will, as he hath done: at length he concludes, οὐ περὶ τούτων δὲ ἐρωτῶ μόνον, But I pray not for theſe alone, ver. 20. which being in all reaſon to be interpreted of the ſame matter, concerning which he had pray'd for the Apoſtles before, it follows that this Prayer of his, for the conſecrating of officers in his Church, is not confined to his Apoſtles alone, which then attended him, ἀλλὰ καὶ περὶ τῶν πιστευόντων, &c. but the ſame Prayer he offers up for thoſe alſo, that ſhall believe through their word, i. e. for others, that by theſe Apoſtles preaching ſhould be brought to the Faith, and, as the event demonſtrates, ordained by them to be Biſhops and Deacons in ſeveral Churches. This, if we have not miſtaken the meaning of it, is an expreſs affirmation of Chriſt's in this matter.

Sect. 27. 2. His Promiſe. Matth. 28. 20.

And we ſhall have leſs reaſon to ſuſpect, that we have miſtaken, if we conſider Chriſt's Promiſe to his Apoſtles at his parting from them, Mat. 28. 20. And behold I am with you all the days, ἕως τῆς συντελείας τοῦ αἰῶνος, untill the end of the world. 'Tis certain that this preſence of Chriſt with them, refers to his authority derived, and aſſiſtence made over to them, in order to the diſcharge of their office of gathering diſciples, baptizing and teaching, ver. 19. and as certain, that the Apoſtles ſhould not perſonally live to execute that office, till the period there named, the end of the world, and then it is not imaginable how Chriſt's preſence ſhould be continued with them till the end of the World, unleſs they be conſidered in complexo, in conjunction with their poſterity, or ſucceſſours in that office (as the Promiſes made to Abraham, are performed to his poſterity, though not to his perſon) to whom therefore this promiſed aſſiſtence belongs πάσας τὰς ἡμέρας, all the days, i. e. for the whole term of this new age. And this is the more demonſtrative, becauſe this was ſaid by Chriſt after his Reſurrection, immediately before his aſcending to heaven, which being the beginning of the μέλλων αἰών, the laſt age of the World, the Kingdom of Chriſt, when all power was given to him ver. 18. it neceſſarily follows, that what was to be continued till the συντέλεια conſummation, or concluſion of that age, ſhould laſt till the end of the World, in the largeſt ſenſe, that thoſe words can ſignifie.

Sect. 28. And the like, Rev. 2. 26.

This, I ſuppoſe, is alſo meant by the Promiſe of Chriſt, Rev. 2. to thoſe of the Church of Thyatira, which ſhould overcome and keep, ver. 26. i. e. adhere conſtantly to the faith, in ſpight of all temptations, that he will give them power over the Nations, as he received of his Father ver. 27. where in the very ſame manner, that Joh. 20, 21. power is inſtated on the Apoſtles, [as my Father ſendeth me, ſo ſend I you,] (ſending, and giving power, being ſent, and receiving power, being phraſes of the ſame importance) the like power is by Chriſt promiſed to be inſtated on theſe faithfull Confeſſours afterward, and that belonging to the planting and propagating the faith among the Gentiles, bringing them to repentance (which is the breaking them to ſhivers there) and ruling them with a rod of Iron, i. e. the Sceptre of Chriſt's Spiritual Kingdom, his Goſpel, and Power and Paſtoral Authority committed to them. If this, being

(by

(by the Prophetick ſtyle, wherein it is veiled) ſomewhat obſcure, bring not that evidence with it, which is expected, I deſire it may be paſt over, as a conjecture which pretends onely to be conſiderable, by the accordance and conſent with other greater evidences, which are now to follow.

Sect. 29. 3. The hiſtories of thoſe times. Acts 1. 20, 22, 23.

To proceed then to the next Topick of probation (the Hiſtories of thoſe Times, which are moſt competent to clear the fact) A firſt evidence of this ſort, is the aſſumption of Matthias into the place of Judas the traditor and deſertor, Acts 1. who loſt his office, and ſoon after, his life. Wherein we ſee Saint Peter, upon the Prophetical Prediction of Judas's fate, and the laſt branch of that [his Biſhoprick let another take] v. 20. concludes with a [δεῖ οὖν] a neceſſity, that one of thoſe that had continued with them from the beginning, and ſo was qualified for it, ſhould [γενέσθαι μάρτυρα τῆς ἀναστάσεως σὺν ἡμῖν] ver. 22. become with them a witneſs of the Reſurrection, and by the form of their prayer for God's direction, and revelation of his Will, which he had pitch'd on, it is evident, that taking his Biſhoprick, ver. 20. is all one with taking the lot, or portion of that Miniſtery and Apoſtleſhip, ver. 25. and conſequently, that as ἐπισκοπὴ Biſhoprick, denoted an office, ſo that was all one with Ἀποστολὴ the office of Apoſtles, and that ſtill a διακονία, a miniſtration, a miniſterial office for the benefit and good of others. And there is one paſſage more obſervable in the end of that 25. v. that he that thus ſucceeded Judas (and ſo by analogy of reaſon, every other of the twelve) had his ἴδιον τόπον, peculiar place or Province, to which he was deſigned, and ſent to preach the Goſpel, not the whole College of Apoſtles together to all and every place, but every one of them ſingle endued with that power, that he might alone, without aſſeſſors, diſcharge his office, and ſo was obliged πορεύθηναι εἰς τὸν ἴδιον τόπον to go to his own place, which words being divided by a comma, from [ἐξ ἧς παρέβη Ἰούδας, from which Judas by tranſgreſſion fell] which therefore are to be read as in a parentheſis) are yet by ſome conceived to belong to Judas's fate after death, his, going to that place of puniſhment, appointed for him. But ſure that is a miſtake.

The aſſumption of Matthias to the Apoſtolacy.

Sect. 30. The ſeven Deacons.

Soon after this 'tis apparent, Act. 6. that the Apoſtles, to make their burthen more ſupportable did by impoſition of hands create ſeven Deacons in Jeruſalem; which although it be not an example of their conſtituting ſucceſſors to their whole office, and therefore is not here mentioned in the ſame rank as the former was, yet it is an evidence, that they were able to communicate to others any part of that power committed to them by Chriſt. And that is a ſufficient proof, that the Apoſtles power was not temporary, and determined to their perſons. And then ſecondly, why they might not, in whole as well as in part, communicate it to others, who might ſucceed to it (after their departure from any place, or finally out of the world) as well as aſſiſt them, being preſent, by undergoing in their ſtead ſome part of it, there is no imaginable reaſon to be rendred; but, on the contrary, the example of Moſes, who firſt aſſumed the Seventy to aſſiſt him (and at that time God gave them of his Spirit, and ſo part of his power) and after conſtituted Joſhua to ſucceed him, will be directly applicable to this matter.

Sect. 31. Saul and Barnabas. Acts 13. 2.

Thirdly, it is apparent, that after, and beſide the inſtating of this office on the twelve, it was the will and appointment of God, that Saul and Barnabas ſhould be aſſumed to it, Acts 13. 2. and that immediately after James the Apoſtle's death, c. 12. 2. in the ſame manner as Ephraim and Manaſſes ſupplyed the place of Joſeph, when he dyed. By which teſtimony from heaven appears lifewiſe, that that office was not determined to the perſons of the twelve Apoſtles, or thoſe of whom the holy Ghoſt deſcended, Act. 2. but was to be communicated to others alſo.

Sect. 32. James the Juſt Biſhop of Jeruſalem.

Fourthly, by comparing ſome paſſages of Scripture with the plain aſſertions of ancient Writers, and Fathers of the Church, it may be concluded, that James the Juſt, that had the title of Brother of the Lord, was conſtituted Biſhop of Jeruſalem (being none of thoſe twelve Apoſtles) by Chriſt himſelf, ſay [d] ſome, at his appearing to him after the Reſurrection, but (as 'tis more generally reſolved on) by the Apoſtles, which having received their power from Chriſt, Euſebius's phraſe is, that he had it παρὰ αὐτοῦ Σωτῆρος καὶ τῶν Ἀποστόλων, from our Saviour himſelf and his Apoſtles, from him mediately and from them immediately. This is manifeſt by Ignatius, who was his contemporary, in his Epiſtle to the Trallenſes, mentioning Stephen the Deacon, λειτουργοῦντα Ἰακώβῳ, waiting on James peculiarly. And ſo in Ep. ad Hieron. λειτουργὸς ὡς Στέφανος ἐν Ἱεροσολύμοις Ἰακώβῳ, Thou art employed as a Deacon, as Stephen was to James. And ſo ſaith [e] Hegeſippus, and [f] Clemens Alexandrinus, [g] Athanaſius, [h] Epiphanius, [i] Gregory Nyſſene, [k] St. Hierome, and divers others agreeing in this, that Peter, and James, and John, choſe and conſtituted James the Biſhop of Jeruſalem, and that in the xix. year of Tiberius, i.e. the next year after the death of Chriſt, ſaith Euſebius in his Chronicle, p. 43.

Sect. 33. Called an Apoſtle, Gal. 1. 19. Act. 14. 6. 22.

Hence it is that this James, though none of the twelve, is called an Apoſtle, Gal. 1. 19. and perhaps Act. 15. 6. and 22. and in the inſcription of his Epiſtle, (though in the beginning of it he call himſelf the ſervant of the Lord) he is intituled the Apoſtle James; and accordingly [l] St. Hierome calls him the thirteenth Apoſtle, which farther yields him a priority before Paul and Barnabas, (as being after him admitted to that dignity) to whom he gives the right hand of fellowſhip, Gal. 2 9. and being at Jeruſalem, his Epiſcopal See, is there named before Peter and John, two principal Apoſtles, who with James the other ſon of Zebedee, would not, ſaith [m] Clemens, ἐπιποθῆσαι δόξης, contend for the glory or dignity, ἀλλὰ Ἰάκωβον τὸν Δίκαιον ἐπίσκοπον τῶν Ἱεροσολύμων ἑλέσθαι, choſe James the Juſt Biſhop of Jeruſalem. Whatſoever there is of ſeeming difficulty in this matter, hath been cleared in [n] other Papers. And by this again appears, that that office of preeminence and authority in the Church, was not given to the perſons of the twelve, ſo as to be determined in them, but ſo as to be from them communicated to others alſo.

Sect. 34. Timothy. 2 Tim. 1. 6. 1 Tim. 4. 14. Titus. Tit. 1. 5.

Fifthly, of St. Paul 'tis not onely ſaid by himſelf expreſly, that he had laid hands on Timothy, and that thereby the gift of God, fitting him for the Epiſcopal function, was given him, 2 Tim. 1. 6. and 1 Tim. 4. 14. but farther, that he was by him left at Epheſus to exerciſe this authority, παραγγεῖλαι τισὶ, to command ſome, (which includes power) to teach no other doctrine, i. e. to ſuppreſs *heretick*s; 1 Tim. 1. 3. and the ſame is as clear of Titus, who is by him left in Crete, with power of regulating things that were not yet ordered in that Iſland, and to ordain Elders in every Church, Tit. 1. 5. which being two branches of Epiſcopal Power, it is by all the ancients generally affirmed, that he was instituted the [o] Metropolitan, or chief Bishop of that Island, as [p] Timothy of Ephesus, the chief Metropolis of Asia, and accordingly these two are styled Apostles also (as receiving the same power, or Commission, that Christ had given to the twelve, and to St. Paul) So that [q] Anonymus in Pharius mentions the martyrdom of Timothy the Apostle, and Theodoret, Ἀπιστῶν Ἀπόστολος ὁ Τιμόθεος, Timothy the Apostle of the Asiaticks, and Κρὴς ἦν Ἀπόστολος ὁ Τίτος, Titus the Apostle of the Cretians. And the same is observable of Mark, Luke, Thaddeus, Epaphroditus, Clemens, and Ignatius, and others, as is [r] elsewhere shewn.

Sect. 35. Elders ordained by Paul and Barnabas. Act. 14. 2.

Sixthly, of St. Paul it is farther plain, that in Lystra and Iconium, and Antioch, and in those parts, he and Barnabas χειροτονῆσαν αὐτοῖς πρεσβυτέρους κατ' ἐκκλησίαν, ordained them Elders Church by Church, Act. 14. 2. i. e. a Bishop, or Governour in every Church; which is again the communicating that power to others, which they held by Commission from Christ.

Sect. 36. De Synod. l. 1. c. 14. Mr. Selden's notion of it.

Of these acts of St. Paul, 2 Tim. 1. 6. Tit. 1. 5. and Act. 14. 23. it will not be amiss to consider a while what is observed by Mr. Selden, and recommended as most worthy to be observed by all that are lovers of truth, viz. This of St. Paul's creating of Presbyters, was according to the Jewish custome of creating of Elders; that Paul, forsooth, was brought up at the feet of Gamaliel, as his disciple, Act. 22. 3. and there instructed more exactly in the Jewish Law; that Gamaliel was the Nephew of Hillel, and Prince of the Sanhedrin at that time; that he, as an Elder among the Jews, might create his Scholars to the same dignity, as he pleased, and therefore that it is not to be doubted, but that Gamaliel created Paul to the dignity of a Jewish Elder while he was his disciple, i. e. before he was a Christian; and that a while after Paul becoming Christian and an Apostle, thought it lawfull in Asia, Crete, and elsewhere, as well as within Judaea, to create Elders, for the preaching of the Gospel, accounting himself and the other Apostles free from that new Law of having the licence of the Prince of the Sanhedrin, and so that that custome prevailed in creating the Christian Elders, that every one that was duly created himself, might also duly create his own disciples; and to conclude, Hinc de Paulo & Barnabâ dicitur χειροτονήσαντες αὐτοῖς πρεσβυτέρους κατ' ἐκκλησίαν, Hence, saith, he, it is said of Paul and Barnabas, Having ordained them Elders through the Churches. And Hinc Paulus ad Titum, &c. Hence Paul to Titus, that was before created to the dignity of Eldership, I left thee at Crete, &c, that thou mayst constitute Elders through the Cities.

Sect. 37. An examination of it.

Having set down his observation, or interpretation of this Gentleman, and so his account of St. Paul's power to ordain Elders in the Church, I shall instead of the many unproved affirmations contained in it, take notice onely of these few inconveniences which necessarily follow on it: First, that according to these premisses, St. Paul's power of ordaining Elders in the Church of Christ, was no other power, but that which Saul the Persecutor of Christians had, when he was that Persecutor: Secondly, that he received it from Gamaliel the Jew, and not from Christ, the Head and Founder of the Christian Church: Thirdly, that he that would not own to have received any part of his Apostolical Power from St, Peter or any other man in the World, Gal. 1. 1. onely that he might owe it all to the Commission received from Heaven, should now be constrained to acknowledge the receipt of it from his old Master in the Jewish Religion: Fourthly, that Barnabas which appears equally with Paul in ordaining of Elders, Act. 14. should not in this interpretation be taken notice of at all, nor consideration be had, whether what is said of Paul, were in any degree appliable to him.

Gal. 1. 1.

Sect. 38.

These, I think, are inconveniences enough, to which this doctrine is lyable upon the Christian score; and yet there are many other discernable upon the bare Jewish account. For first, for the Prince of the Sanhedrin at Jerusalem to create, and constitute an Elder, must, I suppose, signifie to take him into the Sanhedrin at Jerusalem. And surely no man imagines that Paul before his Conversion was thus created, it being said of him expresly, Act. 7. 58. at St. Stephen's martyrdom, that he was νεανίου, a young man, at whose feet the witnesses laid their raiment, when they went to stone him: where the word νεανίας, if it be onely a note of his age, or if it be all one with νεώτερος in other places, must signifie either a young man, or a person of mean quality, or perhaps an inferior officer, such as Act. 5. 6. carried out the dead to burial, and in any of these notions will be far enough distant from one of the Elders or members of the Sanhedrin. And that farther appears by what was said of him, just before his Conversion, Act. 9. 2. that he came to the High Priest, and desired letters from him to the Synagogues at Damascus, that if he found any Christians there, he might bring them bound to Jerusalem. This makes it probable, that he was some inferior officer, or Serjeant, but evident that he was neither Elder in the Sanhedrin, nor member of any Consistory in another City, and so sure it is more than to be doubted, whether Gamaliel had created him to this dignity, it is most apparent that he had not. All that is imaginable in this matter is, that Gamaliel being a Doctor of the Law, might create this his disciple to that dignity of Doctor of the Law. And if that had been so, certainly he that held it usefull to put into his apology that he had been brought up at Gamaliel's feet, would have thought fit, for the inhancing those pretentions, to have added, that he was once made a Doctor by the Prince of the Sanhedrin. But besides that there is as little appearance, or (for the former reasons) probability of truth in that, as in the former, It is evident that this, if it were granted, were impertinent and unapplyable to this matter: For that would not denominate him a πρεσβύτερος or Elder, but rather a γραμματεύς, which we render Scribe, such were they that had been taught γράμματα, the Books and Writings of the Law, and themselves after become teachers in their בתי חמדרש houses of Information, or Instruction, and sometimes chosen into the Sanhedrin; for that consisted of three sorts of men of several denominations, Chief Priests, Elders, and Scribes, (see Mat. 26. 3.) the Doctors of the Law were the γραμματεῖς, Scribes, not πρεσβύτεροι Elders, and if all of them together in Council be sometimes styled πρεσβυτέριον, or Eldership, that is but a denomination of the whole from one special part of that Council, and no way concludes (against expres testimonies of Scripture and Jewish Writers) that the Sanhedrin, was all made up of Elders at that time. Nay, it is said of Gamaliel expresly, that he was νομοδιδάσκαλος, a Doctor of the Law, and one of the Sanhedrin, Act. 5. 34. who as a Doctor might have disciples to instruct in the Law, sitting at his feet, but cannot from thence be concluded to be the Prince of the Sanhedrin at

Act. 7. 58.

Act. 5. 6.

Act. 9. 2.

that time (as is by Mr. S. pretended) but on the contrary, by being called τὸν ἐν συνεδρίῳ φαρισαῖον a certain Phariſee in the Sanhedrin, it may well be conjectured that he was not, but an ordinary member of it, though of great reputation at that time. And ſo ſtill though he might make his Diſciple a Doctor of the Law (of which there were other uſes, beſides being of the Sanhedrin) yet an Elder he could not, nor conſequently could Saul beſtow that dignity upon any other Jew, much leſs upon them abroad in the diſperſions, leaſt of all upon any Gentile Chriſtians (as 'tis more than probable, ever ſince his departing to the Gentiles, chap. 13. 46. ſome of thoſe Elders chap. 14. 23. were, and of thoſe in Crete, Tit. 1. there can be no place of doubting) upon that ſcore of having been a Scholar of Gamaliel's. Many other things there are in this notion, utterly unreconcileable with the Jewiſh cuſtoms, if it were here ſeaſonable to diſcover them.

That the learned Grotius was favourable to this notion, is pretended by Mr. S. ſetting down to this purpoſe theſe words of his, on Act. 11. 30. (Totum regimen Eccleſiarum Chriſti conformatum fuit ad Synagogarum exemplar, The whole Government of the Churches of Chriſt, was conformed to the pattern of the Synagogues) and referring the Reader to his Notes on Act. 13. 1. 20. 7. 18. 8. But this is no way to be deduced from that learned man's words; for 'tis certainly one thing to affirm the Government of the Church to be formed after the Jewiſh pattern, (which it is acknowledged that it was, Chriſt accommodating, and lightly changing the Jewiſh cuſtoms into Chriſtian Inſtitutions) another to deduce the power of making Elders in the Church, which certainly had the original from Chriſt, who came down from heaven to plant, or gather a Church of Gentiles, as well as Jews) from the authority of the Jewiſh Sanhedrin, which as it was uſed for the putting of Chriſt, and ſome of his diſciples, even, of Paul himſelf, to death, ſo it was never uſed to propagate Chriſtianity, nor could be imagined to communicate a power to men of, and in other nations, particularly in Crete, which were not ſo much as Proſelytes of the Jews, had nothing to doe with them. Sect. 39.

The other affirmations of Grotius referred to, will yield as little aid, being all to the ſame purpoſe, that the Cuſtoms in the Jewiſh Synagogue were imitated, and accommodated by Chriſt to the Chriſtian uſes, not that Paul, an Apoſtle, or Commiſſioner of Jeſus Chriſt, indued from heaven with that power, which he communicated (as he ſaw fit, and as the Spirit directed him) to others, neither had, nor communicated any power, but what he had from Gamaliel his Jewiſh Maſter; That Paul was indued with this power from heaven, when he was called to his Apoſtleſhip, that he and Barnabas together were actually ſeparated to that work by the impoſition of the hands not of Gamaliel, the unconverted Jew, but of the Chriſtian Prophets and Doctours, or Biſhops, whoſe names are recorded Act. 13. 1, 2, 3. was ſure the acknowledged opinion of that excellent man, Hugo Grotius, and never any other original aſſigned by him, or any Chriſtian to this power of making Elders, I ſhall not need to ſay any more of it. Sect. 40.

Seventhly then, It farther appears, that as Timothy and Titus were thus ordained by St. Paul, ſo they had thereby alſo power to ordain others, through all Churches in thoſe Regions where they were placed, and accordingly did actually ordain them. And ſo the power, which was given the Apoſtles, was ſure no temporary power, but as from them derived to others, ſo from thoſe others farther communicated, and all this by expreſs Teſtimonies of Scripture. For that St. Paul ſhould leave Titus in Crete on purpoſe to ordain Elders there, and preſcribe Timothy, as well as him, what ſort of men, and how qualified, ſhould be conſtituted Biſhops (and Deacons) in the Churches, and they ſhould make no uſe of that power, is not imaginable, nor could be controverted, though there were no other book in the world, but the New Teſtament, whereas the teſtimony of the following Church-writers is clear, that in Crete the one, (and in Aſia the other) had the ordaining firſt, and then the judging of ſo many Biſhops (by name an hundred) in that Iſland, and that (as there, ſo every where elſe) the Biſhops in their ſeveral Churches were the ſucceſſours of the Apoſtles, and therefore many of them called Apoſtles alſo. Sect. 41. Timothy and Titus had power to ordain others.

This we have ſeen already in James the Biſhop of Jeruſalem, called ſo in the Scriptures themſelves. And the like we find of divers others; Of Thaddæus (not he that was one of the twelve, Judas, or Lebbæus, but) he that was, ten years after Chriſt's Reſurrection, ſent by St. Thomas to the King of Edeſſa, we have, out of the Records of that Nation, [Ἀπόστολος τοῦ Ἰησοῦ, the Apoſtle of Jeſus] the Apoſtle Thaddæus, and ſimply the Apoſtle. See Euſebius Hiſt. l. 1. c. ult. Sect. 42. Biſhops ſucceſſours of the Apoſtles, and called Apoſtles. Thaddæus.

So Luke, that is thought to be the perſon that was ordained St. Paul's-fellow-traveller, 2 Cor. 8. 19. and he were not (as there are ſome reaſons to believe it was Silas) muſt in all reaſon be placed there among the Ἀπόστολοι ἐκκλησίας, Apoſtles of the Church, v. 23. is by Epiphanius diſtinctly ſtyled an Apoſtle. Her. 51. and in ἀγκυρωτ. Sect. 43. Luke.

So Mark, he that wrote the Goſpel, and is called by St. Peter his ſon, as converted by him, and of whom Papias truely affirms, ὅτι ἤκουσε τοῦ Κυρίου, ὅτι παρηκολούθησεν αὐτῷ, he neither heard nor followed Chriſt, yet being, eleven years after Chriſt's aſſumption, ſent into Ægypt to preach the Goſpel, and there affirmed by St. Hierome, out of the Records of thoſe firſt times, to have ordained Anianus Patriarch of Alexandria, and by the writer of his life in Photius, to have done the like in Pentapolis, is by Euſebius l. 2. c. κδ'. and by Epiphanius Her. 51. called Ἀπόστολος, Apoſtle. Sect. 44. Mark.

So Timothy, that by Prophecy (i. e. revelation of the Spirit, ſay the [f] Scholiaſts) was ordained Biſhop of Epheſus, is by the Anonymus in Photius, Num. 254. called Τιμόθεος Ἀπόστολος, Timothy the Apoſtle, and by [t] Theodoret, Ἀναγῶν Ἀπόστολος, the Apoſtle of the aſiaticks, and ſo by Theophanes, he with others, is ἅγιος Ἀπόστολος; an holy Apoſtle. Sect. 45. Timothy.

[f] Oecumen. in 1 Tim. 3.

[t] In 1 Tim. 3. 1.

And ſo of Titus Κρητῶν Ἀπόστολος ὁ Τίτος, Titus the Apoſtle of the Cretians, in Theodoret. Sect. 46. Titus.

So Epaphroditus the Biſhop of Philippi, is acknowledged by Theodoret, to be therefore called their Apoſtle, Phil. 2. 25. Ἐπαφρόδιτον Ἀπόστολον αὐτῶν σαφῶς καλέσας, &c. St. Paul manifeſtly called Epaphroditus their Apoſtle, having, ſaith he, the appellation of their Biſhop. Sect. 47 Epaphroditus.

So Clemens mentioned Phil. 4. 3. as a fellow-labourer of St. Paul's, and firſt a Deacon to St. Peter, (ſaith Ignatius ad Trallenſes) afterward Biſhop of Rome, is called by Clemens Alexandrinus, Strom. 4. ὁ Ἀπόστολος Κλήμης, the Apoſtle Clemens, and by [v] St. Hierome, Vir Apoſtolicus, an Apoſtolical perſon, and ſo by [x] Ruffinus adding, Imo pene Apoſtolus, yea and almoſt an Apoſtle. Sect. 48. Clemens.

[v] In Iſa. 52.

Sect. 49. Ignatius. So Ignatius, that is ſaid by [r] St. Chryſoſtome to have converſed familiarly with the Apoſtles, and by them made Biſhop of Antioch, the hands, ſaith he, of the bleſſed Apoſtles touching his ſacred head, is by him called both Apoſtle and Biſhop.

Sect. 50. And accordingly 'tis the general affirmation of Theodoret, τοὺς νῦν καλουμένους ἐπισκόπους, Ἀποστόλους ὠνόμαζον, Thoſe that were (in his time, ſaith he) called Biſhops, they called Apoſtles, τῷ δὲ χρόνῳ μειοῦσθαι, &c. but in proceſs of time they left the name of Apoſtles to thoſe that were truely ſo, ſent immediately by Chriſt, and impoſed the name of Biſhops on thoſe others, that had been anciently called Apoſtles.

Sect. 51. So Rabanus Maurus on 1 Tim. 4. 14. Epiſcopi provincias integras regebant Apoſtolorum nomine nuncupati, The Biſhops ruled whole Privinces, being called Apoſtles.

Sect. 52. So when Irenæus l. 1. c. 9. and from him Epiphanius l. 1. Her. 14. and 34. ſaith of the heretick Marcus's followers, that they were ſo puffed up, that they contemned the Apoſtles themſelves in reſpect of them, it muſt be ſure underſtood of the Biſhops of thoſe times, who thereby appear to be ſtyled Apoſtles.

Sect. 53. The ſeven Churches of Aſia. Eighthly, It is manifeſt by the Epiſtle of Chriſt to the ſeven Churches of the Proconſular Aſia, delivered by viſion to St. John, that there were, at the date of the Epiſtle, Rulers, or Governours of each of thoſe Churches, to whom, under the title of Angels, the care of thoſe Churches was committed. That theſe were any of the twelve Apoſtles, or others conſtituted from heaven immediately, neither is, nor can be pretended by any; it remains therefore that it muſt be a derived, communicated power, whether mediately or immediately from one, or more of the Apoſtles, that firſt preached the Goſpel there, which was thus veſted in thoſe Angels, in reſpect of which not onely that honourable title of Angels is beſtowed upon each of them by Chriſt himſelf, the ſame that on the [x] high Prieſt among the Jews, Mal. 2. 7. but they are alſo reſembled to ſo many Stars held by Chriſt in his right hand, Rev. 1. 16. and 2. 1. which is an infallible evidence, that this dignity, and power of theirs was approved and confirmed by Chriſt.

[r] Ἀρχιερέα τοῦτον ἀεὶ προσαγορεύουσι, καὶ νομίζουσιν αὐτοῖς ἄγγελον γενέσθαι τῶν τοῦ Θεοῦ προσταγμάτων, They call him the chief Prieſt, and think him to be an Angel or Meſſenger of God's, to bring his commands to them. Diodor. Sicul. ap. Phot. de Judæis.

Sect. 54. Teſtimonies out of Antiquity. Council of Chalcedon. Polycrates. And to ſo clear a teſtimony of Scripture, we may farther add the words of the Council of Chalcedon, Act. 2. concerning the Church of Epheſus, that from Timothy to that time, there had been twenty ſeven Biſhops there, to which it is conſequent, that either Timothy, or ſome follower of his, was this very Angel that Chriſt wrote to, chap. 2. 1. And ſo Polycrates, that was not long after St. John's time, affirms himſelf to be the eighth Biſhop of that City. Epiſt. ad Victor. apud Euſeb. Hiſt. Eccl. l. 5. c. 24.

Sect. 55. St. Irenæus. [a] l. 3. c. 3. [b] Tertullian. de Præſcr. c. 32. [c] Ibid. And ſo when [a] Irenæus affirms of Smyrna, another of thoſe ſeven Churches, that Polycarp a diſciple of the Apoſtles, was by them conſtituted Biſhop of that City; and when [b] Tertullian ſaith of him, that he was ſo conſtituted by St. John, as Clemens was at Rome ordained by St. Peter, 'tis clear that the Apoſtles power was not determined in themſelves: And of this [c] Tertullian's teſtimony is moſt diſtinct, and univerſal, that, as in Smyrna, and Rome, perinde utique & cæteræ Eccleſiæ exhibent, quos ab Apoſtolis in Epiſcopatum conſtitutos, Apoſtolici ſeminis traduces habent; The reſt of the Churches in like manner exhibit thoſe, which being by the Apoſtles, conſtituted Biſhops, were their ſucceſſours, ſpiritually begotten by them; and again, Ordo Epiſcoporum ad originem recenſus in Johannem ſtabit auctorem, The order of Biſhops being recounted to the beginning, devolves to John the Apoſtle, the firſt authour of it, ſpeaking of theſe Churches of Aſia, Johannis alumnæ, which were taken care of, and fed by St. John.

Adv. Marcion. l. 4. c. 5.

Sect. 56. Clemens Romanus. [d] Ep. ad Cor. To which in the latitude (and not onely as it concerns thoſe Churches) 'twere eaſie to add many more. That of [d] Clemens Romanus, mentioned by St. Paul, is moſt clear, ἐξεπέμφθη ὁ Χριστὸς ἀπὸ τοῦ Θεοῦ, καὶ οἱ Ἀπόστολοι ἀπὸ τοῦ Χριστοῦ, οἱ οὖν ἐξήλθοσαν εὐαγγελιζόμενοι, κατὰ χώρας ἓν καὶ πόλεις κηρύσσοντες καθίστανον τὰς ἀπαρχὰς αὐτῶν, δοκιμάσαντες τῷ πνεύματι, εἰς ἐπισκόπους καὶ διακόνους τῶν μελλόντων πιστεύειν, Chriſt was ſent by God, and the Apoſtles by Chriſt, and they went preaching the Goſpel, and doing ſo, they conſtituted their firſt-fruits into Biſhops and Deacons of them that ſhould after believe. So [e] St. Irenæus, Succeſſiones Epiſcoporum quibus Apoſtolicam, quæ in unoquoque loco eſt, Eccleſiam tradiderunt, The ſucceſſions of Biſhops, to whom they delivered the Apoſtolick Church, which is in every place. And, habemus enumerare eos, qui ab Apoſtolis inſtituti ſunt Epiſcopi in Eccleſiis, We can reckon them that were by the Apoſtles inſtituted Biſhops in the Churches, and of Rome, that the bleſſed Apoſtles committed to Linus the Miniſtery of that Church. And again ſpeaking of Biſhops, qui cum ſucceſſione Epiſcopatus chariſma veritatis certum acceperunt, Who with the ſucceſſion of Epiſcopacy received the certain grace of truth.

[e] St. Irenæus Cont. Her. l. 4. c. 63. Ibid. l. 3. c. 3. Ibid.

Sect. 57. St. Cyprian. Ep. 27. So St. Cyprian ſpeaking of the Keys given to St. Peter, and ſo to the Biſhops of the Church, Inde per temporum & ſucceſſionum vices, Epiſcoporum ordinatio, & Eccleſiæ ratio decurrit, ut Eccleſia ſuper Epiſcopos conſtituatur, & omnis actus Eccleſiæ per eoſdem gubernetur, Thence by viciſſitudes of times and ſucceſſions, the ordination of the Biſhops, and the account of the Church doth run, that the Church may be conſtituted upon Biſhops, and every act thereof be governed by them.

Sect. 58. Tertullian. de Præſcr. c. 36. And Tertullian again, Percurre Eccleſias Apoſtolicas, &c. Run through the Apoſtolick Churches, and there as yet the Chairs of the Apoſtles preſide in their places, thus have you Corinth, Epheſus, Philippi, Rome.

Sect. 59. St. Athanaſius. Ep. ad. Dracont. So St. Athanaſius, among thoſe things, ἃ ὁ Κύριος διὰ τῶν Ἀποστόλων πεποίηκε, which the Lord formed by the Apoſtles, names the office of the Biſhop, and therefore adds, that he that deſpiſeth this function, καταφρονεῖ τοῦ διατάξαντος Σωτῆρος, deſpiſes Chriſt which ordained it.

Sect. 60. St. Baſil. So S. Baſil the Great, calls Epiſcopacy ἀξίωμα τῶν Ἀποστόλων, and ἀποστολικὸν, the prefecture, or precedency which the Apoſtles had from God.

Sect. 61. St. Ambroſ. de Dignit. Sacerd. c. 5, 6. So St. Ambroſe, Claves illas in beato Petro cunctis ſuſcepimus ſacerdotes, We all received thoſe Keys of the Kingdom of Heaven in the perſon of St. Peter.

Sect. 62. St. Auguſtine. Epiſt. 44. So St. Auguſtine, Radix Chriſtianæ ſocietatis per ſedes Apoſtolorum & ſucceſſiones Epiſcoporum certâ per orbem propagatione diffunditur, The root of Chriſtian ſociety is diffuſed by a certain propagation through the world, by the ſeats of the Apoſtles, and the ſucceſſions of Biſhops.

Sect. 63. St. Jerome in Pſal. 45. And St. Hierome, Quia Apoſtoli à mundo receſſerunt, habes pro illis Epiſcopos filios, Seeing the Apoſtles are departed from the earth, you have the Biſhops, their ſons, inſtead of them.

And

And Photius, Epist. 34. ἡ Ἀποστολικὴ καὶ θεία ἀξία, ἣν παρὰ διαδοχῆς ὁ ἱεραρχικὸς ἐκεῖνος ἐκληρώσατο χορός, The Apostolical and Divine dignity, which the Pontifical race inherits by succession. Sect. 64. Photius.

And Theophylact, ἴσην ἔσχον τιμὴν καὶ ἀξίαν οἱ παρὰ Πέτρου χειροτονηθέντες ἐπίσκοποι, They that in like manner with St. Peter were vouchsafed the grace of being Bishops, have the power to bind and loose, as he had. Sect. 65. Theophylact. in Mat. 18.

And Oecumenius, Ἀνάλογον ἔσχεν ἡ χειροτονία τοὺς ἐπισκόπους, &c. The Bishops were by the Ordination of the Spirit, as succeeding the Apostles, which were so ordained. Sect. 66. Oecumenius.

To all which it will not be amiss to add one Testimony of many, out of the Chronography of Johannes Malela Antiochenus, (a Manuscript in the Oxford Publick Library) which pretends to a much greater Antiquity than his own, That at the beginning of the Reign of Claudius Cæsar, some ten years after Christ's ascension, Πέτρου μετὰ τὴν ἄνοδον τὸν Ἀποστόλων τὸν πρωτοθρόνου τῆς Θεουπόλεως τῆς Ἀντιοχείας — ἐχειροτόνησεν, Evodius next after St. Peter (viz. on the Judaical part, as Ignatius after St. Paul on the Gentile part) was ordained Bishop of Antioch, μεγάλης πόλεως τῆς Συρίας, the great City, i. e. Metropolis of Syria. Adding that in his time it was, that the name of Christians, Act. 11. 26. began, Evodius preaching to them, and imposing that name upon them, who were before called Nazarenes and Galileans. And this passage is by Suidas transcribed from this Authour. Sect. 67.

Thus hath this Controversie been sufficiently cleared by some remains in the Scriptures, to which, as they are interpreted by us, to the deducing our conclusion from them, the concordant Testimonies of all Antiquity have most readily afforded their suffrages. Sect. 68.

And then, as to the settling the Monarchy of the Jews, the way set down in Scripture is this, that God by a Prophet sent immediately from him, designed first the person of Saul, and after of David, and after, the succession or line of David, (by Solomon, and Rehoboam) came down from father to son, through all the Kings of Judah, without any new revelations, or mission of Prophets, to anoint and constitute a new King, when the former was deceased: or (rather) As, when God had first called Moses, and by Miracles sealed him a Commission from heaven to be ruler over the Jews, and after taken of the Spirit that was upon him, and put it upon the Elders to be his assistents, For the succession to either of those offices, there was no more used, or thought needfull, but that Moses should lay his hands on Joshua, and give him a charge, and put some of his honour upon him, &c. Num. 27. 18, 19, 20, 21. and that the Seventy, which were thus created to their office, should by imposition of hands admit others to the same dignity; So for the settling Governours in the Church, God first sent down his Son Jesus Christ to be personally the founder, and Head of it, sent down his Spirit to demonstrate, and constitute him so, and after his departure, this power being before his death instated on the Apostles, the holy Ghost again descended on those Apostles, and some the like prodigies from heaven were used to wards others, for their first settling them in their dignities. But when that was done, the whole business of a succession was provided for, by a more easie and familliar course, that those that were thus sent by the Apostles, through Imposition of their hands (as they had been by Christ, through the descent of his Spirit, hovering over, and resting on them, and as Christ by his Father, with the like solemnity) should, after the same manner, communicate it to others, fitly qualified for it. Sect. 69. The manner of succession.

Which that it was actually done in the several Churches, as it cannot be expected to be recorded in the New Testament, which can speak no farther than to those times of which it writes, so to some mentions of it, which are found there, infinite suffrages are added from the following Writers, by whom it far more evidently appears, that this Power of the Church did not end in the Apostles persons, but continued to their successours, the Bishops in their several branches, than by the Old Testament, and other Jewish writings now extant, it appears, either that it was God's Will that the son should succeed the father in the Kingdom (of which yet there is no doubt, when it was not countermanded by a Prophet sent from God) or that in the Sanhedrin new men were received into the places of the deceased, of which there is yet no doubt made by any. Sect. 70.

Having cleared the whole matter thus far, there will now be no need to declare what Powers they are, which are thus conveyed to the Bishops, or other Officers in the Church, it being already manifest, that the power of planting, governing and continuing of the Churches, being first vested in Christ, was from him derived to the Apostles, and from the Apostles to the Bishops, and so that the powers of Preaching, Baptizing, Teaching, Confirming, Consecrating the Sacrament of the Eucharist, binding and loosing, blessing in Marriage, visiting and praying over the sick, and at last, constituting others like themselves, either in whole by communicating intirely their whole power to them, or in part, by giving them some limited Powers for some certain Offices, were thus communicated. Sect. 71. Commission required.

Of which all that will be necessary to be added, is onely this, which natural reason dictates to every one, that no man ought to assume to himself any Office in any Society, but he that is designed to it by him that hath the supreme Power in it, nor consequently in the Church, but he that is called, as was Aaron, i. e. hath received Mission, or Commission from God, which being not now pretended by any to be received immediately from heaven, there is but one way imaginable for any man to claim it, viz. by receiving it from them, who immediately have received it from heaven. And therefore St. Cyprian speaking of the Hereticks and Impostures of his time, de Unit. Eccl. p. 23. chuses to give this, as a principal part of their Character, Hi sunt qui se ultrò apud temerarios convenas sine divina dispositione præficiunt, qui se Præpositos sine ulla Ordinationis lege constituunt, qui nemine Episcopatum dante Episcopi sibi nomen assumunt, sedentes in Pestilentia Cathedra, &c. These are they that of their own accord, without God's appointment, set themselves up among their temerarious assemblers, who constitute themselves Rulers without any Law of Ordination, who assume the name of Bishops, when no man gives them the power, and so sit in the Chair of Pestilence (instead of the Episcopal Chair) &c. Sect. 72.

And then the whole matter is devolved to a short issue, that every one that thus runs, is obliged to shew his Commission, by which he may appear to be sent. And that being once produced, to whatsoever acts that extends, to those he will be allowed to be sufficiently authorized, but to nothing else. Sect. 73.

And whosoever will not stand to this award, must not onely cast off the Church of Christ from being his Mother, confess Christ so far from being a favourer, that he is a professed enemy to his Sect. 74.

pretences,

pretences, but withall muſt acknowledge himſelf to have given a precedent for all the unreaſonable claims, and violences, and oppreſſions in the world, which muſt all commence regular, and juſt, when it ſhall once be allowed, that any power belongs to any, which cannot juſtifie (and doth not ſo much as plead) the derivation from above.

Sect. 75. To deduce this general concluſion concerning Eccleſiaſtical Power, to the particular branches of the Miniſterial function, hath been of late undertaken by my worthy friend Dr. Jeremy Taylor, which hath therefore ſuperſeded that part of the task, to which I were otherwiſe obliged now to proceed.

Sect. 76. The Office of Teaching. Inſtead whereof, it will onely be ſeaſonable to admoniſh this one thing, That the office of publick teaching, which is of all others now adays, moſt frequently invaded by thoſe, who are not ſent, is ſo far from being a light and unconſiderable, that it is indeed, next that of Ordination, (which is the communicating of the whole power) the moſt Apoſtolical part of the Miniſterial function, and that which cannot with any ſafety to the Church of Chriſt, be permitted to lye in common to all invaders, as being the proper inſtrument of diſſeminating true or falſe doctrine, and giving confidence to all the practices, that are conſequent to either, and upon the concord, or diſagreement of the teachers, it is viſible, that either unity or diviſions in the Church are directly, and immediately built.

Sect. 77. From whence it is neceſſarily conſequent, that the whole well-being of the Chriſtian Church, which conſiſts in unity, as the well-being of a body in the health of it, nay the very being it ſelf, which conſiſts in the truth of the Doctrine, and obedience to the Inſtitutions of Chriſt, depends in an eminent manner, upon the due qualifications of thoſe which are [f] inſtructed with the Office of teaching in the Church. And if it be not in the Power of the Governours of any National Church, to deſign the perſons that ſhall be intruſted with that Office, to reſtrain thoſe, whom they ſhall judge unmeet for that truſt, and to preſcribe forms of wholeſome doctrine, within which all ſhall be obliged to contain themſelves, It will not be poſſible to preſerve either truth or peace in any Nation, nor conſequently Chriſtianity it ſelf, which is made up of theſe two, and may as poſſibly be transformed into the direct contrary (whether Judaiſm, or Mahomedaniſm, or Idol-worſhip, or Atheiſm) as we ſee it is from truth in any particular point to the contrary errour, by the advantage of this one inſtrument of Conveyance, when he that goes out to ſow, carries nothing but cockle and darnel in his ſack with him.

[f] Intruſted.

Sect. 78. Teacher, the title of the Biſhop in Scripture. 1 Cor. 12. 28. Eph. 4. 11. 1 Tim. 5. 17. And therefore it is obſervable, that among the ſeveral Titles of the Biſhops in the Scripture, that of διδάσκαλος, Teacher, is a principal one, 1 Cor. 12. 28. Eph. 4. 11. the office of labouring, ἐν τῇ διδασκαλίᾳ in the doctrine, 1 Tim. 5. 17. belonging to the προεστὼς the Prefect there, As in Juſtin Martyr, Apol. 2. after the Anagnoſtes, or Reader, had read the portion of Scripture out of the Apoſtles or Prophets, προεστὼς τῷ τοιούτων μιμήσεως, the Prefect, i. e. the Biſhop makes the Exhortation, in like manner as Act. 13. we ſee practiſed by St. Paul the Apoſtle, where after the reading of the Law, follows the λόγος παρακλήσεως πρὸς τὸν λαὸν, the word of Exhortation to the people, which it ſeems was not the Reader's, but the Doctour's office.

Sect. 79. Can. 12. Can. 57. And although the Office of Teaching in the Church have been permitted to others beſides Biſhops, yet ſure to none, but thoſe, to whom the Biſhops have thought fit to communicate it, by impoſition of hands, and ſpecial licence, the force of the Ancyran and Laodicean Council, χρεὼν τὸ ἐπιτραπῆναι τὸν τοῦ ἐπισκόπου μετὰ γραμμάτων μηδὲν πράττειν ἐν ἑκάστῃ παροικίᾳ, That none ſhould doe any thing in every Province, without being permitted by the Biſhop with his Letters, extending to this, that no man ſhould undertake the office of teaching the people, but he that had his mandate, were thus licentiate to doe it.

Sect. 80. Having thus briefly ſet down the poſitive doctrine, and deduced it out of the clear ſtory of Scripture, and the firſt times, which demonſtrate the ſucceſſion of Officers in the Church, to be no temporary Inſtitution confined to that ſeaſon of the planting of the Goſpel, I ſhould be willing now to conſider all that hath by any adverſary been with any ſhew of reaſon pretended to the contrary: but being not ſo well verſed in the Modern Pamphlets, as would qualifie me to attempt the doing of that exactly, the moſt probable way I can think of, is to conſult the Socinian Writers, who being certainly the firſt, that from the beginning of Chriſtianity have in this Controverſie appeared againſt us (and the men to whom the late Divinity of theſe evil times oweth ſo extremely much, that I cannot doubt, but their weapons have been made uſe of on this Theme alſo) and having in other their invaſions of the Catholick Chriſtian Doctrines and Inſtitutions, written the moſt ſubtilly of any, may therefore be preſumed not to have betrayed this part of their cauſe, through any perſonal defects of theirs, but improved it to the higheſt, of which the matter hath been found capable.

The Socinians objections.

Sect. 81. Volkelius's arguments, propoſed. And to this end I ſhall give a ſhort view of what Volkelius, their great Maſter, hath ſaid in this matter, l. 6. c. 12. de Miſſ. Eccl. Doct. where under the name of the Pontificii, he ſets himſelf againſt thoſe, who being not content with the ancient cuſtome of chuſing Doctours and Paſtours, do now require ſome ſingular Miſſion of them, and demand a continual uninterrupted, and that perſonal ſucceſſion of Paſtours. From hence there ariſe two branches of the diſcourſe, 1. of the Miſſion, 2. of the Succeſſion of Paſtours.

Againſt Miſſion. On the firſt head, he hath three things to ſay, Firſt, that the place of Jeremy, c. 23. 21. I have not ſent them, and yet they ran] can prove nothing againſt his pretenſions, becauſe there they that are found fault with, took upon them to be Prophets, and aſſumed a Miſſion, gloried that they had a Province aſſigned them by God, of revealing ſome new things to his people, and conſequently required credit to be yielded them, as Embaſſadours of God's: But the modern Paſtours of the Church, profeſs they are no Prophets, brag not of any ſuch Embaſſy, undertake not to reveal any new thing, but onely inculcate that, which they find in the writings of the Apoſtles, and acknowledge they may err in underſtanding and explicating them, and require men to examine what they ſay, and believe them no farther, than they ſhall be found to agree with Scripture.

Sect. 82. The ſecond thing (which is but conſequent to this) is, that thoſe words, Rom. 10. 15. How ſhall they preach except they be ſent?] can yield as little aid to our pretenſions, for that is ſpoken of thoſe who were firſt to deliver the Chriſtian faith, and ſo a new thing, to mankind, and to confirm it ſo, as all were obliged to acquieſce in their doctrine, which they could not have done, if they had not been ſent as Embaſſadours on this errand: Whereas the modern Paſtours make not themſelves the firſt Preachers of the faith, aſſume no ſuch authority to themſelves, themſelves, but contenting themſelves with that Ordination of the Church, which the Apoſtles introduced, think they have done well, if they can but aſſiſt Chriſtians in the knowledge and practice of Chriſtian doctrine; which Ordination though it be laudable, and to be retained in the Church, whilſt it continues proſperous, yet if in time of perſecution the Church be diſſipated, and on any occaſion, that Ordination cannot be had, nothing hinders but that they which are able to inſtruct others to eternal life, may, without Ordination, propound the Chriſtian doctrine to men. And then his third thing is the proof of this laſt aſſertion from the example of thoſe, Act. 8. 4. who being after the death of Stephen diſperſed, were not ordained by any, and yet the preached doctrine of Chriſt, and the hand of the Lord was with them, ſaith St. Luke. And this is all he ſaith on the firſt Head.

Of the ſecond, concerning the ſucceſſion of Paſtours, His firſt obſervation is, that the Apoſtles in creating Paſtours looked not themſelves after any ſucceſſion, nor deſired that it ſhould be looked after in others, but thought it enough if they were ſo qualified as was required, 1 Tim. 3. Tit. 1. where deſcribing their office very largely, they yet give no precept, or ſyllable concerning ſucceſſion; which ſhews, that this is but a figment of thoſe that would advance the authority of the Church, and more eaſily obtrude their doctrines upon others. But, ſaith he, this ſtrategem hath not ſucceeded, as they deſired, with wiſe men, who do deny the neceſſity of that ſucceſſion of Paſtours, and onely aſſert the doctrinal, not perſonal ſucceſſion, and therefore unleſs the aſſertours of that neceſſity (under the name of Pontificii again) can prove that their Biſhops ſucceed the Apoſtles in purity of doctrine, they doe nothing, though they never ſo oft inculcate the ſucceſſion of the perſons. For the doctrinal ſucceſſion is not ſo conjoyned with the perſonal, that one cannot ſubſiſt without the other, nothing hindring but that the doctrine may be changed, where the perſonal ſucceſſion continues: Which appears by their own confeſſion, who acknowledge Biſhops of Apoſtolical Sees to have proved many of them heretical. From whence he concludes, that the perſonal ſucceſſion without the doctrinal, doth no more conſtitute a true Paſtour, than the carnal ſucceſſion from Abraham's loyns, makes the Jews the true people of God; and therefore they are not to be counted the ſucceſſours of the Apoſtles, who are not begotten by them either after a carnal or a ſpiritual manner, though they can brag of ſitting in their ſeats. And as they that are not born of Abraham's ſeed, yet imitating his faith, are the true ſons of Abraham, ſo they that follow the Apoſtles doctrine are true Doctors, though they do not perſonally ſucceed in their places. Sect. 84. Againſt ſucceſſion. c. 13. De ſucceſſ. Paſtorum.

This is all that is ſaid by him on this matter, and is far from any cloſe arguing, or preſſing our pretenſions with any inconvenience, or abſurdity. Sect. 84. Anſwer to thoſe againſt Miſſion.

For firſt, as to the two places of Scripture from Jer. 23. and Rom. 10. which he ſaith are not pertinent to our purpoſe, this diſcourſe, which hath not choſen to make uſe of them, is no way preſſed, or diſparaged by them: Onely it may deſerve to be conſidered, whether when the fault is ſo great to pretend Miſſion from God, for thoſe Meſſages or Prophecies which are not delivered by him, it be not a dangerous thing for any man to undertake to interpret Scripture publickly (which is the New Teſtament notion of Propheſying) who is ſo far from having any Commiſſion from God for ſo doing, that he is not authorized by the Governours of the Church, wherein he lives, or by any that have any ſo much as pretence of authority, to juſtifie him, but onely by his own preſumption in aſſuming an Office (for ſuch that of the Doctor is acknowledged to be) without any Call or Commiſſion for it, from any but himſelf. Sect. 85. Jer. 23.

And for the ſecond place, Rom. 10. How ſhall they preach, except they be ſent?] though I acknowledge the circumſtances of the place to determine it to another notion, than is ordinarily thought on (viz. that as the Jews could not believe, unleſs the Goſpel were preached to them, ſo 'twas not imaginable that it ſhould be preached, or they believe, if the Apoſtles did not look upon them, as their Province, to which they were ſent, if they forſook them, and departed to the Gentiles) yet Volkelius's anſwer ſuppoſing a Miſſion neceſſary to the firſt preaching of the Goſpel, becauſe that was a new thing to mankind, muſt acknowledge the ſame neceſſity of Miſſion to authorize any to preach to the Indians, where the Goſpel hath not been preached yet; and that being granted, there will be little reaſon to doubt, but that Catechizing and Preaching in a Chriſtian Commonwealth, being the onely publick way to plant Chriſtian Religion in any (which certainly is not born with men here, any more than at Japan) that Miſſion will be as neceſſary to this Office of Preaching here, as to the preaching to Indians it would be; The danger being as great in miſ-teaching of the baptized ignorant Engliſhman, as in miſ-preaching to the heathen Indian, and the care that is due from the Church to her own members, being as great, as that wherein thoſe that are without are concerned, and no way to prevent that danger, or to expreſs that care, but by maintaining of Order in a Church, and not leaving the Pulpit to the ignorant, or permitting them, whoſe boldneſs qualifies them for nothing but errours and impieties, to infuſe into others all that poyſon, which their humour is apt to breed in themſelves. Sect. 86. Rom. 10. 15.

But then thirdly, the whole ground of his anſwer, viz. that difference betwixt the Preachers there meant, and the Paſtours of the preſent Church] is very infirm, and impertinent to this matter. For, granting the preſent Paſtours not to aſſume to be the firſt Preachers of the faith, &c. why ſhould that render this Miſſion or Ordination unneceſſary? Titus was ordained Biſhop of Crete by St. Paul, and Timothy of Epheſus, and that by the impoſition of hands, yet neither of them to be the firſt Preachers of the faith, but ἐπιδιορθοῦν τὰ λειπόμενα, to ſet right things that were left unregulated, Tit. 1. 5. and to charge ſome that they teach no other doctrine. Both which ſuppoſe eſtabliſhed Churches, and not the new planting of the faith. And both theſe were to ordain Elders, or Biſhops, i. e. Paſtours, one in every City. And ſo thoſe again, that were to reſide in Chriſtian Cities, and not to Preach to Infidels, had yet need of Ordination, and Miſſion, to fit and qualifie them for that (which is now the acknowledged office of the Paſtour) as much as Paul or Barnabas had to preach to the Gentiles, that had not heard of Chriſt. Sect. 87. Tit. 1. 5.

But then fourthly, this Authour having ſaid of the modern Paſtours, that they content themſelves with that Ordination of the Church, which the Apoſtles introduced, hath made all farther anſwer of ours unneceſſary: For it being manifeſt by what hath been ſaid, that the Apoſtles introduced the Ordination for which we contend, if that be had by all that undertake the office of teaching in the Church, I ſhall have nothing to charge, or except againſt them: And becauſe he acknowledgeth that Ordination laudable, and ſuch as is to be retained in the Church, whilſt it continues proſperous, and onely pleads for the inſtructing others to eternal life without Ordination, in caſe that cannot be had, through perſecution, &c. therefore I ſuppoſe the whole queſtion, as it is by him argued, devolves to this, What is lawfull, Sect. 88.

Act. 8. 4. or fit to be done in caſe of that neceſſity: And to that belongs his proof produced from Act. 8. 4. when, ſaith he, they that were diſperſed after the death of Stephen went out and preached without Ordination.

Sect. 89. Case of neceſſity. But to this iſſue of the whole matter, the anſwer is obvious, Firſt, that whatſoever excuſe from neceſſity can be pretended for them that are perſecuted, this cannot with any reaſon be produced for the perſecutours, when they that have caſt out the Governours, and ſettled Miniſtery of any particular Church, ſhall aſſume and invade their Offices, and ſo being guilty of introducing the neceſſity (or being themſelves the onely Fates, that have impoſed theſe indiſſoluble Laws) cannot be excuſed by that pretended Neceſſity.

Sect. 90. But then for the perſecuted, who alone can be ſuppoſed to make this claim to the excuſe of neceſſity, I anſwer, Secondly, that when any perſecution lyes on any particular Church, nothing hinders any perſecuted ſon of that Church to ſeek Ordination, or Miſſion from the fathers of it, unleſs all of them be ſwept away by the ſuppoſed perſecution, and their light be quite put out in Iſrael. And if that blaſt that extinguiſhes all, ſhould be ſo ſudden and violent, that it cannot be prevented, or reſiſted, the old Iſraelitiſh way of calling to the next of kin to raiſe up ſeed to the deceaſed brother, is a good hint of advice and direction in this, viz. to borrow light from ſome neighbour's Candle, Ordination, or Miſſion from ſome other Church, which cannot without great unchriſtian charity think fit to deny that duty of Mercy, when it is begg'd of them.

Sect. 91. And if yet, upon this morally impoſſible ſuppoſition, Ordination ſhould be no way compaſſable, then thirdly, I ſhall not doubt to yield as much as is pretended, that in caſe of unblameable neceſſity, they which have received the Faith, and are able to inſtruct others to eternal life, may without Ordination propound the Chriſtian doctrine to men, and to an Orphan brother or ſiſter, any brother ſupply the place of the Charity, though not uſurp the Authority of a Father.

Sect. 92. Act. 8. 4. But then fourthly, to the Argument drawn from Act. 8. 4. I anſwer, that thoſe that are there ſaid to have gone every where preaching the Word, do not any way appear to have done it without Miſſion or Ordination. For firſt, the [all they that were ſcattered abroad] v. 1. cannot be ſuppoſed to be [the whole number of Chriſtians (called the multitude of diſciples, c. 6. 2.) that were at Jeruſalem, except the Apoſtles] for if ſo, there would then have been little for the Apoſtles to doe that were left behind. 'Tis much more reaſonable to refer the [πάντες all] to the [Ἐκκλησία Church] (which is the immediate antecedent, and may denote the Governours and Officers of the Church, all Eccleſiaſtical perſons, the Apoſtles, the Biſhop of the Church, and his ſeven Deacons, and thoſe ſure were the men, on whom the perſecution fell, witneſs Stephen, c. 6. 9. and conſequently thoſe will be ſuppoſed to be diſperſed by it) or elſe to the ſeven Deacons peculiarly, who had been conſtituted, c. 6. and from that place to this, the ſtory of Stephen's diſpute, and Sermon, and ſtoning, ſet down as it were in a Parentheſis, and then c. 8. 1. upon the great Perſecution that was againſt the Church πάντες διεσπάρησαν, they were all diſperſed; Of the ſeven, Stephen ſlain, and all the reſt diſperſed, and agreeably it follows immediately, ver. 5. Philip (one of theſe ſeven ordained Deacons) went down and preached Chriſt to the Samaritans, and, having converted, baptized them, but, being but a Deacon, could not lay hands on them, or ordain Elders among them, the Apoſtles from Jeruſalem were ſent to doe that: And then this paſſage of ſtory will be as far as any in Scripture, from inferring the uſefulneſs of Miſſion or Ordination, being a clear Teſtimony for the neceſſity of it.

Sect. 93. To this it might be farther added, that although they are all ſaid to be diſperſed, except the Apoſtles, yet it is not ſaid that all the Apoſtles remained behind, and indeed we find not in this, or any other ſtory, that above three or four of the Apoſtles did any time continue there, and then, beſide the ſix Deacons, there might be eight or nine Apoſtles contained in that number of the [πάντες, all] And as that makes it more reaſonable to conclude [the Church] in the notion of Eccleſiaſtical perſons, and not [the multitude of diſciples] to be the antecedent to [πάντες, all] ſo it makes it leſs neceſſay to conclude, that they that Preached the Word every where, did it without Ordination.

Sect. 94. However if theſe were not the [πάντες, the all] but others beſide theſe contained in that number, c. 11. 19. yet of them theſe two things muſt be obſerved, Firſt, that they were, in a remarkable manner, filled all with the holy Ghoſt, c. 4. 31. which was certainly done to fit them for ſome extraordinary work, ſuch as there follows, the ſpeaking of the word of God with boldneſs. And for this they were as fully qualified by the deſcent of the holy Ghoſt upon them, and the effects thereof ſpeaking with tongues, or Propheſying, or gifts of healing, as any are by impoſition of the Apoſtles hands pretended to be. And yet ſecondly, all that we find aſſumed by them, is divulging the Goſpel, whereſoever they came, c. 8. 4. and 11. 19. And that liberty where the Goſpel is not yet known, we ſhall not deny to any. And this is all that is neceſſary to be ſaid to his Objections on the firſt branch of the Queſtion.

Sect. 95. Anſwer to thoſe againſt ſucceſſion. As for the ſecond, his exceptions againſt the neceſſity of an uninterrupted ſucceſſion, and the frivolouſneſs of the arguments will render a ſufficient reaſon of the deſigned brevity of theſe returns to them. For firſt, the arguments from the Apoſtles not looking after ſucceſſion, nor deſiring that others ſhould look after it, nor giving any mandate concerning it, are all Negative Arguments, a teſtimonio and therefore conclude nothing.

Sect. 96. But then ſecondly, the Apoſtles ordaining of others, which is mentioned, being it ſelf the taking care for ſucceſſion, and ſo their ſetting down the qualifications of thoſe that were to be ordained, and eſpecially the leaving Titus diſtinctly to this end, that he might ordain in every City, are ſo many clear demonſtrations of this truth, that the Apoſtles took care of ſucceſſion.

Sect. 97. The Teſtimony of Clemens Romanus for ſucceſſion. And it falls out, that we have (ex abundanti, much more than is needfull to the juſtifying of our pretenſions) a moſt eminent Teſtimony of Clement, St. Paul's fellow-labourer (mentioned by him with ſo much honour, in his Epiſtle to the Corinthians, Οἱ Ἀπόστολοι ἡμῶν, &c. Our Apoſtles knew by our Lord Jeſus Chriſt, that there would be contention about the name (i. e. Dignity, or Authority) of Epiſcopacy; for which cauſe therefore having perfect foreknowledge, they conſtituted Biſhops, (and Deacons) and after gave a ‖ ſeries or catalogue, or ſucceſſion, that when they dyed other approved perſons might ſucceed (διαδέξωνται) to that office. So far it is from truth, that the Apoſtles took no care for ſucceſſion, ſucceſſion, and ſo far that from concluding that this pretended ſucceſſion is but a commentum, or ſtrategem to advance the deſigns of ambitious men, or Seducers.

Sect. 98. But for that which he next adds, that this ſtrategem hath not ſucceeded with wiſe men, who deny that neceſſity of ſucceſſion, &c. It is far from concluding any thing, but that the Writer was willing to perſuade men, that he and his fellow-Sectaries were wiſe men, for, beſides that the unſucceſsfulneſs of it doth not prove it a lye (for truth hath not always had the Monopoly of ſucceſſes) it would be hard for him to ſhew any one man in the world, before Socinus, and his followers, that have avowedly oppoſed the Miſſion, and ſucceſſion of Apoſtolical officers. And then to make ſuch a leap over almoſt 1600 years, from the Apoſtles time to them, to pitch upon a thin ſociety of wiſe men, and then, without any Teſtimony, but their own of themſelves, to preſume their own wiſedom, and, by drawing an argument from it, prejudge all other men, is a practice ſo far from concluding in any mood, or figure, that it is indeed a proving the ſame by the ſame. Volkelius and ſome few of his Compeers oppoſe ſucceſſion, and their argument to juſtifie their doing ſo, is becauſe they have thought fit to oppoſe it.

Sect. 99. As for the diſtinction betwixt doctrinal and perſonal ſucceſſion, as I acknowledge it a reaſonable diſtinction, ſo I cannot but proclaim that moſt unreaſonable, which from thence he immediately infers, that therefore, unleſs the aſſertours of the neceſſity of ſucceſſion, can prove that their Biſhops ſucceed the Apoſtles in purity of doctrine, they doe nothing. For certainly they which doe not all, may yet doe ſomething, and he that ſaid, half was more than all, was not ſo groſly out, as he that made it equal with nothing. It may, and is doubtleſs true, that the now preſent Biſhop of Rome ſucceeds the firſt Biſhops of that See, and he that aſſerts that, aſſerts one truth, and I, in aſſerting (if I can alſo juſtifie) it, have done all that is neceſſary in the point in hand, (becauſe the preſent Queſtion engages me to no farther undertaking) though to him that would infer that the Church of Rome hath no errours in it now, it is a moſt feeble medium for his turn. And in order to that concluſion 'tis true, that he that doth not prove a doctrinal as well as perſonal ſucceſſion, doeth nothing in effect, nothing of force or validity toward his end, viz. of proving that there are no errours in the Church of Rome.

Sect. 100. And for the ſmall inconſiderable improvement which he makes to his argument by the reſemblance of the carnal and ſpiritual ſeed of Abraham, that the perſonal ſucceſſion without the doctrinal, doth no more conſtitute a true Paſtour, than the carnal ſucceſſion from Abraham's loyns, makes the Jews the true people of God; this is founded in the old trivial æquivocation of the word [true.] For as the true Paſtour ſignifies him that is truly called to that office, it is apparent, that the perſonal ſucceſſion alone infers that, there being no doubt with any, but that he may be this day a true Biſhop, which is to morrow an Heretick, fit to be degraded, and indeed he were not capable of being depoſed, were he not truly poſſeſt of that honour. And this is the onely notion of a true Paſtour that our preſent pretenſions are concerned in; For that the ſucceſſion to St. Peter's Chair, doth conclude the infallibility of the Pope's Decrees, or the [verity] in the other notion, i.e. veracity of all that ſo ſucceed, is no part either of our faith, or preſent Intereſts, who know that the Jews are Jews, even when they have crucified Chriſt, and as truly ſo now, ſince their ſins have made that name the vileſt Proverb of Reproach, as they were, when it denoted moſt magnificently the peculiar People of God. And though by Chriſt's taking down the partition, and God's making his Promiſes not to Abraham's progeny, but the children and followers of his faith; it comes oft to paſs, that he is a ſpiritual, which is not a carnal ſon of Abraham, yet can it not, by that incompetent ſimilitude, be concluded, that he that follows the Apoſtles doctrine, is a true Paſtour, though he ſucceed not perſonally in any of their places: For if ſo, it would preſently be concluded, that every orthodox female Chriſtian, which by being ſo, is ſuppoſed to follow the Apoſtles doctrines, were a true Paſtour alſo. The old rule is true, that ſimilitudes are not argumentative, and that the thing which they are moſt apt to infer, is, that he is to ſeek for arguments, that thinks fit to make uſe of them.

Sect. 101. I ſhall need ſay no more to theſe objections, but that they are the beſt, that a ſort of very ſubtile diſputers have been able to produce, and, that the matter yielded them no better, is not to be imputed to them, that are not ordinarily obſerved to be ill managers. As it is, I have no reaſon to complain of the injury, that I have by this means come more ſpeedily to my harbour.

Sect. 102. Where having put in, I ſoon find my ſelf called out again by our own Country-man, Mr. Hobbes in his Leviathan (c. 42. Of a Chriſtian Commonwealth) Where in the midſt of a Rapſody of as ſtrange Divinity, as ſince the days of the Gnoſticks, and their ſeveral Progenies, the Sun ever ſaw (a new Trinity, not of perſons, but perſonators, a new Heaven, and Hell, both upon this Earth of ours, the Heaven conſiſting of ſingle perſons, that are eternal in their own perſons, the Hell of married men, that by the advantage of getting children, are, though their perſons annihilated, eternized in their ſucceſſive Poſterity, and a whole ſcheme of Phænomena, bearing ſutable proportion with theſe Principles) I find a Section Of Ordination of Teachers, and am unwilling to reſiſt the Temptation of annexing here a brief view of it. Mr. Hobbes's objections.

Sect. 103. It begins thus, As the Apoſtles, Matthias, Paul and Barnabas, were not made by our Saviour himſelf, but were elected by the Church, i. e. by the aſſembly of Chriſtians, namely Matthias by the Church of Jeruſalem, and Paul and Barnabas by the Church of Antioch: So were alſo the Preſbyters and Paſtours in other Churches elected by the Churches of thoſe Cities: For proof whereof let us conſider, &c. The whole doctrine of that Section being contained in theſe words, and all that follows being but attempts to prove this, It will not be amiſs to conſider them more particularly, and obſerve how many miſadventures will be ſoon diſcernible in them. The firſt is the confounding of Election and Ordination, which are by him ſuppoſed to be one, but are indeed two diſtant things. That by him they are made one, already appears, by comparing the title with the ſubject matter of the Section. The title is Ordination of Teachers, but the ſubject matter Election; and to that the ſubſequent proofs belong alſo, that from Act. 14. from Tit. 1. from the practice of the Election of the Biſhops of Rome, put it out of queſtion. Election and Ordination.

Sect. 104. Now that Election and Ordination are ſeveral things, is ſufficiently known to every man that meaſures the nature of words, either by Uſage or Dictionaries; onely for the convincing of this Gentleman, or others, who think not themſelves obliged to the obſervation of ſuch vulgar Laws, I ſhall propoſe Differ.

theſe evidences. In the ſtory of the creation of the Deacons of Jeruſalem, Act. 6. there are two things diſtinctly ſet down, one propoſed to the multitude of diſciples to be done by them, another reſerved to the Apoſtles; that which the ἀδελφοὶ or μαθηταὶ, brethren or diſciples, were to doe, was ἐπισκέψασθε ἄνδρας, to look out men, ver. 3. but that with theſe three bounds, 1. to take ſeven, neither more, nor fewer; 2. thoſe, men generally known, and reputed of, μαρτυρουμένους; 3. in ſuch eſtimation, for fulneſs of the Spirit, of Faith, of Wiſedom, or diſcretion for managery of affairs. According to which rules preſcribed them by the Apoſtles, they proceed, ver. 5. καὶ ἐξελέξαντο Στέφανον, &c. and they choſe Stephen, &c. Here (looking out, and chuſing, either one preparative to the other, or two words ſignifying the ſame thing) Election of the perſons was by the Apoſtles permitted to the multitude of the brethren; but ſtill the καθιστῶμεν, conſtituting, or ordaining, verſe 3. is reſerved to the Apoſtles. In order to which it follows, ver. 6 that as they which choſe the perſons, ἔστησαν ἐνώπιον, ſet them before the Apoſtles: So the Apoſtles, and not they, prayed and laid their hands upon them. Where conſtituting and impoſition of hands being directly the thing which is by all men underſtood by Ordination, is appropriated to the Apoſtles, though the Election of the perſons within the forementioned limits, is by them allowed or permitted to the multitude of the diſciples.

Sect. 105. The ſame may appear in that higher matter, the advancing of Matthias to the apoſtolacy, if (as St. Luke muſt, ſo) this Gentleman may be believed againſt himſelf. That the Election of Matthias Acts 1. 26. was not by ſuffrages of men, but by lot, Acts 1. 26. and that as an ἀνάδειξις demonſtration, ὃν ἐξελέξω, whom God (not whom the Congregation) had choſe, ver. 25. appears moſt evidently by St. Luke. But for the Ordination of this Apoſtle, that, ſaith this Gentleman, p. 288. lin. 10. was the act of the Congregation, which though it be far from all truth (all that was done in it being done by the Apoſtles onely, in the midſt, i. e. in the preſence of all the diſciples) yet I ſhall not now reſiſt it, but take him at his word, and from thence conclude, that the Election being by St. Luke attributed to God, and the Ordination by himſelf to the Congregation, Election and Ordination muſt be two ſeverals, and not the ſame act

Sect. 106. The ſame may appear again in his own inſtance of Paul and Barnabas, Act. 13. 2. The holy Ghoſt
Acts 13. 2. ſaid, Separate me Paul and Barnabas for the work whereunto I have called them. There again it is Acts 9. 15. apparent, that God from heaven had choſen Saul (that σκεῦος ἐκλογῆς, Acts 9. 15. Veſſel of Election, to bear his name) and Barnabas, to that office of apoſtolacy, and given appointment to Simeon, and Lucius, and Manaen, the Biſhops of Syria, to ſeparate, i. e. (as we have ſhewed) to ordain them, or ſend them forth to the work. And accordingly they did, ver. 3. having prayed, and faſted, and laid hands on them, they diſmiſſed them, or gave them their ſolemn Miſſion or Commiſſion. Where 'tis again clear, that the Election of the perſons was the act of God, from the holy Ghoſt, but the impoſition of hands, Separation, Miſſion, Ordination, was the work of men there named, and commanded to doe it. So when Timothy was made Biſhop by the Laying on of the hands of the Preſbytery, as his Ordination muſt be imputed to thoſe Biſhops or Elders that laid hands on him: So there is 1 Tim. 4. 14. alſo mention of διὰ προφητείας, 1 Tim. 4. 14. of Prophecy, or revelation of God's Will, by which that grace was given him. i. e. by which he was elected to that dignity; and ſo St. Chryſoſtome, and Theophylact affirm of that place, τὸ τῆς διδασκαλίας καὶ ἱερωσύνης ἀξίωμα μέγα ὄν, τῆς τῶ Θεῶ δεῖται ψήφου ὥστε τὸν ἄξιον λέγεσθαι— ὅπω ὁ Τιμόθεος ἠρέθη ἐπὶ τῶ ἱερατεύειν, The dignity of Teaching and Prieſthood (i. e. Epiſcopacy) being great, ſtands in need of God's ſuffrage for the admitting of a worthy perſon, and ſo (as of old by Prophecy Prieſts were made, ſo) was Timothy choſen to the Prieſthood.

Sect. 107. And as of Timothy, ſo of all other the Biſhops of Aſia, when St. Paul ſaith of them, Acts 20.28.
Acts 20. 28. that the holy Ghoſt ἔθετο ἐπισκόπους had ſet them overſeers, I ſuppoſe that is to be underſtood of their Apud Euſeb. Hiſt. l. 3. c. xx. election or nomination to thoſe dignities. For ſo I am ſure Clemens Alexandrinus, ſpeaking of St. John, that he was intreated to go to the neighbouring Cities, adds, that he went accordingly, ὅπου δὴ καθίστας καθίζων, &c. τῶν ὑπὸ τῶ πνεύματος σημαινομένων, and conſtituted Biſhops, &c. of thoſe that were ſignified by the Spirit, where the Spirit's ſignification notes the election or nomination of the perſons, which was from God immediately, but the conſtituting them was the ordination of St. John.

Sect. 108. And ſo in that Teſtimony of Clemens Romanus formerly produced, Ἀπόστολοι κατέστησαν —— δοκιμάσαντες τῶ πνεύματι, τοὺς ἐπισκόπους, the Apoſtles conſtituted Biſhops, trying or approving them by the Spirit: where ſtill the tryal or approbation, being all one with the election of the perſons, was an act of the holy Spirit, revealed to them, but the conſtitution or ordination, their own act, to which they were formerly authorized by Chriſt.

Sect. 109. And ſo in his other inſtance of the Biſhops of Rome, from the beginning till this time, as in all other practice over the Chriſtian world, Election and Ordination are diſtinguiſhed, not onely in reſpect of the acts, one ſubſequent to the other, but very frequently in reſpect of the Electors and Ordainers, the whole College of Cardinals, that are preſent, being the perſons, to whom the election of the Pope now belongs, but onely the Biſhop Cardinals laying on their hands in the ordination.

Sect. 110. And ſo it is known in this Kingdom, that the Conge d' eleir, the Commiſſion to chuſe a Biſhop was by the King ſent to the Dean and Chapter in the Cathedral, as to the ſtanding Synod of that Dioceſe, but the ordination was to be done by thoſe that were Biſhops before him.

Sect. 111. This I ſhould not thus largely have inſiſted on, were it not the ἄπιον ψεῦδος, the procreative miſtake, or ignorance, that produced thoſe other, that I am now to proceed to.

Sect. 112. A ſecond great miſtake is, that he affirms of Matthias, Paul and Barnabas, that they were elected Election of Matthias. by the Church: where firſt, it hath already appeared by plain Texts of Scripture, that every one of theſe three was elected by God himſelf. Of Matthias 'tis clear by the manner of it, by lottery, the Acts 1. 24. diſpoſition of which is of the Lord, ſaith Solomon, and by the ἐξελέξω, Act. 1. 24. thou (i. e. God) haſt choſen. And of the other two, εἶπε τὸ πνεῦμα τὸ ἅγιον, the holy Ghoſt ſaid, i. e. commanded to ſeparate them (by name) to the work, ὁ προσκέκλημαι αὐτούς, to which I, (i. e. the holy Ghoſt) have called them. And it is not imaginable how this Gentleman ſhould view, (as 'tis clear he did) and not diſcern the importance of ſuch plain places.

And

And ſecondly, when by the Church he expreſſes himſelf to mean the Aſſembly of Chriſtians, the Church of Jeruſalem and of Antioch, It is by that rendred much more unreconcileable to all appearance of truth: For till Church was ſo explained, it was poſſible he might have meant the Apoſtles, or Governours of the Church, who had ſomewhat to doe in this matter; whereas the Aſſembly of Chriſtians were (as far as can be diſcerned by the Text) utterly unconcerned in both of them. Sect. 113.

Of the chuſing of Matthias there were two parts, the naming of two, and the caſting lots between them two; the former of theſe was no act of the Church, much leſs the latter. Sect. 114.

The two were not named by the Church, but by the Eleven, for in the midſt of them (under the title of ἀδελφοὶ ἀπλοῦν, Peter's brethren, or fellow-diſciples, and thoſe ſet down by name, verſe 13.) St. Peter ſtood up, ver. 15. and ſpeaking of Judas, ſaith, he was numbred with us, ver. 17. i. e. with himſelf, and them, to whom he ſpake, the College of Diſciples, or Apoſtles peculiarly, not the whole number of believers, or the Church of Jeruſalem; and ſo again, ver. 21. the men that conſorted with us, are thoſe that followed Chriſt together with the twelve, and verſe 22. a witneſs of the reſurrection σὺν ἡμῖν with us, muſt needs refer to the eleven peculiarly, for they onely, not the whole Church, were to be thoſe witneſſes: Upon which it follows, ἔστησαν δύο, ver. 13. and they appointed or pitched on two, where the [they] muſt needs be they, to, and of whom he ſpake all this while, and ſo the eleven, and not the hundred and twenty, which are never mentioned but once, and then 'tis in a parentheſis, ver. 15. Sect. 115.

And if the eleven were they that nominated the two, then it muſt needs follow, that it was they alſo that gave in the κλήρους αὐτῶν, the lots of them, one lot with the name of Barſabas, the other of Matthias upon it, for ſo the ἔδωκαν, they gave, verſe 26. muſt connect with the ἔστησαν, they appointed, and conclude the ſame perſons to have done both. And indeed there could be no uſe of the Congregation for that, to throw in, and take out the lots, That muſt be the work of ſome two perſons at the moſt, and ſo no work of an Aſſembly. Sect. 116.

And ſo likewiſe at the conſtituting of Saul and Barnabas, the Text is expreſs, that they were Doctours and Prophets that prayed, and laid hands on them, and ſo the Ordination was no more the act of the Aſſembly, than the Election appeared to be. Sect. 117. The Election of Paul and Barnabas.

It was hardly poſſible to have contrived a greater number of improbable affirmations into ſo ſmall a compaſs: And then if that which follows with the [ſo] be ſo indeed, If the Paſtours and Preſbyters in other Cities, were elected by the Churches in thoſe Cities, ſo, as Matthias and Paul, and Barnabas, were, if one be no truer than the other, the whole matter is ſoon come to a fair iſſue. Sect. 118.

But however it hath proved with his firſt affirmation, which was without offer of proof impoſed upon us, The practice of the other Cities he undertakes to make proof of. Sect. 119.

And his proofs are two, one taken from Acts 14. 23. the other from Tit. 1. 5. In the firſt, Paul and Barnabas ordained Elders in every Church; in the ſecond, Titus conſtituted Elders in every City: Moſt certainly true. But what is to be inferred from hence? Ergo, The Preſbyters and Paſtours of other Cities were elected by the Churches of thoſe Cities. Sect. 120.

A Concluſion very remote from theſe premiſſes: For, firſt, there is not one word of Election in either place, but of conſtituting and ordination, which is quite another thing; and ſecondly, there is nothing in either place attributed to the Churches of thoſe Cities, but onely to Paul and Barnabas in the one, to Titus in the other. Thus beyond all meaſure improſperous are this Gentleman's undertakings on this ſubject. Sect. 121.

The former of theſe he ingenuouſly confeſſes may at firſt ſight be taken for an argument againſt him, that they themſelves (Paul and Barnabas) choſe, and gave them their authority: And ſo ſure 'twill do at the tenth, and twentieth review of it. Sect. 122.

But, ſaith he, if we conſider the original Text of it, it will be manifeſt, that they were authorized and choſen by the Aſſembly of the Chriſtians of each City: For the words there are, χειροτονήσαντες αὐτοῖς πρεσβυτέρους κατ' ἐκκλησίαν, When they had ordained them Elders by the holding up of hands in every Congregation: What is the importance of χειροτονεῖν, we are not now to be taught, having in the beginning of this diſcourſe ſet it down at large, that though the original of it refer to the ceremony of holding up of hands, yet it ſignifies ſimply to ordain and conſtitute, without any reſpect to that ceremony; and when it doth refer to it, it always denotes their hands, and ſuffrages, of whom it is ſpoken, and cannot be imagined ſo much as to intimate the ſuffrages of other men. And then, firſt, it would be as unreaſonable to infer from the original of the word, that that ceremony was there uſed, as Act. 1. to reſolve that they uſed Counters in reckoning or numbering Matthias with the eleven Apoſtles, becauſe the word συγκατεψηφίσθη there, is derived from ψῆφος a Counter, which was uſual in numbring. Sect. 123. Acts 14. 23.

And ſecondly, if it were granted, that the word muſt here import (according to the original of it) to ordain by holding up of hands, there is not from thence the leaſt advantage gained toward the deſired concluſion. For it was diſtinctly Paul and Barnabas which did thus χειροτονεῖν ordain by thus holding up the hands, and not the aſſembly of all the Chriſtians. And if no part of this were ſo, yet thirdly, what he ſaith of their being authorized and choſen by the Aſſembly of Chriſtians, is another heap of Confuſions: For whatſoever chuſing can be imagined of the Aſſembly, that muſt (as the chuſing of the Deacons, Acts 6.) be by authority from the Apoſtles, who again after that, were to give unto them that were ſo choſen, all the authority that they were to have; And ſo the choice, whatſoever it were, preceded, and the authority followed after; And again, the choice onely was ſuppoſeable to be from the Aſſembly, the authority being totally derived from the Apoſtles: both which are confounded and tranſpoſed by this Gentleman. Sect. 124.

But, ſaith he, the manner of chuſing Magiſtrates and Officers in all thoſe Cities, was by plurality of ſuffrages, and to ordain an officer in any of the Cities, was no more but to bring the people together, to elect him by plurality of Votes. It was therefore the Aſſembly that elected their own Elders, the Apoſtles were onely Preſidents of the Aſſembly, to call them together for ſuch election, and to pronounce them elected, and to give them the benediction, which now is called conſecration. This is again very far from prevailing any thing toward the deſired concluſion. For firſt, whatſoever be ſuppoſed of the manner Sect. 125.

of electing Officers and Magiſtrates in thoſe heathen Cities, 'tis ſure enough that was not the buſineſs then in hand; Paul and Barnabas came not thither for the election of an ἄρχων or φυλάρχης (as of a Mayor, or Sheriffs, or Aldermen) in that City. Theſe itinerant Apoſtles, that were not of their Corporations, were not certainly the Preſidents of their Courts or Common Councils, to aſſemble, or bring them together for thoſe elections. This is as remote a conjecture, as that formerly mentioned of Paul's ordaining Elders by the power which he had received from his Maſter Gamaliel; The truth is viſibly in the midſt between them, what they did was to conſtitute Biſhops in each City, over the Chriſtians, and therein they acted neither as Jews, nor Gentiles, but as Apoſtles of Chriſt, from whom they had their authority to preach, to receive believers, to order them in the ſervice of God, and ſo leaving them, to conſtitute thoſe which ſhould doe it in their abſence. All which hath nothing of their heathen Cuſtoms in it, nay the Apoſtles (ſaith [h] Clement, a writer of thoſe times) conſtituted their firſt-fruits Biſhops of thoſe who ſhould believe, μελλόντων πιστεύειν, who therefore not yet believing, are not imaginable to be the Electours of their Biſhops.

Sect. 126. Secondly, what reaſon can be rendred why to ordain ſhould be no more, but to bring the people together to elect? It was even now to hold up hands, and ordain by doing ſo, That differs much from the bare aſſembling of the people: So no grounds are there yet produced for the inferring the Concluſion [It was therefore the Aſſembly that elected.]

Sect. 127. And yet thirdly, If again all this were granted to him, he hath ſo ordered the matter, that it would be nothing available to him: For 'tis by him ſtill acknowledged, that the Apoſtles gave the benediction, which now is called conſecration. And if they did ſo, that is all we mean by ordination, when by that word we render χειροτονήσαντες, and ſo all that we contend for in this buſineſs: For of ordination it hath formerly been ſhewed at large, that it was the communicating that power to others, which had by Chriſt been given to the Apoſtles; To them it was conveyed by the viſible deſcent of the holy Ghoſt upon them, from them to others, onely by prayer, and benediction, and impoſition of hands, the ceremony of conveying power to ſucceſſours. And all this we now adays call Conſecration, the ſeparating men, i. e. the conſecrating, ſetting them apart to holy offices and dignities in the Church, and if this, all this while, be allowed the Apoſtles peculiarly, and not the aſſembly of Chriſtians, then is all granted that is by any man pretended to, on this head of Ordination of Teachers.

Sect. 128. For to conclude this matter, though both here and in the place to Titus, there is no one word of election, or choice to this office, but onely of ordination, giving them Commiſſion who were choſen, yet it is willingly allowed, that the election of Church officers doth not always belong to the ſame perſons, who are to ordain. The practice is ſufficiently known in this broken Church of ours, The Parochial Miniſter is choſen, and nominated by the Patron, who is ſometimes the whole Congregation, ſometimes one principal perſon in it, the Lord of the Manor, the King, the Biſhop, &c. And he (ſave when it is the Biſhop himſelf that hath the right of Patronage) preſents him to the Biſhop, and as he, upon approbation of the perſon, inſtitutes him to the Cure of Souls, ſo he ordains him by impoſition of hands, to the office of a Deacon and Preſbyter.

Sect. 129. And ſo likewiſe for the ordination or conſecration of a Biſhop, as was formerly ſaid, The King nominated, the Dean and Chapter did chuſe, (and if they found juſt cauſe to return an οὐκ ἔστιν ἄξιος, he is unworthy, in ſtead of ſignifying their choice, no doubt they ſhould be heard) but the Council of Biſhops ordained him. And ſo ſtill the election differing clearly from the ordination, and the election being not the thing contended for, but onely the ordination or conſecration, that being yielded to belong to the Biſhops or Elders peculiarly, and not to the aſſembly of Chriſtians, the whole Controverſie is yielded us, in the eager'ſt part of the Contention.

Sect. 130. Which being done, I ſhall not need to contend any farther, or make any anſwers to the ſubſequent parts of that Section; Otherwiſe it were eaſie to ſhew that Προεστὼς or Antiſtes, the ordinary title of Biſhops in Juſtin Martyr, and ſome of the Ancients, was ſomewhat more than a bare Preſident of an Aſſembly, as that extends but to numbring of Votes, declaring who is choſen, and giving a ſingle vote] the name being a name of rule, and dignity, and power, and not onely of Preſidency, but Prefecture, and all one with ἐπίσκοπος Biſhop (who had the rule of the whole Church, and not onely the principal place, or πρωτοκαθεδρία in the Council) as may appear (among many others) by three ancient Records.

Προεστὼς.

Sect. 131. Euſeb. Hiſt. lib. c. κγ'. Epiphan. Har. 72. The one of Dionyſius Biſhop of Corinth, in his Epiſtle to the Athenians, where having made mention of Publius, προεστῶτος αὐτῶν, the Prefect, or Preſident of them, he preſently mentions Quadratus μετὰ τὸν μαρτυρήσαντα Πόπλιον καταστάντος ἐπισκόπου αὐτῶν, that after the martyrdom of Publius was conſtituted their Biſhop. The other, of Marcellus Biſhop of Ancyra, in his Epiſtle to Julius Biſhop of Rome, where ſpeaking of himſelf, and other Biſhops of the Churches infeſted by the Hereticks, Σιμωνὰ, ſaith he, καὶ τῶν τῆς Θεοῦ Ἐκκλησιῶν, καὶ ἡμῶν τῶν προεστώτων αὐτῶν τετολμήκασι, they have attempted ſhrewd things againſt the Churches of God, and us the Preſidents, i. e. Biſhops of them. The third, of the Council of Epheſus, Act. 18. where οἱ τῶν ἁγίων ἐκκλησιῶν κατὰ τὴν Κύπρον προεστῶτες, the Preſidents of the Churches of Cyprus, are the ſame that in the beginning of the Canon are ἐπίσκοποι τῆς Κυπρίων ἐπαρχίας, the Biſhops of the Province of the Cypriots. And in a word, their very title of προεστῶτες τῶν ἐκκλησιῶν, Preſidents, or Prefects of Churches, and not of Synods or Councils, is a determination of this buſineſs, and concludes them to have had the rule of the Church, and not onely the firſt place, or Preſidency, or Prolocutorſhip in the Council; And therefore Præſidentes is oft the title of Biſhops in Tertullian, who yet is known to have aſſerted the Supreme authority and Power in the Churches to belong to them.

Sect. 132. Tit. 1. 5. I now proceed to the ſecond place, that to Titus, c. 1. 5. to examine what advantage he can draw from thence to his pretenſions. His words are theſe, Becauſe all the Churches had their Preſbyters ordained in the ſame manner, where the word is conſtitute (as Tit. 1. 5.) ἵνα καταστήσῃς κατὰ πόλιν πρεσβυτέρους, for this cauſe have I left thee in Crete, that thou ſhouldſt ordain Elders in every City, we are to underſtand the ſame thing, namely, that he ſhould call the faithfull together, and ordain them Preſbyters by plurality of ſuffrages. That in this place to Titus there is no ſyllable of mention either of aſſembling the faithfull, or of ſuffrages in the ordination of Elders, is apparent to any that ſhall reade the words, and the contrary contrary is not by this Gentleman pretended; Onely by way of analogy with that former place, where he seems to have concluded an intimation of suffrages by holding up of hands, he concludes it must be so here also, though it be not so much as intimated.

Sect. 133. Where first, it were sure more reasonable to interpret St. Luke's obscurer word by St. Paul's plainer (and from thence to conclude, that as Paul at Iconium, so Titus at Crete, was the person that ordained Elders, and not the whole Church) than to interpret St. Paul's plainer by the obscurer of St. Luke, and conclude as he concludes: But then secondly, it hath sufficiently been demonstrated, that no such advantage can be drawn from the word χειροτονῶν in that Text where it is used. And then sure it can have no influence on this other, where it is not used, but another of a more undoubted signification. The short is, χειροτονέω signifies indifferently to ordain, or design to any office (without looking back to the Gentile Customs from whence it was taken) and being sometimes used of God personally, Acts 10. 41. is no way limited to popular elections, unless when it is applyed to the Church, or assembly of many (as 2 Cor. 8. 19. it is) and therefore when the Text is clear, that (not the Church, but) Paul and Barnabas did ordain, what a complication of unreasonables will it be, First, from a bare possible Grammatical connotation of one word, to conclude the direct contrary to the whole verse, viz. that they did not ordain, who, saith St. Luke, did, but the Church by plurality of voices; and then secondly, from this one practice thus strangely concluded to interpret all other plain affirmations of Scripture to a sense quite contrary to the words, and infer that Titus did not ordain, when St. Paul saith expressly he did, but onely the assembly of Christians called together by him.

Sect. 134. But, saith he, it had been a strange thing, if in a Town where men perhaps had never seen any Magistrate otherwise chosen, than by an Assembly, those of the Town becoming Christians, should so much as have thought of any other way of election of their Teachers and Guides, i. e. of their Presbyters, otherwise called Bishops, than this of plurality of suffrages. I shall not need dispute whether every Town in Crete, as also Iconium, Lystra and Antioch, chose all their Magistrates by plurality of suffrages. 'Tis sure enough that in this matter there is no place for such arguings: For first, to his mention of a Town, &c. 'tis evident, that believers were at first but few in every Town or City (they were not whole Corporations at once converted (nor consequently could they act in such capacities) but, (as Clemens Romanus saith) they that were by the Apostles constituted Bishops and Deacons in several Cities and Regions, were constituted over those that should after believe, there were oft so few at the present. And then as fast as any did come in to the faith, they readily submitted themselves to those by and under whom they did come in, and were not at all troubled with the consultation or deliberation, about the way of electing their Teachers and Guides, i.e. their Bishops, as is here by this Gentleman supposed.

Sect. 135. Secondly, it must be remembred, that whersoever the Gospel was preached, it came originally from Jerusalem, and then, as Agrippa in Philo saith of that City, that it was, Μητρόπολις ὐ μιᾶς χώρας Ἰουδαίας, ἀλλὰ ϗ τῶν πλείστων, The Metropolis not onely of Judaea one region, but of many others, διὰ τὰς ἀποικίας ἃς ἔπεμψεν εἰς τὰς ὁμόρους Αἴγυπτον, Φοινίκην, Συρίας τὴν τε ἄλλην ϗ τὴν Κοίλην προσαρρεδομένας, &c. because of the Colonies which that sent out to Ægypt, Phenice, and both the Syria's, nay to Pamphilia, Cilicia, and a great part of Asia, as far as Bythinia and Pontus, &c. So in reason the Church in Lystra, and Iconium, and Antioch, where Paul and Barnabas ordained Elders, Act. 14. were to follow the patterns at Jerusalem. And there we know it was not by the suffrages of the people that an Elder was assumed into the Sanhedrin, but the Prince or head of the Sanhedrin received him in by imposition of hands, and so in the creation of Scribes and Doctors of the Law: And for the Church of Christians there, we have already shewed that James the Just, the first Bishop of that Church, was by the Apostles, not by the Assembly, advanced to that Prefecture. And agreeably in other Churches, it will be much more reasonable (if such considerations may prevail) to deduce the circumstances of ordaining Elders, from the customs familiar to them that preached the faith unto them, than from the former usages of them to whom it was preached, who were not to dispute, but to believe, and receive the Institutions, as well as doctrines which were brought them.

Sect. 136. But then thirdly, the matter is yet farther beyond all controversie; For sure the heathen (as formerly the Jewish) Cities, to whom the Gospel was to be preached by Christ's command, were not to chuse their guides, or Teachers, Christ was not chosen, by those to whom he preached (Ye have not chosen me, saith he) he came from heaven on that errand of his Father's, and happy they, whom he was thus pleased to chuse, to call, and preach to. And when his Apostles, after his example, go and preach to all Nations, and actually gather disciples, they chuse their Auditours, and not their Auditours them: And they that give up their names to the obedience of the Gospel, one branch of that obedience obliges them to those who are placed over them by God, not onely their civil Parents and Magistrates, but Pastours, whom the holy Ghost, either mediately, or immediately, hath set over them.

Sect. 137. And so sure there is no place of disputing left, whether they whom the holy Ghost made their overseers, Acts 20. 28. had the plurality of the suffrages of the people or no: For, besides that if it were so, never any Apostle or Pastour should be received by the faithfull in any City, till a major part of the City, by having received the faith, were made capable of receiving him, (which, we know, was not the way, when there was, in comparison, so little faith on the earth, to the far wider fields of infidelity) It will also follow, against those expres words of Scripture, that not the holy Ghost, but they have placed the ἐπισκόπους overseers over them. And then I should gladly be advertised of the reason, why, when St. Paul wrote so many Epistles to whole Churches, he never gave directions for the qualifying, and chusing, and ordaining of Church-officers in any of them, but reserved that seasonably for the buliness of those Epistles, which were directed to the single persons of Bishops, Timothy and Titus, and that with a ταῦτά σοι γράφω, these things I write to thee, 1 Tim. 3. 14. immedjately annexed to the discourse on that matter: It being perfectly vain to instruct him in the due qualifications of those that were admitted to those offices, to which he had no power to chuse or ordain any.

Sect. 138. Besides these, many other evidences there are premised in this discourse, which must not in any reason be here repeated, which render the conclusion of this Section most visibly void of all appearance of truth, that there never was any chusing of Bishops, (before the Emperours found it necessary to regulate gulate them, &c. i. e. at leaſt till Conſtantine's time) but by the aſſemblies of Chriſtians in every ſeveral Town.

Sect. 139. As for the continual practice even to this day, in the election of the Biſhops of Rome, by which he thinks his aſſertion confirm'd, It is directly and viſibly contrary: for at this day, 'tis known, that the Cardinals, that are preſent, do elect the Pope, and the Biſhops among them conſecrate or ordain him, and ſo whatſoever is meant by Election, whether choice of the perſon, or conveying the office to him, 'tis certain it is not done by the aſſembly of the Chriſtians, meaning, as before he expreſſes himſelf to do, the whole Congregation.

Sect. 140. And for the argument added to back this Teſtimony, That if the Biſhop of any place had the right of chuſing another to the Paſtoral office, in any City, at ſuch time as he went from thence, much more had he the right to appoint his ſucceſſour in that place in which he dyed. 'Tis not imaginable what this argument can conclude in favour of the diſputer, For firſt, if the Biſhop cannot chuſe his own ſucceſſour, either removing or dying, yet it follows not (but is far removed from all truth) that the Aſſembly chuſes him; If we ſpeak of Election ſtrictly taken. and differing from Ordination, the Principal of the Clergy, College of Cardinals at Rome, the Chapter of the Cathedral Church in other places, may and are known to doe it: And yet a notable teſtimony of that matter we have already mentioned out of Clemens Romanus, that the Apoſtles that conſtituted Biſhops in every City, did in their life-times make a catalogue of perſons, that ſhould ſucceed in every See.

Sect. 141. But if we ſpeak, as this Gentleman doth, more looſely, and make Election and Ordination all one, then the Metropolitan, as Titus in all Crete, and not any inferiour Biſhop in his own Church, or elſe the Council of Biſhops, and not any one Biſhop, or, as the ancient Canons require, three Biſhops at the leaſt; may and do ordain the ſucceſſour, and ſo, though not the removing or dying Biſhop, yet not the whole Church, or aſſembly of Chriſtians neither.

Sect. 142. That ordinarily the removing or dying Biſhop cannot ordain his own ſucceſſour, is true upon theſe other accounts, and not upon that one, which is pretended, Firſt, that the election of the Biſhop doth belong to other hands as is premiſed; Secondly, that one ſingle Biſhop is by the Canons made incompetent for the conſecration of a Biſhop, There are to be three at leaſt, See Can. Apoſt. 1. and 2. and Synod. Nicen. c. 4. And thirdly, that the Canons again command that no Biſhop ſhall be ordained ſine titulo, without a Church (to which he is elected) vacant to receive him; which therefore cannot be pretended, as long as the Biſhop lives. All which reaſons being of force againſt any man's ordaining his ſucceſſour, are far from hindring him from being one of the three Biſhops, that may ordain any to a vacant Church. And of that ſure this Gentleman is ſufficiently ſatisfied, that although the Biſhop cannot ordain his own ſucceſſour, yet he can with other Biſhops ordain another's ſucceſſour. And therefore it is apparent, that this was but an artifice to amuſe his Reader, himſelf acknowledging the concluſion, which he would ſeem to invalidate or confute by it.

Sect. 143. Having now diſpatched all that this Gentleman hath ſaid of the Ordination of Teachers, I am again permitted to retire, and conclude this Treatiſe.

The Sixth QUÆRE.

Of the obſervation of Chriſtmas-day, and other Feſtivals of the Church.

Sect. 1. IN diſcourſing of the annual celebration of the feaſt of Chriſt's Nativity, it will, to any that were not contentious, be thought ſufficient, to put him in mind of St. Paul's argument, the cuſtomary practice of the Church; And that in this particular Church of England it is of ſo ancient uſage, that we have no other beginning aſſigned to it, than the ſame which our ſtories give of the plantation of the Goſpel among us.

The practice of this Church.

Sect. 2. That it is thus ancient, is evidently ſuppoſed and implyed by one objection which ſome men have to the obſervation of it, the retaining of ſome heathen uſages in it, of which ſort, if there be any continued by the ruder multitude, as they are no part of the office of that feaſt, and conſequently not imputable to the doctrine of our Church in this matter, ſo are they as undeniable teſtimonies of the Antiquity, and uninterrupted continuance of this practice, even from the time of our firſt converſion from heatheniſm. For otherwiſe in caſe of a latter date or diſcontinuance, it is not imaginable how any heathen uſage ſhould be found to have been (and ſtill to remain) adherent to it.

Sect. 3. Of the plantation of Chriſtianity among us of this Iſland, it is acknowledged that there was a double date, the one appertaining to the Saxons or Engliſh, the other to the far more ancient Britains.

The plantation of Chriſtianity here.

For that of the Britains, it was, if Hiſtory and Monuments may be believed, either Apoſtolical, or very near the Apoſtles times. And this will appear leſs improbable, if we take notice of what is ſaid by St. Paul, 2 Tim. 4. 10. that Creſcens was gone (ſent by St. Paul) into Galatia, Titus to Dalmatia: Where Galatia being an equivocal word, and belonging to Gallia or France, (1 Mac. 8. 2. where it is joyned with Spain; and ſo in Joſephus, Ant. l. 12. c. 17. where the Romans are ſaid to have ſubdued Γαλατίαν and Ἰβηρίαν, France and Spain) as well as to a part of Aſia, anciently inhabited by the Gauls, Epiphanius affirms diſtinctly (in the Hereſie of the Ἀλογοι) that Gallia or France was the place there ſpoken of: And ſo the French have it by ancient Tradition, and ſo the nearneſs of France to Italy and Rome, where St. Paul was at the writing of that Epiſtle, makes it moſt probable, eſpecially when it is conſidered that Dalmatia, which is there named with it, is ſituate over againſt Italy And then what is ſo early affirmed in Scripture of the communicating the Goſpel to France, which is ſo near to us, removes all improbability from thoſe Hiſtories, which record the plantation of the Goſpel in theſe Iſlands in the Apoſtles times, which I the rather obſerve, becauſe Joſeph of Arimathea, who is reſolved solved by Mr. Camden out of Ecclesiastick Writers (who, saith he, had it ex antiquæ fidei authoribus, out of as ancient and credible authours, as we have any) to have planted Christianity here, is said by them to have come hither ex Gallia, out of France. That this was in Tiberius's reign, is the affirmation of Gildas; And as it is clear by Tertullian, that the British Islands were long before his time converted to Christianity; and by Origen on Ezek. Hom. 4. Britanniam in unius Dei consentire religionem, that Britany had received the Religion of the one God, i. e. Christianity; so it is in our stories affirmed, and by the Records of other Nations acknowledged, that Lucius the King of Britain (about the year of Christ 180.) was the first king of the whole world which received the Christian faith; and by the Epistle of Eleutherius Bishop of Rome to him (if that be authentick) it doth not onely appear that he was acknowledged by him to be Vicarius Dei in regno suo, the Vicar of God in his own Kingdom, i. e. far from any subordination, or subjection to him, that wrote it, but that before that writing of his, and not from that present Bishop of Rome, the Kingdom of Britain had (as the words of the Epistle are) [a] received by God's mercy the law and faith of Christ, the New and Old Testament, out of which he advises him by the advice of his Realm to take a Law, and by the same to rule.

Sect. 4. Among the Britains.

[a] Suscepistis enim nuper miseratione divinâ in regno Britanniæ legem & fidem Christi, habetis penes vos in regno utramque paginam, ex illis per consilium regni vestri sume legem, & per illam Dei potentiâ vestrum rege Britanniæ regnum.

Sect. 5. And although by Diocletian's persecution the Christian faith and discipline is said to have been sorely shaken here, yet it was not so far extinguished, but that within ten years after three of our Bishops, Eborius of York, Restitutus of London, and Adelphus Colonia Londinensium, were present and subscribed to the Council of Arles, eleven years before the first Council of Nice: See Concil. Gallic. per Sirmund. tom. 1. p. 9. and Sir Henry Spelman in his Anglican Councils, p. 23.

Sect. 6. This is sufficiently acknowledged, but yet may receive some light from one observation, The celebration of Easter by the ancient British and Scotish Christians, was contrary to the custome of the Western Church, saith Bede; That this practice of theirs was taken up by themselves upon any novel fancy, may not be imagined, nor indeed is it so charged upon them. 'Tis certainly derived to them by their Antecessours, who in all probability took it from the first planters of Christianity among them: And then those must be some such as in the very Apostolical times kept their Easter (as in the East the first Christians did) after the Jewish manner. And so though this be an evidence that neither Peter, nor Paul, nor Crescens, nor any of those that usually accompanied either of those two Apostles, the founders of the Church of Rome, did bring the Christian faith to this Island, but rather Joseph of Arimathea, or Simon Zelotes, as others affirm, yet in respect of the antiquity of the Plantation, there was some colour for the affirmation of [b] Simeon Metaphrastes, that St. Peter ἐπεμείνας ἐν Βρεττανία ἡμέρας τινὰς, καὶ πολλοὺς τῷ λόγῳ φωτίσας τῆς χάριτος, ἐκκλησίαν τε συστησάμενος, ἐπισκόπους τε καὶ πρεσβυτέρους καὶ διακόνους χειροτονήσας, ἐκ Βρεττανίας ἦλθε πρὸς Νέρωνα, stayed in Britain some time, converted many, and constituted Churches, and ordained Bishops in the 12th. year of Nero's reign. And he cites it out of Eusebius, that he spent 23. years in Rome and Britain, and the Western Cities. But the authority of that Writer is not great.

[b] de Pet. & Paul. ad diem 29 Junii.

Sect. 7. And (as for the feast of Easter, of which there can be no question, so) for the observation of this feast of the Nativity among those first British Christians (though our Records of those times are but very thin and dark, yet) one evidence we have of moment in this matter, referred to in a [c] former discourse, but now fit to be set down more fully. Christmas-day is frequently called in our old Monuments, Mydpinter-dæg, Midwinter-day, and Mydpintnæt mæsse Midwinter-masse: From whence, I suppose, it may reasonably be concluded, that when that name was first applyed to that day, the day whereon Christmas fell, was in the Calendar either coincident with, or not far removed from the Winter Solstice. Now supposing with the Western Church, that our Saviour was born on the 25. of December (as shall anon be farther proved, and doth in some measure appear, by remembring, that the day which from those times we still continue to call Midsummer-day, is on the 24. of June, and so directly half a year from the 25. of December) it will follow by calculation (with which I shall not trouble and tire the Reader) that it must be soon after our Saviour's time, that this day was capable of that appellation, and consequently that the day was here celebrated so early. Now (we know) by reason of the procession of the Æquinoxes and Solstices, the Solstitial or Midwinter-day, when the Sun enters Capricorn, is a fortnight distant from our Christmas-day, and so the Summer Solstice is proportionably distant from Midsummer-day, as we still call it. And therefore the beginning of the celebration of this day in this Nation, must be fastned at, or near that time when this 25. of December fell on the Winter Solstice, i. e. a fortnight sooner than the Julian Calendar hath placed it, which being considered, will argue the celebration very ancient, and bordering upon Christ's time. And partly upon this account it was that Pope Gregory the XIII. undertook the reformation of the Calendar, to reduce the Æquinoxes (upon which the celebration of Easter depends) and so consequently the Solstices, to the seats they obtained at the time of the Nicene Council, But he went no higher; If he had, this might have been more evident.

[c] Prael. Cat. p. 87. Midwinter-day.

Sect. 8. The British Church independent from Rome. This being thus far clear, will set these farther characters upon this, or any other Christian solemnity, Easter, Pentecost, &c. which is of original or immemorial usage in this Nation; First, that the antiquity of it doth no way argue that it hath any thing of the corruptions of the Roman See adhering to it, but evidently the contrary: For it is manifest by the stories that Augustine the Monk was very far from being the first planter of Christianity in this Nation, that he found British Bishops here at his coming, from whose Predecessours and founders, and not from his Ordo Romanus, this Church of ours is obliged, with acknowledgment to God, to date its Christianity. To this purpose we may see the [d] answer of the Abbat of Bangor to Austine the Monk, requiring his subjection to the Romish Church, Bid yspie a diogel, &c. i. e. Notum sit, & absque dubitatione vobis, quòd nos omnes sumus, & quilibet nostrum, obedientes & subditi Ecclesiæ Dei & Papæ Romæ, & unicuique vero & pio Christiano, ad amandum unumquemque in suo gradu, in perfecta charitate, & ad juvandum unumquemque eorum in verbo & facto, fore filios Dei. Et aliam obedientiam quàm istam non scio debitam ei quem vos nominatis esse Papam, nec esse Patrem Patrum vendicari & postulari. Et istam obedientiam nos sumus parati dare & solvere ei & cuique Christiano continuò. Præterea nos sumus sub gubernatione Episcopi

[d] Concil. Anglic. p. 188.

Epiſcopi Caerlegionis ſuper Oſca, qui eſt ad ſupervidendum ſub Deo ſuper nobis, ad faciendum nos ſervare viam ſpiritualem. Be it known to you and without doubt, that we are, and every one of us obedient and ſubject to the Church of God and Pope of Rome, and to every true and pious Chriſtian, to love every one in his degree with perfect charity, and to help every one of them by word and deed to be the ſons of God. As for any other obedience, I do not know that I owe it to him, whom ye call the Pope, or that he hath right to challenge or require to be the Father of fathers. This obedience we are ready to give and pay to him, and to every Chriſtian continually. Beſides we are placed under the government of the Biſhop of Caerlyon upon Osks, who is to ſuperviſe under God over us, to make us keep the ſpiritual way. So again, Sir. Henry Spelman, Concil. Anglic. p. 26. out of the Annals of Giſburn, cites thus, Ab urbe Legionum Meneviam tranſlata eſt ſedes Metropolitana, tempore Sancti David Epiſcopi per Regem Arthurum, ubi ſteterunt 13 Archiepiſcopi, uſque Samſonem ——— à quo uſque tempus Henrici primi ſederunt Meneviæ undecim Epiſcopi, & uſque ad hoc tempus Epiſcopi Menevîæ à ſuis ſuffraganeis Wallenſibus ibidem fuerunt conſecrati, nullâ penitus profeſſione vel ſubjectione factâ alteri Eccleſiæ. From Caerlyon the Metropolitan Seat was tranſlated to Saint Davids by King Arthur, in the time when Saint David was Biſhop there, where there ſtood thirteen Archbiſhops untill Samſon; from whence to the time of King Henry the firſt, there ſate at Saint Davids eleven Biſhops, and untill this time the Biſhops of Saint Davids were there conſecrated by their own Welſh Suffragani, without making any profeſſion of ſubjection to any other Church. To this I might add that of Boniface the Martyr, ſtyled the Apoſtle of Germany, who in a matter of doubt conſulted not onely the Biſhops of Rome, but Nothelme alſo Primate of England, and by the Reſcript of Nothelme reforms the Popes, ſaith [e] Baronius: And that of Lanfrank Archbiſhop of Canterbury under William the Conquerour, who being often cited by Gregory VII. to Rome, would not be wrought on either by his threats or blandiſhments to obey him. But theſe are not ſo pertinent to our preſent matter.

Sect. 9. Secondly, that any ſuch ancient uſage of this particular Church, if it had no other ground to ſtand on (as its foundation) or concurrence of all other Chriſtian Churches (as pillars) to ſuſtain it, were a very competent Authority for the preſent continuance of ſuch a practice in this Kingdom. This Anglicane, or rather ancient Britiſh Church, being one of thoſe, which by its foundation, and by force of the known Canon in the Council of Epheſus, in the caſe of the Cypriots, is ἀυτοκέφαλος, ſubject to no foreign Patriarch, and conſequently inveſted with unqueſtionable power to inſtitute ceremonies for it ſelf (as it ſhall judge moſt uſefull, moſt for edification, and moſt agreeable to the analogy of faith) which conſequently may not, without great temerity, be changed and aboliſhed by any. And therefore to every one, which is ſtill willing to continue a member of this perſecuted Church, wherein he was baptized, and yet hath been willing to comply either with the humour of theſe late times (in that which he counts no ſubſtantial part of his Religion) or with ſome Proteſtant Churches elſewhere in diſuſing theſe obſervances, I ſhall, before I conclude this part of my deſigned method, tender the conſideration of theſe few things.

Sect. 10. The diſ-uſing of theſe feaſts blameable. Firſt, that it is ſufficiently clear, that this obſervation is an undoubted part of that eſtabliſhment which the Reformation of this Kingdom (which alone of all others hath had the honour and reputation of being regular and diſcreet, in oppoſition to popular and tumultuous, and to be thought worthy to give, and not receive rules from other platforms) hath enacted for us. And that appears by Act of Parliament (as well as Church-Canon) which gave authority to the Liturgy.

Sect. 11. Secondly, that in other Reformed, eſpecially the Lutheran Churches, this and other feaſts of Chriſt are retained in their Eſtabliſhments, and in ſome few places, where the Reformation proceeding leſs regularly, hath in the tumultuary haſte left out, or ſwept it away, It is yet either by the Confeſſions of thoſe Churches, or by ſober members of them, approved and wiſhed for: Of this the words of the Helvetian Confeſſion, and not onely Bucer's approbation of it in our Liturgy, and the like of many others in thoſe times, but alſo the expreſs words of the famous du Pleſſis of France, complaining that they had not retained the obſervation of it in the French Reformation; and ſince him, the practice of ſome others, who in their weekly preachings have conſtantly given Chriſtmas-day the ſolemnity of a Sermon (wherein the whole body of their publick devotions now adays conſiſts) are ſufficient teſtimonies. And much more might be added in that matter.

Sect. 12. Thirdly, that the raſing this Feſtivity out of the Calendar of the Church, or the encouraging thoſe that do ſo, in laying down or diſuſing the obſervation of it, is an act of Diviſion and Separation (in the former, and compliance with Diviſion and Separation in the latter) from the particular Church of England, and from the univerſal Church of Chriſt in all ages, eſpecially that of the firſt, and the pureſt times.

Sect. 13. Fourthly, that the preſent complexion of theſe times doth no way invite the laying aſide this Uſage, or render it excuſable in them which have diſuſed it; It being for the ignoranter ſort a little too viſible, that the omiſſion of the Chriſtmas Sermons and Services, doth tend to raſe out of their minds that ſlender knowledge, which they have gathered of the birth of Chriſt, and the conſequent myſteries of our Religion, and, by gratifying their worldly affections, doth much aſſiſt Atheiſm or blindneſs, in the hope and attempt of ſupplanting all Chriſtian knowledge among many. And it being with great reaſon affirmed by the Caſuiſts, that the neceſſaries of belief, for the moſt vulgar ſort, are no more than the great Holidays of the year, (the ſervices of which keep the ignorance of them from being excuſable in any) This ejecting all thoſe Holidays out of the Chriſtian Church (being as it is, ſuperadded to the diſuſing of the Creeds and Catechiſm) will probably, if God pleaſe not to avert, ſoon diſpatch all opinion of any neceſſity of believing any of thoſe Articles, and in time, where the Miniſter's care of ſetting apart other days for the preaching of thoſe truths, doth not help to ſupply the defect in ſome degree, (for by long diſcourſes wholly to ſupply it, it is not to be hoped) it will be the ſupplanting of the foundation it ſelf, and ſo at laſt the intercepting of all (the moſt ſuperficial) knowledge of the firſt elements of our Chriſtianity.

Sect. 14. As for thoſe of deeper knowledge, who leſs ſeem to want ſuch helps, yet is their general impatience of ſound doctrine, their readineſs to embrace whatever is novel, and contrary to the ancient Faith and Principles, Principles, become now ſo groſly apparent, and the practice of Chriſtian Precepts, eſpecially of hoſpitality and charity, ſo ſcandalouſly out-dated, that it is but needfull to take the gardiner's courſe, and dig to the roots of Chriſtianity, to lay it open and bare, if ever we expect it ſhall recover from barrenneſs, and flouriſh in more verdure, than of late it hath done.

Sect. 15. Laſtly (to lay aſide all that may be diſputable, or poſſible not to be aſſented to by any) I deſire it may be conſidered ſadly, Whether the abolition of that ſolemnity, which hath no other deſign, but to teach us what we have received from God in Chriſt, and to aſſiſt us to render God a pious publick acknowledgment of it at ſome ſet time (which without ſuch proviſion is ſure to be neglected by many) be the fitteſt diſcharge of our charity to the ſouls of ignorant ſeducible men, or whether they can truly receive comfort from having yielded an aſſiſtence, or complyance to the removing it out of this Church.

Sect. 16. If to all this be oppoſed the fear and danger of a threefold guilt in the continuing of this obſervance, the firſt of Will-worſhip, becauſe this is not commanded in Scripture; the ſecond, of Superſtition in obſerving days; the third, of Riot and Exceſs, which is frequently obſervable in ſuch Feſtivals, Then as to the two former of theſe, I have given a large anſwer in [f] another place, ſo to the third I ſhall now enlarge what was there but briefly touched, conceiving it a matter of great importance, that ſo pious a cuſtome ſhould be clearly vindicated from ſo impious an appendage, and that this diſcourſe, which is ſincerely deſigned to the advantage and welfare of all, ſhould not be to any an occaſion of falling.

[f] Treat of Will-worſhip and of Superſtition, and Pract. Cat. l. 2. ſect. 12.

Sect. 17. The riot of which theſe Feſtivals are accuſed.

And firſt, I freely acknowledge, that all riot and exceſs is a ſin, and that far greater and more puniſhable in a Chriſtian, than in any man elſe, particularly than in the Jew, whoſe promiſes, of an earthly plenty are not ſo contrary and irreconcileable with corporal exceſs, as are the ſpiritual joys that are the Chriſtians eminent (if not oneIy) portion under promiſe, both in this and in another life.

Sect. 18. The charge anſwered.

But then ſecondly, Feſtivity and Hoſpitality is very ſeparable from riot, or luxury, in a Chriſtian Commonwealth; The heathen feaſts and ſacrifices had little elſe in them, gluttony and drunkenneſs being the preſcribed worſhip, and way of approving themſelves to (and of pleaſing or ſerving) ſome of their Idol-gods, and uncleanneſs being the deſign of others, if not openly in their Temples, yet more cloſely in their receſſes and myſteries, their τελεται and ἐποπτειαι, and ſo both ſorts recommended to them under an opinion of Piety and Religion. But the Chriſtian Feſtival being wholly made up of ſpiritual dainties, in receiving Chriſtian inſtruction, offering Prayers and Thanksgivings and Alms, and not feeding corporally, ſave in the Sacrament onely, (where I hope no exceſs hath ever been obſervable in this Nation) is thus far free from having any degree of luxury, intrinſecal to it, or inſeparable from it.

Sect. 19. As for the cuſtomary hoſpitality or good cheer of thoſe ſeaſons (beſides that at other times there hath been, by thoſe who have laid down this cuſtome, as great liberty uſed in feaſting, ſince their departure from the Church, as ever they uſed before in time of Chriſtmas, which argues the good cheer not to be the thing diſliked, but the Chriſtian occaſion or ſeaſon of it) Firſt it muſt be acknowledged that that is not any other than a decent attendant on that, as on any, Feſtivity, (not of the eſſence or ſubſtance of it) And then what reaſon can be aſſigned why it ſhould not be lawfull thus outwardly to expreſs Chriſtian joy by ſome change of Cloaths or Diet, from that which is ordinary at other times, to that which is as ordinary at feſtivities? Γεωργὸς τὸν σκαπάνην καὶ τὸ ἄροτρον ῥίψας εἰς τὸ τὰς ἑορτάζοντα χλαῖνα ἐκαλλωπίσατο, ſaith Greg. Nyſſen of Eaſter, The ploughman dreſſes himſelf in a feſtival guiſe, and, ὁ πένης ὡς πλούσιος, The poor man putteth himſelf in the rich man's attire, and the rich man σωφρόνως περιαιρεῖται καὶ λύει τὰς ἐντυγὰς, ſets himſelf out in luſtre above ordinary. And St. Heirome ſaith of thoſe that mourned for their friends, that at Eaſter they laid aſide their mourning garments, and put on their moſt rich apparel. And ſecondly, why ſhould it not be moſt lawfull to bleſs, and praiſe, and give thanks to God (after the manner of all men, Jews and Gentiles, who always had feaſts annexed to their Sacrifices) and to expreſs and demonſtrate that, in the enjoyment, and by the acknowledgment of his temporal goodneſs, ſo it be done with that one great neceſſary caution, and reſervation of ſobriety and thanksgiving, and this more at ſuch a time of commemorating ſome ſpecial mercy received from God, than at another, and eſpecially to take care that the ſeaſon of acknowledging an eminent mercy of God, be alſo a remembrancer of the exerciſe of that eminent Chriſtian duty of Hoſpitality, and Charity to the poor, and again of a chearfull liberal reception of friends and neighbours, to nouriſh or breed Chriſtian acquaintances and correſpondences, and add to the comfort of life by the ſociety, and quiet converſe of thoſe others our equals, which ſtand in need of our examples of Piety and Chriſtian commerce, though they want not the ſupplies of our bread? And accordingly the Fathers ſpeak of a rejoycing, which they call χοϊκὴ and κοσμικὴ, earthy and worldy, as well as of another, which they call θεϊκὴ and πνευματικὴ, ſpiritual and divine, and think that one is very reconcileable with the other.

Sect. 20. But then thirdly, if ſuch plenty be not by experience found (among the generality of the Kingdom) to be uſed and enjoyed without ſin (though as long as there is fleſh in the world, unreformed by Chriſtianity, this need not be looked on as any ſtrange thing, or the cure of it undertaken by that new Empirical way of applying the remedy to the weapon, not to the Patient, yet) rather than the faults of this attendant and acceſſory ſhould be charged to the deſtroying of the Principal, and rather than the external part ſhould have the fate to devour the inward and more excellent, and when it ſhall appear really that the exceſſes and vices of men, occaſioned merely by the Chriſtmas-cheer and ſports, are more conſiderable to the debauching and ruining of ſouls, than the forementioned uſes are beneficial to the improving of them, I ſhall then profeſs to beſieve, that there is place and ſeaſon for Reformation in this particular, this acceſſory, this external part, that attends on this Chriſtian feſtivity; and that it is more than time, that the greateſt ſeverities be uſed to that end, that the exceſſes of men being ſo impudently irrational, as to aſſault and pollute that which is moſt ſacred, be alſo cured by irrational applications, by impoſed, and forced abſtinences, that they be diſcouraged and branded by this Character, that the beaſts Phyſick was found neceſſary to this beſtial diſeaſe, the vertue of temperance thought fit to be taught them by a preſcribed impoſſibility of intemperance.

Sect. 21. But then ſtill this penance which is due to the guilty, is not due (but impertinent) to the innocent, belongs onely to the wicked, as Abraham told God, and not to the righteous, to the carnal, not the ſpiritual, to the eating, not to the praying and praiſing part of the feſtivity (As in the ancient Church when on days of feſtivities men began to adorn themſelves ſumptuouſly to ſhew their pride, not to honour the day, and fared deliciouſly to ſurfeiting and drunkenneſs, the Fathers did not thereupon forbid what before they allowed, but ſought to reduce them from that pride and luxury, οὐ κωλύω τὴν ἑορτὴν, ἀλλὰ κολάζω τὴν ἀμετρίαν, I do not forbid the feſtivity, but reprehend the immoderation, ſaith Greg. Nazianzen) And ſo if it muſt come under the diſcipline, it will not be neceſſary, I hope, that the diſcipline be more ſevere, than the utmoſt of the Primitive ſharpeſt Cenſures were, that if it muſt be delivered up to Satan, it be no farther than for the deſtruction of the fleſh, of the riotous, outward part of it, ſo as may be reconcileable with the ſaving of the ſpirit, that hath deſerved no wrath, the preſerving of the inward more ſpiritual part (the ſoul as it were) of the feſtivity.

Sect. 22. Mean-while it is clear, that the Church-part of the feſtivity is not ſuppoſed guilty in this kind, and therefore can in no juſtice be found liable to the intemperance of the Parlour, whatſoever that be ſuppoſed to be: And for the other, the eating and ſporting part, againſt which all the charge muſt be laid, that need not be aboliſhed neither, ſave onely in caſe of great and general abuſes. And that caſe will not be pleadable, till firſt, upon endeavour to reform, it appears, that there is no place of remedy for the abuſes, no imaginable means of reſcuing a laudable cuſtome from an impious appendage (and then truly I know not to what purpoſe are Laws, and deſigns of Reformation; if the Mattock muſt doe all the work, the Pruning-hook is become unuſefull) and, Secondly, till the abuſes are not onely ſo great, as diſcernibly to out-balance the good uſes, but alſo ſo general, that (as in the buſineſs of the brazen Serpent) the whole Church in a manner runs madding into theſe very great abuſes.

Sect. 23. Whereas indeed the utmoſt that can, without great want of charity, be pretended by any in this matter of Chriſtmas, is onely this, that they which are looſely or laſciviouſly diſpoſed, do turn this feaſting into luxury and exceſs; and ſo, I believe, the ſame men will be obſerved to do the Lord's-day alſo, when yet they have not the temptations of a feaſt, but onely the advantages of a reſt to recommend it to (or excuſe it in) them; while thoſe that are not ſo ill, and yet none of the beſt, make it but a time of refreſhment from their ordinary labour and travel in their Callings: But on the other ſide, thoſe that are Chriſtianly diſpoſed make uſe even of the moſt external, groſſer part of it to ſpecial ſpiritual advantages, to the glory of God, and comfort of their ſouls, Chriſtian converſation, pious diſcourſe, commerce of ſouls, charity, hoſpitality, and the like.

Sect. 24. But then laſtly I add, after all this complaint of great and general abuſes, revellings, &c. that if we look no farther than this Kingdom of ours, wherein they are thus ſeverely viſited, the charge appears to be moſt unjuſt. For the day of the birth of Chriſt, Chriſtmas-day it ſelf, hath never, that I heard of, been obſerved among us to be guilty of theſe, but on the contrary hath been kept (if not much more) certainly as ſtrictly, as any Lord's day in the year, in frequenting the ſervices of the Church, in the uſe of the Liturgy, Sermon, Sacrament of the Lord's Supper, in keeping at home every man and woman in their own Family, and not touching either Cards or Dice that day. The exceſſes which have been obſerved, have been on the days after the Nativity; and yet I ſuppoſe every Chriſtian houſe-keeper may with ordinary diligence ſo regulate his hoſpitality and the ſports which he permits in his family, at thoſe times alſo, that they may tend to no worſe end, than the encreaſe of Chriſtian charity, and kindneſs among neighbours all the year after.

Sect. 25. And ſo ſtill this (and that really the moſt conſiderable) prejudice, taken from the riots occaſioned by this feſtivity, is proved of ſmall validity againſt any (even the groſſer) part of it, and of none at all againſt the feſtivity it ſelf; But yet may reaſonably be made uſe of, as an enforcement of

Dom. 1. adv. that Exhortation of St. Auguſtine, Quotieſcunque natalem Domini, &c. celebrare diſponitis, ebrietatem ante omnia fugite, Whenſoever ye prepare to celebrate the day of Chriſt's birth, beyond all things avoid drunkenneſs. And this is the duty of the Miniſters to the people, and of all ſorts of Governours to the whole Nation, to exhort and perſuade all men that they would not permit the abolition of this Feſtival to remain an inſtance of their beſtiality to poſterity, that they would pay that as a tribute to piety, which ſeverity of Laws may otherwiſe rend from them, and rather chuſe to adorn a Chriſtian feaſt with a Chriſtian temperance, (which then is moſt ſuch, when there are advantages and temptations to the contrary) than impiouſly to defame a pious uſage, and bring vengeance upon it, by an impertinent Beſtial inordinacy.

Sect. 26. To which purpoſe is that of Greg. Nazianzen, Or. in Pent. Ἑορτάζει Ἰουδαῖος, ἀλλὰ κατὰ γράμμα, ἑορτάζει Ἕλλην, ἀλλὰ κατὰ σῶμα, καὶ τοὺς ἑαυτῶν θεούς τε καὶ δαίμονας, ἑορτάζομεν καὶ ἡμεῖς, ἀλλ' ὡς δοκεῖ τῷ πνεύματι, The Jew feaſteth, but according to the letter; the Greek feaſts, but according to the body, celebrating his own Gods and Damons; we alſo feaſt, but ſo as it ſeems good to the Spirit. And of Theodoret, Ἀντὶ τῆς πάλαι πομπείας καὶ αἰσχρουργίας, καὶ αἰσχρορρημοσύνης, σώφρονες ἑορτάζουσι, πανηγύρεις δὲ μείζονα ἔχουσι, καὶ κῶμον, καὶ γέλωτα, ἀλλὰ ὕμνοι θεῖοι, καὶ ἱερῶν λογίων ἀκρόασιν καὶ σωφρονικὴν ἐξιστᾶσιν κοσμιάζουσαν δάκρυσι, Therapeut. 9. Inſtead of the old pomps, and unclean practices and diſcourſes, the Chriſtians keep ſober feaſts, without gluttony, drunkenneſs, laughter, but in ſtead thereof have divine hymns, the hearing of the holy Oracles, and Prayer adorned with tears fit for ſo holy ſolemnities. And if this importunity may prove ſucceſsfull, this exception will then be throughly anſwered, if it be not already, and be as far from true, as it is now from argumentative.

Sect. 27. Having thus far enlarged on this firſt Conſideration, addreſſed peculiarly as to a member of the Church of England, not yet broken off from that body, wherein he received his baptiſm, It will not be now unſeaſonable to conſider him as a ſon of the Univerſal Chriſtian Church of the whole world, and for his ſatisfaction, as he is ſuch, to ſhew him in brief, what Authority it is by which the Feſtivals in general, and particularly this of the Nativity of Chriſt, pretend to ſtand, in the Catholick Church. And I ſhall do it by theſe ſteps and degrees.

Sect. 28. Feſtivals not inſtituted by Chriſt. Firſt, by acknowledging that it is not pretended to have its beginning from any Inſtitution of Chriſt's, whilſt he here continued upon the earth, but either from the Apoſtles, or the ſucceeding Church; It being very reaſonable, that thoſe which acknowledged the receipt of ſo wonderfull a mercy from God as was the gift of his Son, and whose hearts were ravished with a sense of the advantages and benefits of it, should desire to celebrate the remembrance of it, and offer it up a voluntary oblation to Christ, and that their Piety should not restrain it self within those narrower bounds of doing nothing in the service, and to the honour of Christ, but what was distinctly prescribed, and particularly instituted by him.

God

Sect. 29. The Εγκαινια.

Thus among the Jews the feast of the Dedication of the Altar, not that of the building of the Temple by Solomon, which was celebrated in the month Tisri, nor that other of repairing of it by Zorobabel, which was kept in the month Adar, but a third, in memory of the purging of it by Judas Maccabæus, observed in Casleu, and so not mentioned in the Canon of the Old Testament, or instituted by God himself, but by the Jews, 1. Mac. 4. 59. was yet observed, and the observation of it approved and confirmed by Christ's presence at that feast, Joh. 10. 23.

Sect. 30. Marriage feasts.

To these I might add the festivities at Marriage, never instituted by God, as far as we can discern, in the Old Testament, and yet observed by the Jews, Judg. 14. 10, 11. by the space of seven days, and before them by Bethuel in Mesopotamia, Gen. 24. for the space of ten days (as seems to be the importance of v. 55.) and by Laban in Padan Aram, for the space of seven, Gen. 29. 22. (in like manner as among the Grecians, νενόμισται ἄγειν συμπόσια περὶ τὸς γάμους, 'twas law or custome to have feasts at marriages saith Athenæus Deipn. l. 4. and Plutarch gives the reasons of it, Sympos. 4. qu. 4.) And yet these are so far from being disliked by Christ, that they are honourably mentioned by him in his parables, and vouchsafed his presence and first miracle, Joh. 2.

Sect. 31. The Lord's-day.

But it is more pertinent to our present purpose that it be remembred, that the weekly feast of the Resurrection of Christ was not instituted by Christ or God himself, but by the Apostles of Christ, and that the mentions of the first day of the week, which we have in the New Testament, are no prescriptions or law for the observing of it, but that, if any thing of that nature be there sought for, it will rather appear to belong to the Annual than weekly feasts. So 1 Cor. 5. 8. Ἑορτάζωμεν, Let us keep the Paschal festivity, is annexed immediately to Christ our Passover, his having been slain (and now risen again) for us, and to that also the κυριακὴ or Lord's day, once mentioned, Rev. 1. 10. is thought to belong; And indeed of the institution of that yearly feast by the Apostles, the evidences are clear in the ancient Church, the differences between the Eastern and Western, concerning the time of keeping it, pretending to two Apostles on one side, who kept it according to the Jews account, to other Apostles on the other side, who went by another rule.

Easter-day,

Sect. 32. Christian Festivals.

Secondly, then for festival days in general now under the New Testament, if for not being instituted in Scripture, they be deemed universally unlawfull, the Account will be clear, First, that Aerius, the first that affirmed that, was for so doing censured, and for that and other things turned out of the Church for an Heretick (Epiphanius Hær. 75.) Secondly, that the unreasonableness of that pretension will be judged of by this one evidence, of the festivities of the Martyrs, the days of whose deaths were remembred by the Church, under the title of γενέθλια Natalitia, or birth-days, and St. Stephen's day (who being the Captain of them, that day comprized all other of that rank) placed next in the Calendar to the Nativity of Christ, and celebrated as chearfully as Pharaoh's birth-day in the Old Testament, as Herod's in the New, and the Emperours in humane Authours.

The Martyrs. γενέθλια.

Sect. 33. The Testimony of the Church of Smyrna for Festivals.

Of these we have an early Record of Primitive Antiquity, in the Martyrdom of Ignatius, written by them which were present at it, who setting down the day and time of it, say they do it, ut secundum tempus Martyrii congregati, communicemus athletæ —— that assembling together at the anniversary of his Martyrdom, we may communicate with this Champion, commemorate his sufferings, and bless God for him, &c. So also in the letter of the Church of Smyrna, on occasion of Polycarp's Matyrdom, where having set down the story of it, his ἄθλησις and τελείωσις, combat and consummation, they conclude with their hope and wish, ἡμᾶς συναγομένους ἐν ἀγαλλιάσει καὶ χαρᾷ παρέξει ὁ Κύριος ἐπιτελεῖν τὴν τοῦ μαρτυρίου αὐτοῦ ἡμέραν γενέθλιον, that God will now permit them to meet together, with exultation and joy to celebrate the birth day of his Martyrdom. And that this is no intrenchment or diminution to the worship and adoration due unto Christ, they shew their opinion there; for having said before, that they worship none but Christ onely, they add, ἀξίως ἀγαπῶμεν μαθητὰς καὶ μιμητὰς Κυρίου καὶ μιμηταὶ, Let us bestow that love upon the Martyrs, which is due to them, as the disciples, and imitators of the Lord. This Testimony being so near the Apostles times, sets a sacred character on those Commemorations (summed up by the Church into that one of the first fruits, St. Stephen, in whom the whole heap of the following harvest, this Polycarp, and all others are included) as such as were in use before the writing of that Letter, and then there will be no reason to doubt, or need to produce more Testimonies to avouch, that, as Polycarp's day of Martyrdom, was celebrated by that Church of which he was Bishop, so the days of the death or Martyrdom of the Apostles themselves, the Universal Bishops of the whole Church, were formerly solemnized by them, and that thus early, so as that Church of Smyrna might transcribe that custome from them, it being not imaginable that Polycarp should have a solemnity assigned him, and the Apostles of Christ, whose copy he but transcribed, be denied that honour.

Sect. 34. The assemblies at the monuments of Martyrs.

Agreeably to this, is that known practice of the first antiquity to assemble at the Monuments of Martyrs, before Churches were built, and from such meetings most of the ancient Churches in the world had their beginnings. And (not to enlarge on so known a Theme) 'tis not onely the affirmation of Gregory Nyssen in the life of Thaumaturgus, that he brought up all his Converts to celebrate the birth-days of the Martyrs, and of St. Cyprian, that he used to celebrate their Passions with an anniversary Commemoration, but Tertullian, one of the best Repositories of the practices of the Primitive Church, saith that Christians were wont to celebrate yearly the days of the Martyrs birth, i. e. their sufferings, ex majorum traditione, received it from the tradition of their Ancestours, de Cor. Mil. c. 3. All which doth clearly vindicate and give authority (such as no Christian may despise) to all the festival observations of Saints days, which have been in our Calendar observed, and by our Laws, since the Reformation, continued in our Church, and so without descending more particularly, applyes this whole discourse unto them.

Sect. 35. The feast of Christ's Nativity.

But then thirdly, for this one feast of the birth of Christ (in which our concernments are so great, that [g] Leo could truly say, Dum Servatoris nostri recolimus exortum, invenimur nos nostrum celebrare Principium; Generatio enim Christi, est origo populi Christiani, & natalis capitis est natalis corporis, The Generation of Christ is the beginning of the Church, the birth-day of the head is the birth-day of the body) we have [h] elsewhere produced many Testimonies out of Origen, Cyprian and Chrysostome, each of them deducing it from the practice of the first Antiquity, and St. Augustine making it a character of a son of the Church, to solemnize the festivals of it, and this (principally and by name) of the Nativity. To which may be added that of the [i] Author of the Constitutions, τὰς ἡμέρας τῶν ἁγίων φυλάσσετε, καὶ πρώτην γε τὴν γενέθλιον, Keep the days of the feasts, and first the day of Christ's birth. And although [k] Nicephorus a later Historian say, that Justinus Emperour first commanded it to be kept festival over the world (as Justinian, saith he, appointed the day of Purification, under the name of ὑπαπάντη, because Simeon, &c. met Christ's parents in the Temple that day) yet that belonging onely to the Edict of the Emperour for the universal observation, doth no way prejudge the Churches, whether Apostolical or Primitive, Institution of it. For long before them in Diocletian's time, the observation of it is sufficiently known and solemnized in story by the 20000. Christians which were burnt by him on Christmas-day.

Sect. 36. The 25 of December.

Fourthly, for the particular day, whereon this feast is wont to begin, though that be not of any importance to the Institution it self, yet there is little reason to doubt of the truth of our calculation which sets it on the 25*th*. of December (That argument drawn by some from the courses of the Priests, is in a little Tract intituled [Christ's birth not mistimed] evidently demonstrated by a very [l] worthy and ingenious person, to be a mere deceit.) And (to pass by the many Testimonies [m] elsewhere produced to this purpose) In Joseph the Egyptian's Arabick Codex of the Councils (a Manuscript in the Archives of the Publick Library of the University of Oxford, of the gift of Sir Thomas Roe) this day as well as this feast, is affirmed to stand by Apostolical Canon. The words of the Canon, as it is transcribed by Mr. Gregory, are in English these, Also that you constitute an anniversary feast at the Nativity of the Lord Christ, on the day on which he was born, and that was the five and twentieth of the first Canun (i. e. of December) for this is the Principal of all the feasts. Also that ye do every year celebrate the baptism of the Lord Christ upon the day in which he was baptized by John his Prodromos (πρόδρομος) or forerunner, and that was the sixth day of the second Canun, i. e. of January.

[m] Pract. Cat. p. 85.

Sect. 37. The Apostolical Canons.

Of this Canon these things are to be observed, First, that although it be not affirmed that this was made by the twelve Apostles, principally so called, yet if it were framed by those that early succeeded the Apostles in governing the Church, the first Bishops of the Church (called Apostles also, by communication of that title) and Apostolical men (and so 'tis probable they were first intituled Κανόνες Ἀποστολικῶν, Canons of Apostolical men) it may truly be styled an Apostolical Canon; Or if it were one of those which in succeeding times were added and put into that volume, yet is this an argument of the great antiquity thereof.

Sect. 38. Christmas-day.

Secondly, that in this Canon not onely this anniversary feast of Christ's Nativity is commanded to be observed, but also the very day defined, on which he was born, that which we now celebrate, December 25.

Sect. 39. Twelf-day.

Thirdly, that together with that day which begins the solemnity, at the same time, and by the same Authority, the sixth of January, which we call Twelf-day, and which ends that solemnity, and according to the custome of the Jews (which kept the first and the last day of every feast, days of solemn assembly, and so μεγάλαι ἡμέραι, great days) is a special Holiday, was instituted also, and so that feast consisted of all the twelve days.

Sect. 40. The day of Christ's Baptism. Epiphany.

Fourthly, that this twelfth day was observed as the day of Christ's baptism by John, at which time the holy Ghost appeared and lighted upon him, Mat. 3. 16. That that day was called Epiphany, from the appearing of the Star to the Magi, Mat. 2. 2. is ordinarily conceived, and it may possibly be so, so that we do not from thence believe, that the Magi came to Christ the twelfth day after his birth, for this for many reasons seems to be a mistake; for immediately upon the departure of the Magi, ἀναχωρησάντων αὐτῶν, Mat. 2. 13. Joseph and Mary, with the young child, fled into Ægypt, according to order from God, v. 14. and yet the Text saith, Luke 2. 22. that at the time of Mary's Purification, forty days after his birth, they went up from Bethlehem to Jerusalem, and therefore the coming of the wise men must needs be after their return from Jerusalem again to Bethlehem: as for that of his returning to Nazareth, Luke 2. 39. that sure refers to the time of his coming out of Ægypt, Mat. 2. 22. and cannot be imagined before his journey thither, which appears to have been taken from Bethlehem. This, together with the length of the journey from their country, thorough both the Arabia's to Judea, renders it no improbable conjecture, that their coming to Bethlehem was a twelve-month after Christ's birth; To which it is consonant which we read of Herod's Edict, having from the wise men exact intelligence of the time, he appointed the killing of all the children from two years old and under, v. 16. That this day was also the day of the baptism of Christ, though many years after, is farther affirmed by Alcas Cyriacus (an Arabick MS. of Astronomical Tables in the Archbishops archieves in the Oxford Library) who calls the sixth of January the feast of the Epiphany, or benediction of Waters, and so do others also. And accordingly the Church of England hath appointed the first Lesson to be of the Mission of the Baptist, Isa. 40. and the second Lesson to end with the baptism of Christ, Luke 3. 23.

The time of the Magi coming to Christ.

Sect. 41. The name Epiphany.

That the benediction of the Waters denoteth the day of Christ's baptism, whereby he is, by Chrysostome and other of the Ancients, affirmed to sanctifie the waters, there is no place of question; but whether that day were called Epiphany from thence, in respect of the visible opening of the heavens, and descending of the holy Ghost upon him, or from the first appearing of the Star in the East to the Magi, Mat. 2. 2. which well might be, on the very twelfth day after Christ's birth, or from that other appearing of the same Star, when they drew toward the end of their long journey from their Countrey to Bethlehem, v. 9. at that time twelve-month, or whether the word signifie no more than the birth of Christ, which is ordinarily called ἐπιφάνια, and τὰ ἐπιφάνια in the plural (τῇ ἡμέρᾳ τῶν ἐπιφανίων ὅτι ἐγεννήθη ἐν σαρκὶ, &c. on the day of Epiphany, when Christ was born in the flesh, saith Epiphanius) and may be applied to the last, as well as the

the first day of the feast, I shall not now define, but acknowledge my self inclined to the last, upon this one score, because many Orthodox Christians in Egypt are by Epiphanius affirmed to keep the feast of the Nativity on that day: Which as it is confuted by St. Hierome on Ezek. c. 1. so might well have its rise from the equivocalness of that word Epiphany, which as it signifies any kind of appearing, and so that to the Magi, the manifestation of Christ to the Gentiles, so it may be the appearing of Christ first in the world, of which St. Paul affirmeth, and saith, that the saluifick grace of God ἐπεφάνη hath appeared, Tit. 2. 11.

Sect. 42. So Sahid Aben Batric (a MS. Arabick Historian in the Archives of the Publick Library of the University of Cambridge) as he is transcribed by Mr. Gregory, in the life of Constantine, affirmeth it in these words, Our Lord and Redeemer Jesus Christ was born upon the twenty fifth of the first Canun, i. e. of December, and upon the eleventh day of Tybi, i. e. the sixth of the second Canun, i. e. January was the Epiphany or Baptism of Christ. So the Egyptian Calendar in Kircker de Comput. Eccles. Copt. c. 3. And so Johannes Antiochenus or Melala, that Christ was born, μηνὶ Δεκεμβρίῳ κε. upon the five and twentieth of December, but was baptized in Jordan a river of Palestine, μηνὶ Αὐδυναίῳ τῇ ϛ' Ἰανουαρίου, ἤτοι, on the sixth of the month Audine, or January.

Sect. 43. So in the forecited Authour of the Constitutions, Τὴν δὲ τεσσαρακοστὴν ἑορτὴν πέμπτῃ τῆς ἐνάτου μηνὸς, Constit. l. 5. c. 13. Let the Nativity be celebrated on the 25th. day of the ninth month, beginning the year in March, when he was conceived. So in the 93. Question under the name of Anastasius Nicænus, 'tis cited out of the Ἀποστολικὰ διδάγματα, Ἐτέχθη μὲν ὁ Κύριος Ἰησοῦς ὁ Χριστὸς ἐν Βηθλεὲμ τῇ πόλει τῆς Ἰουδαίας ἐπτακαιδεκάτῃ καὶ ὀγδόῃ τοῦ μηνὸς Καλανδῶν Ἰανουαρίων, Our Lord was born the 25th of the Egyptian month Chœach, which is eight days before the Calends of January, and so the 25th. of December.

Sect. 44. But this is put beyond all question by what hath [a] elsewhere been cited out of Chrysostome, and by him produced out of the Censual Tables of Augustus, i. e. those Registers of all that were enrolled by Augustus's Decree, Luke 2. 1. together with the place, and day of the Month, and year wherein it was done. That enrolment or ἀπογραφὴ or Census was, we know, the sole occasion of bringing up Joseph and Mary to Bethlehem, and while they were there on that occasion the days were accomplished that she should be delivered, and she brought forth her first born, v. 6, 7. To these Tables therefore Justin Martyr makes this resort, Apol. 2. for the evidencing the place of Christ's birth, and doth it to the Emperours of Rome, who would easily have been able to disprove him if it had not been so, ὡς καὶ μαθεῖν δυνατὸν ἐκ τῶν ἀπογραφῶν, as you may learn out of your Rolls. And so Tertullian, Censum Augusti fidelissimum testem Dominicæ Nativitatis Romana Archiva custodiunt, The Roman Archives preserve Augustus Censual Roll, a most faithfull witness of the birth of Christ. And from these Rolls St. Chrysostome professes to have it, that this was the day of his birth, ἐξ ἐκείνων ἀκριβῶς τῶν τὰ οἰκεῖα εἰδότων καὶ τὴν πόλιν ἐκείνην οἰκούντων παρειλήφαμεν τὴν ἡμέραν, We have received the day from those that accurately knew these things, and which dwell in the City of Rome. And accordingly 'tis known, that before St. Chrysostome's times this day had been observed at Rome by the Christians there, ἄνωθεν καὶ ἐκ παλαίας παραδόσεως, saith he, from their Antecessors, and from ancient Tradition.

Sect. 45. Having past through all the degrees and steps, wherein the observation of this Festival can be concerned, and whereby it is vindicated to that veneration which it hath had so long in the Universal Church, (and by the way the other Festivals of the Church deduced from the first times, especially by that Testimony of the Church of Smyrna, delivered by them within few years after Christ's Epistle was sent to them in the Revelation) there is no more needfull to be added to this Theme, but the Conclusion, which is obvious and evident from all this, That the fastidious rejecting or not observing the Festivals of the Church Universal, the Great days and times set apart for the commemorating the several parts of our Redemption wrought by Christ (in his birth, and the attendants on that, in his Death, and Resurrection, and Ascension, and Mission of his Spirit) and also the lives and deaths, faith and patience of his holy Martyrs, Apostles, and the whole society of the Saints (who by their examples and doctrine have contributed so much to our highest advantages, and being dead, do by this means yet speak unto us) must certainly be looked on by every man, as an act of affected departure from the Universal Church of Christ in all ages, and not onely from the Mother which brought him forth in the faith, the Reformed Church of England. And this will set no excellent character on that which can have nothing but the novelty and contempt of Antiquity, to recommend it to any; nor will it prove any very good omen or ground of hope, that the despising of these observances will ever bring in more honour to God, and benefit to the Church, than the Institution or Usage of them was by our pious predecessours designed to do.

The conclusion.

Sect. 46. And here I must not be so injurious to the Authour of the Sixteen Quæres, touching the rise and observation of Christmas, as to leave him any temptation of overvaluing his own dexteritie, or thinking his attempts prosperous and victorious over the whole Church of God for so many Centuries, or of continuing his uncharitable conceit of all those who have retained this feast in their Calendar, as of men, that beside the guilt of befooling and misleading the people, are, saith he, utterly unable to give any rational account of their practice.

An answer to sixteen Quæres about Christmas.

Sect. 47. To his Quæres therefore, though I now hear that others have applyed those Antites, which might make this of mine unnecessary, yet I shall give a particular Answer in few words, without repeating unnecessarily what hath more largely been said elsewhere, and in this foregoing discourse.

Sect. 48. To the first [Whether such religious-customs, as are binding to all the Churches of Jesus Christ, ought not to have sure footing upon the word of God, or Apostolical practice?] I say, that there is no necessity that every religious custome (as that signifies no more than the performing of those duties to God on one set day, which are in every particular justifiable and pious, whensoever they are performed) which is binding to all the Churches of Jesus Christ (by the obligation that lyeth on every one to continue in Unity with the Universal Church of the purest times, and to observe their pious Institutions) should be better founded than so, or be obliged to have any other sure footing upon the word of God, or Apostolical practice. The Primitive Universal Church of Christ may (and among all pious Christians hath alway been allowed to) have authority sufficient to prescribe and institute such a rite, as this hath appeared to be, and that Institution to deserve obedience from all meek sons of the Church, who have no reaſon to break her unity, or loſe their parts of the benefits, which are conſequent to that, upon ſuch untempting, gainleſs terms as thoſe.

Sect. 49. To the ſecond [Whether I can ſubſtantially prove that Chriſt was born on the 25. of December, and what my proofs are? I anſwer, that it may be as ſubſtantially proved, as of a fact ſo long diſtant from us can well be expected (and as to the buſineſs in hand [the celebrating an anniverſary day] may be ſufficient) that Chriſt was born on the 25 of December: And what the proofs are, hath been ſet down, Sect. 36. &c.

Sect. 50. To the third [Whether the celebration of that day, (grant he was born on it) can be clearly warranted from Scripture, and what thoſe Scriptures are?] That if by [the clear warranting the celebration of that day] be meant, as the words import, the ſecuring one's ſelf or others, that the celebration of a day is no way unlawfull, neither prohibited by, nor contrariant to Scripture, then it is clearly warranted, and that the warrant hath been cleared by the ſeveral ſtages of the precedent diſcourſe, beginning Sect. 28. &c. And that ſuch warrant as that is abundantly ſufficient to juſtifie that practice, which the Church in the beſt and pureſt times hath on ſuch pious and prudent grounds univerſally practiſed.

Sect. 51. To the fourth [Whether I can clear it by ſound conſequence from the New Teſtament, though not ſet down there in totidem verbis?] That I can clear the warrantableneſs of the celebration, and perfect lawfulneſs to continue it, from the no-objection that lyes in force againſt it, and add unto that the Piety of the Inſtitution, the Authority of the Inſtitutors, the advantages that may be made of it by all good Chriſtians, and that is as ſound a conſequence from the New Teſtament, as this matter can ſtand in need of.

Sect. 52. To the fifth, [Whether I can do it by univerſal Tradition?] That what I undertake to aſſert, viz. the blameleſneſs of this Inſtitution in it ſelf, and the truth of fact concerning the Churches inſtitution, yea and the uſage and continuance of it through all times, hath been already competently evidenced, and may farther, by Tradition ſo Univerſal, that none but Aerius for very many hundred years, was known to contradict it, and he hath been ranked by the Fathers of the Church among Hereticks for ſo doing.

Sect. 53. To the ſixth [Whether (in caſe it can be evidenced by none of theſe, viz. plain Text, ſolid Inference, Univerſal Tradition) it be not a mere humane invention, and ſo will-worſhip? and how we will one day acquit our ſelves before God, for placing and crying up mens inventions, inſtead of the Inſtitutions of Jeſus Chriſt? And whether it were not faithfull dealing with poor ſimple people, to tell them that we have neither of theſe to warrant it?] That it matters little what it ſhould be, if it were warranted by none of theſe, ſeeing it doth appear by the former anſwers, as far as to the matter is ſufficient, warranted by all of them. And moreover, that a humane invention, ſuch it may be, an Inſtitution of the Pure virgin Apoſtolical Church of Chriſt, and ſo propounded (not for a doctrine of God's, but an Eccleſiaſtical Inſtitution) may be very far from having any hurt in it: No act of will-worſhip, as that ſignifies a voluntary ſervice piouſly performed to God, or an uncommanded act of Piety, being eo nomine, a ſin, but an act of Chriſtian vertue, as hath been ſhewed at large in a full Tract of Will-Worſhip, and applied to this particular purpoſe, Pract. Cat. 84. And therefore to ſay we, or any, by obſerving this feſtivity, or teaching others to continue the obſervance of it, do place and cry up the inventions of men, inſtead of the Inſtitutions of Jeſus Chriſt, is an unprovoked cauſleſs calumny. And for the fidelity required to poor ſimple people, we have diſcharged our ſelves oft in our miniſtry, as far as that (in duty or charity, or for directing them into all truth) appears to be required of us.

Sect. 54. To the ſeventh [Whether (ſince days and times commanded by God himſelf to be obſerved under the Law, were and are unlawfull under the Goſpel) days and times commanded by men, and not by God, under the Goſpel, are not leſs lawfull?] That the ſuppoſed unlawfulneſs of continuing under the Goſpel, thoſe days and times commanded by God to the Jews under the Law, is no prejudice againſt the Apoſtles or the Churches inſtituting of other days and times upon Chriſtian grounds for the uſe of Chriſtians under the Goſpel. The conſequence is clear, by the diſparity of the caſes, eſpecially if it be obſerved, That it was not the bare continuing or uſing thoſe Jewiſh rites, which was deemed unlawfull, but the impoſing them as by law from God on thoſe which were never ſubject to them, as on Gentiles converted to Chriſtianity, who were never ſubject to the Jewiſh Law. But to this alſo the anſwer is given at large, Pract. Cat. p. 85.

Sect. 55. To the eighth [Whether the true and genuine interpretation of Chriſtmas be Chriſtman? And whether to perſuade people 'tis ſo, be not to delude them? And whether we may not as well interpret Candlemas, Candleman, Michaelmas, Michaelman, as Chriſtmas, Chriſtman?] That the genuine interpretation of Chriſtmas is not Chriſtman, and that to perſuade the people 'tis ſo, or to perſuade the Authour of the Queres that any man that underſtands words, can think it poſſible it ſhould be ſo, is to abuſe and delude both them and him; And any man might as reaſonably tell him, that Candlemas and Michaelmas ſignified the Candle and the Angel to be men, as that was the notation of the word Chriſtmas. And indeed, it is but my duty to be ſorry for any, that ſhould challenge all men with ſo much confidence, and yet at the ſame time be capable of having ſuch a trope put upon him as this was.

Sect. 56. For whoſe ſatisfaction in this point, it will not be amiſs to add what I conceive concerning the notation of the word, that the old Saxon word mæſſan and from thence the Engliſh Meſſe, and Maſſe, ſignifies a feaſt, and accordingly with them, any holy or feſtival day, is called mæſſan dæg Maſs day: And ſo, ſaith Varro, doth the Greek μίσα, and the Latine Meſſa, from whence the common word Menſa is but lightly removed and ſignifies the meat, and not the table onely (——menſaq; remota in Virgil, the meat taken away, and menſa ſecunda, the ſecond courſe) and all this from the Latine Miſſa, becauſe ad menſam mittitur, it is ſent, or ſerved up to the table. And this is perfectly agreeable alſo to the Greek uſe of πέμπω and ἀναπέμπω, in their libations and ſacrifices, ἐγὼ σοι τόδε πέμπω, I ſend, i. e. offer this unto thee, and from thence is their [o] πομπὴ or pompa, for [p] ferculum, a meſs, or ſervice, (ſo in Pliny, Nat. hiſt. l. 7. c. 23. Criſpum Hilacum cum filiis novem——prælatâ pompâ in Capitolio immolaſſe) as this is accommodated to the Chriſtians Worſhip, or ſpiritual feaſt, [o] μετεὶ διῶν πομπὼ τελῶν Ῥωμαῖοι. Herodian in Commodo. πομπὰς πέμπειν ὑμῖν μᾶλλ ἢ ἱερουργῶν. Demoſth. Philipp. 1. διῶν ὑπ' ἀμύμονι πομπῇ. Hom. Il. ζ. So we have τὰ βεβήλα τῆς πομπῆς τοῦ Σατανᾶ, the meats of Satan's pomp, or feaſt, oppoſed to the ἄρτου καὶ οἴνου τῆς εὐχαριστίας, the bread and wine of the Euchariſt. Cyril. Hieroſol. in Catech.

feaſt, among the Fathers, ſo πεμπειν ἡμνους τῳ πατρι, in Juſtin Martyr, p. 60. ἀγειν πομπην, and ἀδειν, ἡ ἀρον τῳ ἀναπεμπειν, to ſend up praiſes and prayers, i. e. pomps and miſſa's to God. And this again agreeable to the known origination of the Hebrew שלחן a table, from שלח miſit. And then it remains, that the word in compoſition muſt follow the notation of it in the ſimple, and own no other ſignification, than that Chriſtmas be the feaſt of Chriſt, Michaelmas the feaſt of Michael the Archangel, as it is commonly explicated.

To the ninth [Whether the Saints are bound to rejoyce in the birth of Chriſt on that day that men ſuperſtitiouſly call Chriſtmas, more than at other times? And whether the Lord's day be not [the] day appointed for them to rejoyce on?] That the Inſtitution and uſage of the Univerſal Church of God for ſo many hundred years, is an obligation to all faithfull ſons of that Church (if that be the meaning of the word Saints) to rejoyce in (as that ſignifies to commemorate with joy and thankſgiving to God the Father) the birth of Chriſt on that day, which is far from being [q] ſuperſtitiouſly (it might as properly have been termed murtherouſly and felonioufly, and adulterouſly) called Chriſtmas, more than the ſame Church, or any other Authority equal to that, obliges to do at any other ſet time. And though the Lord's day be by the ſame Authority appointed for Saints to rejoyce on, yet that was in reflexion on the Reſurrection, not birth of Chriſt on that day: And beſides, that excludes not other ſeaſons of rejoycing, any more than the mercy of Chriſt's Reſurrection, either concludes Chriſt never to have been born, or that birth not to be a mercy worthy of a Chriſtian's rejoycing. Sect. 57.

[q] From the charge of ſuperſtition this obſervation of Chriſtmas is at large vindicated, Pract. Cat. p. 84.

For the inforcing of this Objection, it hath been farther ſaid by others, that the Reſurrection of Chriſt comprehendeth the birth under it, and conſequently that the Lord's day weekly feaſt, being the commemoration of the Reſurrection, comprehends the celebration of all other antecedent mercies, that of the Nativity and Paſſion alſo. But 1. this is a very infirm way of arguing, and if it had any force in it, would conclude againſt the obſervation of the Lord's day it ſelf: For, doth not the Aſcenſion of Chriſt as much include and comprehend the Reſurrection of Chriſt, as his Reſurrection doth his Nativity? Certainly it doth, and by that way of diſputing, would infer, that the Aſcenſion is the one onely Feaſt to be obſerved, and all others to be baniſhed out of the Church. But then ſecondly, it is obſervable of thoſe that thus vehemently expreſs their diſlikes to commemorating of Chriſt's birth, that their wrath is equally extended to the obſervation of Eaſter, and ſo can as little boaſt of their zeal to the Reſurrection, as to the birth of Chriſt. But this Objection is not made uſe of by the Authour of the Quæres, and therefore I ſhall no farther enlarge to ſhew the invalidity of it. Sect. 58.

To the tenth [Whether Chriſtmas-day ought in any reſpect to be eſteemed above another of the Week-days? And whether people may not without offence to God follow their lawfull vocations on that day?] That that which the Univerſal Church of God hath ſet apart for the publick ſervice and commemoration of an eminent mercy of God, ought in that reſpect to be eſteemed above other days of the year, as [eſteeming a day] ſignifies the [ſetting it apart] and ſo conſecrating from common to ſacred uſes and employments. And therefore ſuppoſing this Inſtitution and precept of the Church, and the command of God to honour our Parents, and to ſubmit our ſelves to thoſe who have rule over us, Heb. 13. 17. (under which phraſe, by ἡγουμένοις, the Governours of the Church are contained, if not ſolely meant in that place) people may not without offence to God, Schiſm from his Church, and culpable diſobedience, ſeparate wilfully, or withdraw from the publick Aſſembly on that day, and follow their lawfull (as that ſignifies ordinary, particular, or on other days lawfull) vocations; It being moſt evident, that our ordinary labour, and driving our ſecular deſigns of worldly gain, hath been always looked on by God, as an inconvenient attendant of his publick or ſolemn worſhip (as God and Mammon are not eaſily ſerved together) and a reſt preſcribed from thoſe employments, which may render the mind unfit, or the body uncapable of that more Divine attendance; which reſt is farther capable of the honour of being an oblation to God, if in honour to him, we thus offer ſome part of our time, (which is alſo interpretatively ſome part of our wealth) unto his ſervice. Sect. 59.

To the eleventh [Whether I think the Parliament and Aſſembly have erred and plaid the fools, in condemning and raſing out Holidays not warranted in the Word? And whether to obſerve them, be not highly to diſlike, and flatly to contradict (in point of practice at leaſt) their proceedings in order to a Reformation?] That I am not ſo rude and unmindfull of our Saviour's interdict, Matth. 5. 22. as to pronounce of any ſociety of men, or ſingle man, that he hath played the fool; Yet I profeſs not to commend the turning out all Holidays beſides the Lord's day (and particularly this of the Nativity of Chriſt) out of the Church, nor do I believe it a good expedient toward Reformation. Sect. 60.

To the twelfth [Whether (ſince moſt men and women in England do blindly and ſuperſtitiouſly believe that Chriſt was born on that day) preaching on it doth nouriſh and ſtrengthen them in that belief?] That the believing Chriſt to have been born December 25. is no blind (and 'tis impoſſible it ſhould be any ſuperſtitious) belief. And therefore 'tis not amiſs that by any lawfull means (ſuch I hope preaching may be) men be nouriſhed and ſtrengthened in that belief. And yet why the preaching on Decemb. 25. ſhould nouriſh people in the belief, that Chriſt was born that day of the Month, when the preaching on March 25. (when Eaſter day falls on that day) doth not perſuade any that Chriſt roſe again on that day of the Month, I cannot eaſily foreſee, what account will be given; It being as little important to the celebration of a Chriſtian feaſt, that the day ſet apart for it ſhould be infallibly the day whereon the thing commemorated was done ſixteen hundred years ſince, as it is neceſſary to the preſerving the memory of William the Conqueror, that the picture of him, which I now have, was rightly and exactly taken. Sect. 61.

To the thirteenth [Whether this feaſt had not its riſe and growth from Chriſtians conformity to the mad feaſts Saturnalia (kept in December to Saturn the father of the Gods) in which there was a ſheaf offered to Ceres Goddeſs of Corn, and a hymn in her praiſe, called ἴυλος or ἰυλος? And whether thoſe Chriſtians by name, to cloak it did not afterwards call it Yule and Chriſtmas (as though it were for Chriſt's honour?) And whether it be not by ſome (more ancient, than truly or knowingly religious) called Yule, and the mad Plays or Sports (wherewith 'tis celebrated, like thoſe Saturnalia) Yule games? And whether from the offering that ſheaf to Ceres, from that Song in her praiſe, from thoſe gifts the heathens gave their friends Sect. 62.

on the Calends of January, ominis gratiâ, did not ariſe or ſpring our Blazes, Chriſtmas Carols, and New-years-Gifts?] I anſwer to the ſeverals, Firſt, that a Sheaf or leſſer proportion, an handfull of ears of corn, was cuſtomarily offered to Ceres by the heathen Greeks, is an unqueſtioned truth, and might be teſtified by Theocritus, Eidyll. 10. and by others; So likewiſe it is true, that this Sheaf or handfull of ears was called ἴυλος or ἴολος. But that this was done in the Saturnalia, or that it hath any relation to our Yule and Carols, is a double miſtake in the propounder.

Sect. 63. Ceres games. The Saturnalia were clearly a Roman feaſt, celebrated by them in December, and oft continued the whole Month. But for Ceres Games, they appear not to have any thing to do there, but to be of a Greek beginning, and improved into their Eleuſinia Sacra, thoſe filthy Myſteries of theirs, ſo famous for all villany.

Sect. 64. Ἴυλος. For the word Ἴυλος, 'tis acknowledged alſo, that that ſignified not onely the Sheaf, but hymn to Ceres, ſo ſaith Athenæus, l. 14. c. 3. out of Semius Delius, περὶ παιάνων, Ἀπὸ τῆς Δημητρὸς ἀρημάτων τύτε καρπὸς (τὰ δεράγματα τῆ Κριθῶν.) καὶ τὸς ὕμνος τὸς εἰς τὸν θεὸν, ἴολας καλῶσι καὶ ἴυλας, the fruits and the hymns are both called by that name. So the Greek Scholiaſt on [r] Apollonius Rhodius, Ἴυλος, ὄνομα ᾠδῆς ὕμνος, φησὶ Δίδυμος, εἰς Δήμητρα, It is the name of a Song, [ſ] and Hymn, ſaith Didymus, on Ceres. Beſide this, the word Ἴυλος ſignifies many things; John Zetzes in his Chiliads reckons ſix ſignifications of it; And yet beſides thoſe, it is the name of a Paphian month, and if the Engliſh Yule be taken from thence, the moſt Reverend Primate of Armagh hath ſhewed that it will fall out commodiouſly enough.

De Ann. Maced. The πρὸ ὀκτὼ εἰδῶν Ἰανναρίων, which Epiphanius makes the day of our Saviour's Nativity, being coincident with the fourteenth of the Cyprians (and among them of the Paphians) Julius, and ſo conſequently the firſt of that Month, muſt be on the 24 of the Roman December, the vigils of our Saviour's Nativity, according to all other Calculations. But the truth is, there is not ſo much affinity betwixt our Northern Engliſh or Scotiſh (nor was there between our Anteceſſours Britiſh or Saxon) and either the Grecians in general, or the Cypriots and Paphians in particular, as will be able to countenance or authorize this deriv ation, unleſs it may be thought that we and they both had it from ſome Common Fountain, ſome more Univerſal Mother-Language.

Sect. 65. Yule. It is, I conceive, far more probable, that the word Yule, ȝiul, or (as in Alfred's Laws 'tis alſo called) ȝehol, ſhould be taken immediately from the Latine Jubilum, as that ſignifies a time of rejoycing and feſtivity, and as 'tis ſure enough that they have it from the Hebrew יובל jubilum, jubilatus, clangor tubæ productior, the longer and louder ſounding of the Trumpet, which was uſed to call men to Aſſemblies and Feſtivities. From thence, we know, that was their word to ſignifie any Feſtivity, either day or year, and belongs to their New-Moons (on which, ſaith the Pſalmiſt, the Trumpet was to be blown, and upon the ſolemn feaſt days, whatſoever they were) and doth by no peculiarity belong to that which they call the year of Jubilee, but onely as that was a Feſtival year, and a year of Reſt, and remiſſion, attendant on, and annexed to Feaſts) This is very readily changed into that, the Hebrew ו or j conſonant, being pronounced by moſt nations like y, and ſo is the Saxon ȝ alſo, as gate is among the Northern, yate, and given is yeaven, and the Saxon ȝea is year, and elȝe in Bede is Elye, and ȝea is yea, l. 5. cap. 2. and the particle ȝif is if. So the old Scotiſh that pronounce yule and year, write ȝule and ȝupe. As for the other change in the word, the ſoftning the b, or turning it into u, nothing is more ordinary. That this is the original Yule, may farther appear by the uſe of the old word gule in ancient Records, as when the firſt of Auguſt, Lammas, or (as in the Saxon 'tis read) hlafmæſſ, i. e. Loaf-maſs, or Bread-maſs (ſo named as a Feaſt of Thanks-giving to God for the firſt-fruits of the corn, and ſeems to have been obſerved with bread of new Wheat, and accordingly 'tis an uſage in ſome places for Tenants to be bound to bring in Wheat of that year to their Lord on, or before the firſt of Auguſt) is called gula Auguſti, or the Yule of Auguſt. In the ſame ſenſe both (and ſo is unreconcileable with the other derivations, either from ἴυλος the hymn to Ceres, or the name of the Paphian month) ſave onely that the feaſt of Chriſt's Nativity is called the Yule, καθ' ἐξοχὴν, the other the Yule of Auguſt determinately: So likewiſe 'tis at this day ordinary in many Shires to call the annual feaſt or Wake, which moſt Pariſhes keep on ſeveral ſet days in commemoration of the dedication of their Church, the Yuval or Yule, which is an evidence that the word ſignifies Jubilum, a day of feſtivity, rejoycing, and no more.

Sect. 66. Blazes. As for the Blazes, if in any part of this Kingdom any ſuch be now uſed at this time, I know no other beginning, or occaſion of them, than that flames of fire may have been uſed as expreſſions of joy among us, as bonefires have always been. The Carols, if they be worthy of the ſubject, I ſhall preſume free from that charge, as being hymns in honour of our Saviour's birth, or commemorations of that part of the hiſtory in the Goſpel, and no more than other divine hymns or Anthems ſung at a Feſtival by way of thanksgiving to God.

Sect. 67. New-years-gifts. There remains onely the cuſtome of New-Years-Gifts, and for thoſe I anſwer, that the heathens giving their friends gifts in the Calends of January, was (beſide the [ominis cauſa]) a part of the worſhip of Janus a falſe God,

> —Jano etiam celebri de menſe litatur
> Auſpiciis epuliſque ſacris—ſaith Prudentius.

You ſee ſacrificing to Janus, as well as auſpicia. And yet what the Poet means by auſpicia, is ſufficiently cleared by Pliny, Fauſtis ominibus, bonis verbis, precationibus felicibus, ſtrenis & muneribus, ſe invitabant, Hiſt. Nat. l. 28. c. 2. good wiſhes, and good abodings, gifts and preſents. And Lucian gives the reaſon why the Romans did this, becauſe, ſaith he, they believed that the Gods anſwered mens prayers, ἐν ἐκείνῃ μάλιϛα ἡμέρᾳ, on that day moſt eſpecially. What was thus done by the heathens to their falſe Gods, or out of ſuch ridiculous perſuaſions, that the Gods heard prayers more on that day than another; or if there were any other folly in it, is (to another end, and ſeparate from thoſe follies, and with a far diſtant intention) continued among Chriſtians to the true God, i. e. onely thus far.

The

The Church obſerves this firſt day of the year, as the feaſt commemorative of the Circumciſion of Chriſt. The ſending of gifts to one another, where it is continued, is no part of the worſhip of God, nor, I think, miſtaken by any to be ſo, but a civil uſage among men, for the acknowledging the relations that men ſtand in, one toward another. And if we ſhould imitate ſuch moral duties, even from heathens, there would be no more hurt in it, than in learning a moral ſentence out of Theognis, or Seneca. And if a prayer for the proſperity of the year following, or but the expreſſion of that Chriſtian wiſh, be an appendage of the New-Years-gift, 'tis not imaginable that there ſhould be more hurt in that gift or wiſh, than there is poiſon in the Scholars Epiſtle to his Governour, from the Διδασκολεῖτ, or, to an irrational importune diſputer, from an ἐφεκτικὸν at the top of it. Sect. 68.

And yet after all this, it may be added, that this cuſtome hath not been of late years any thing ſolemnly obſerved in this Kingdom, ſave onely between the Lords and the King, the Lords preſenting ſuch a ſum of money, and the King returning ſo many ounces of Plate. And this cuſtome is juſtly thought to have been brought into ours from the Roman Commonwealth (not the Roman Church) as into that by the Emperour Auguſtus, every one of the people being appointed to preſent to him a tribute on the Calends of January. So far is this from being a ſuperſtitious, or indeed a Religious obſervance. Sect. 69.

And what e'er the Ancient Fathers have poured out in declamations againſt the practices on the Calends of January, appears clearly to have been aimed not againſt the mutual expreſſions of duty or kindneſs in the New-years-Gifts, or New-years-wiſhes, but againſt the conſecrating that day to the [t] Idol Janus, and the drunkenneſs and revellings uſed on it, the due ceremonies of an Idol-feaſt. And if mens endeavours might be like their Sermons in this, labour to purge this, and the like feaſts from the profane exceſſes (the greateſt and moſt dangerous remainders of Idolatry and Heatheniſm among us) and to retain nothing, but what were agreeable to the worſhip of the true God, and Chriſtian life, I ſhould not give any man ſuch an example of ill nature, or contentious ſpirit, as to diſpute againſt them, but profeſs my ſpirit to be pleaſed with healing Balſams, as much as my fleſh abhors amputations, and to believe that purging phyſick may be ſometimes as uſefull, as at other times cordials are acknowledged to be. Sect. 70.

[t] Bifrontis illâ ſuperſtitione utuntur. Ambr. in Gal. 4.

To the fourteenth [Whether conformity to, and retention of heatheniſh cuſtoms be commendable in Chriſtians, ſuitable or agreeable with Goſpel principles, though under pretext of Chriſt's honour and worſhip?] That conformity to, or retention of ſome cuſtoms of civil life, uſed formerly by the nation, whilſt it was heathen, as paying tributes, homages, interchanging hoſpitalities or civilities, yea and wiſhing good health or proſperity (good even, good morrow, good day, good year, good ſpeed, good do it you) are not unſuitable, or diſagreeable with Goſpel principles, eſpecially if they either not pretend at all to be acts of worſhip, or pretending to be ſuch be really (what they pretend to) deſigned, to the honour of Chriſt who was given us by God as a mercy of ſuch a weight, as may well conſtrain us to doe any thing that is pious, charitable, or kind on occaſion of that commemoration. Secondly, that 'tis known of Chriſt and his Apoſtles, that they did, to attract the Jews to the Chriſtian Religion, gratifie them in retaining many of their cuſtoms, So they were not ſuch as had a peculiarity of oppoſition, and unreconcileableneſs with the Goſpel. And therefore for any innocent cuſtoms of the heathens, ſuch, as having nothing of Idolatry in them, might be accommodated to the Chriſtian purpoſes, there is nothing to be charged upon thoſe that planted Chriſtianity among the Gentiles, if to ſo pious an end, as was the attracting of the heathens to Chriſt, they did ſo accommodate them. Sect. 71.

To the fifteenth [Whether I am not bound to prove my practice for the conviction and ſatisfaction of my brethren, whoſe duty it is to walk with me in things agreeable to the mind of Chriſt? And in caſe I cannot, whether I ought not to acknowledge my errour, lay down my practice (as others have done theirs) no longer befooling and miſleading the people committed to my charge?] Firſt, That I have in obedience to this admonition endeavoured to prove and juſtifie my practice and the practice of the Church of England, not yet unbeautifull in her ruines, for the conviction or ſatisfaction of my brethren; and can perſwade my ſelf chearfully that all that live in obedience to our perſecuted Mother, or to the Univerſal Church of the pureſt ages, and are content to allow me the title of one of their brethren, will reſt in ſome degree ſatisfied with this account, whoſe duty that it is to walk with me in things agreeable to the mind of Chriſt, I ſhall willingly acknowledge, and therefore hope, they will not think themſelves obliged to ſeparate at once from me, and the Church of England (that I ſay not the Apoſtolical, Primitive, Univerſal Church of God) in that, which is thus far cleared from being diſagreeable to any thing revealed by Chriſt. Secondly, that till the practice have been convincingly proved to be erroneous or fooliſh (which the making of ſixteen Quæres is not at all apt, or probable to have done, without the annexation of weighty reaſons againſt any thing poſſible to be affirmed by the defendant) It is an uncomely image of the inward part of the Authour of the Quæres, to blaſt the reputation of an Inſtitution of the Ancient Church of God, and the Rule of his Reformed Mother, the Church of England, with that ugly ſtyle or character of befooling the people, and in plain words, that a little weight of reaſon doth better become our Chriſtian Profeſſion, than never ſo much, or never ſo little ill language. Thirdly, that as to this one, ſo to the reſt of the practices of the Primitive Church, it muſt be obſerved, that what they then did, they did with ſo great conſideration, and deſigns and weights of Piety, that no Chriſtian that then lived, had any objection againſt them: And that ſome among us now have, it cannot be more charitably imputed, than to their great diſtance from, and ignorance of thoſe reaſons. Accordingly they that now know and conſider the true reaſons of them, do ſincerely, and cannot but reverence their Inſtitutions, and imitate their Practices. And when nothing but ignorance qualifies others to accuſe them of folly, there is no danger of falling under that Cenſure before any tolerably wiſe Tribunal, but by being diſpleaſed, or thinking it ſtrange, that men ſhould doe after their kind, or that the old ſaying ſhould have any truth in it (which it is ſo univerſally noted to have, that it is converted into a Proverb) That the ignorant man hath the incloſure, or privilege to hate knowledge. Sect. 72.

To the ſixteenth or laſt [Whether in caſe I return no anſwer to theſe Quæres, he have not ground ſufficient to conclude me utterly unable to give any rational account of my practice, now put upon it?] That the returning no anſwer to the Quæres, is as unſufficient a ground to conclude all thoſe (which make no ſuch return) utterly unable to give any rational account of their practice, as it was an argument before ſetting pen to paper, that I was not able to write what I have now written, the negative arguing ab actu ad potentiam, being as far from con- Sect. 73.

cluding logically (that what any man doeth not, he is utterly unable to doe) as the affirmative is infallible, that I am able to give this account, because I have now done it.

Sect. 74. And whosoever thinks fit to resume this business into his consideration, and enquire any farther into this subject, may, if he please, be directed to this shorter way, To question or debate the truth or supposed certainty of some of his own principles; And for an essay or trial to set this one question before him,

Sect. 75. Two Queres. Whether it be not lawfull for the Church, either National, of one, or Universal, of all parts of Christendom, especially of that age which was neerest the Apostles, of the first and purest times, to take upon it to institute one or more days, upon any special occasion of some eminent mercy of God's, toward the whole Church, to be used yearly in acts of Christian piety and charity by all the children of that Church, and to expect obedience from them? And whether that one Authority may not secure and justifie all from any crime of superstition, &c. in case they shall think fit to yield this obedience?

Sect. 76. If to this question thus proposed, it be necessary to add any other, it may most reasonably be this.

Sect. 77. Whether such an ancient Institution of the Church of Christ, by name the anniversary feast of Christ's birth, though it be not affirmed to be commanded by Christ, or instituted by the Apostles, or (in it self considered, without respect to the Institution) absolutely necessary to the being of a Church, yet being thus (more than lawfull) pious in it self, proper in respect of the ground, primitively Catholick (if not Apostolick) in respect of the Institution, may be lawfully abolished by private men, without authority of the Church, or by any particular Church, without regard and reverence to the Universal, and for the Universal of this age, after so long observance, whether it be morally possible, that it should consent to the abolishing of that, which is founded on such Piety and Authority? Finally, Whether by any obligation of conscience it appear (not onely lawfull, but) necessary to be thus abolished (either as superstitious in it self, or as subject to abuses) on this onely ground of truth, because the following days have sometimes been mis-spent in riot, &c. by some wicked men?

Sect. 78. If these Questions may be thus proposed, it will be easie for any to satisfie himself (upon the grounds premised) of the truth of the affirmative of the former, and negative of the latter, and withall to secure himself that there need be no other question in this matter.

A LETTER of FULL ACCORDANCE

Written to the Reverend, and moſt Learned,

Dr. ROBERT SANDERSON.

By Henry Hammond, D. D.

To which are annexed the Extracts of Three Letters concerning God's Preſcience reconciled with Liberty and Contingency.

TO ALL OUR BRETHREN

OF

The Church of England.

§ 1. IN relation to the Controverſies concerning God's Grace and Decrees, nothing was ever Superiour, in my thoughts, to the fear that the great Intereſts of Religion, Chriſtian practice, and particularly that of Charity, might be obſtructed by them.

§ 2. It hath long been the Complaint of pious and learned men, (of the juſtice whereof, if formerly we had, we cannot now reaſonably retain any doubt,) that the crude and unwary treating of theſe, and (from thence derived,) an haſty premature perſwaſion of their being in Chriſt, (aſſiſted by a belief of irreſpective Decrees, and Grace irreſiſtible, and no poſſibility of interrupting their juſtified eſtate,) was apt to contribute to the preſumptions, and ſecurities, and final impenitences of ſome men, who having moſt loudly renounced the power, chuſe yet not to quit the form of Godlineſs.

§ 3. And for the heats, and uncharitable diſtempers, which the managing of theſe Controverſies particularly have been guilty of, we need not look abroad among the Dominicans and Jeſuites, Janſeniſts and Moliniſts, for proofs. Our own Region hath not of a long time failed of evidences. The old weapon of Ὦ κατάρατε, crying down for carnal men and hereticks, Pelagians and Semipelagians, Papiſts, Socinians, and what not? (even rifling the Poets Hell to fetch out Titles for their adverſaries,) hath never been more nimbly taken up, and vigorouſly handled, than in theſe days.

§ 4. And as if ſewel to diſſenſions were ſtill wanting, it hath been the endeavour of ſome to ſuggeſt this jealouſie, and clancularly to infuſe it into the minds of men, that they which oppoſe unconditionate Decrees, &c. (and pretend to think they effectually ſerve the ends of Chriſtianity thereby,) have entertained ſuch vehement diſlikes, and averſations to all that Scheme of doctrines, that they retain no charity to the maintainers of them, though they be in other things as conſtant, obedient ſons of the Church of England, as any; and when opportunity ſhall aſſiſt their deſign, will take care rigorouſly to fence their communion from them, and whatever the accord be in other doctrines, (wherein our Church is eminently concerned againſt the common Adverſaries) will proceed finally to exterminate and exclude them.

§ 5. The Conſequences of this perſwaſion, once imbibed, be it never ſo cauſeleſs and unprovoked, how noxious and inauſpicious they may prove to all that are on either ſide concerned in them, what leven of bitter zeal and animoſities it may cauſe to ferment in the minds of ſome, what blaſts and improſperities it may bring on the endeavours of others; and, betwixt both, what detriment to the true and ſolid ends, whether of Religion, or Reformation, (the ſquaring of our lives according cording to that other, more ſublime, pattern in the Mount, Matt. v. the inhaunſed, tranſcendent, indiſpenſable Laws of Purity and Peaceableneſs,) I ſhall not here need to ſet forth, every man's ſagacity ſerving him competently to make this diſcovery.

§ 6. Yet was it not a rational hope, that the bare diſclaiming and renouncing ſo great a guilt, would be admitted to the purgation of thoſe, againſt whom it had been ſuggeſted and believed. It therefore ſeemed to me more ſeaſonable to tender an ocular demonſtration of the contrary, by bringing my Lamb, or Turtle, (my offering to the Temple of Peace,) and really exemplifying the charity and accordance, that may readily be attained between diſſenters, when minds prepared with meekneſs, and love of the Truth, whereſoever they meet with it, can take courage to deny themſelves, and ſo to depoſite prejudices, and inſtead of names and ſhadows, to give themſelves up to the entire guidance of that light which ſhines in Scripture.

§ 7. In order to this end, it ſeemed not improper, to offer at this time to publick view the preſent Sentiments of the judicious Dr. Sanderſon, the Regius Profeſſor of the Univerſity of Oxford, (and the rather, becauſe ſome manuſcript Tables of his former thoughts, and ſome paſſages from his Sermons, long ſince preached, and now republiſhed, have been made uſe of, to gain authority to thoſe Doctrines which he is now far from owning,) and briefly and perſpicuouſly to annex unto, and compare with them thoſe Amicable and Pacifick Reflexions, which may hope to gain the unanimous conſent of all true Sons of our Venerable Mother, the Church of England, whoſe chief aim it hath always been to diſcountenance diviſions and fractions, and occaſions, and fomenters of thoſe, eſpecially ſingular Doctrines, and novel Articles of Faith, and in a Catholick harmonious charity, to plant Primitive belief, and zeal of good works, and ſo inſtead of the empty Form, the full power of Godlineſs.

§ 8. What is ſo largely added on that one head of Preſcience, had ſome appearance of neceſſity, to repell a ſhaft borrowed of late from the Socinians quiver, who having reſolved it impoſſible for God himſelf to foreſee future Contingents, have given diſputers their choice, whether they like beſt, bluntly to deny God's Preſcience, and ſo, at his coſt, maintain their own Liberty, or more piouſly to maintain Preſcience, and then give it the ſame force of evacuating all Liberty and Contingency, which Predetermination of all events was juſtly accuſed to draw after it; The miſtake very dangerous on either ſide, and the temptation equally fitted for both, if it were not timely obviated.

§ 9. That theſe enſuing Diſcourſes may be effectually ſucceſsfull to the deſigned end, of advancing the threefold intereſt of Truth and Peace, and Uniform Chriſtian obedience, that it may ſupplant the Vinegar by the Oil, the Nitre by the Balſam, and procure, by conſent of Litigants, a ſolemn Superſedeas, if not Concluſion to debates, (an averſion to theſe heathen Agones, which afford nothing, but to the combatant blows, and leaves to the Conquerour,) above all, that it may provide us, by this truce, a greater vacancy for the continued exerciſe of real Piety, and engage us to make diligent uſe of it, (to add, as to our Faith vertue (or courage,) ſo to our Godlineſs brotherly-kindneſs, and to that the yet higher aſcent and accompliſhment of charity,) that it may compact us all into that union that moſt ſucceſsfully contributes to our growth, and ſo poſſeſs us of that qualification, to which immarceſſible joys are awarded by our Righteous Judge, ſhall be continually the prayer, as in the following ſheets it hath been the ſincere ſingle endeavour, of Your Fellow-labourer, H. Hammond.

A Letter of full Accordance,

Written to

D. ROBERT SANDERSON,

CONCERNING

God's Grace and Decrees.

Dear Sir,

Sect. 1. HAving had a ſight of the Letter which you ſent M.——about the Antiremonſtrant Controverſies, dated Mar. 26. and obſerving one of the reaſons, which you render of your having avoided to appear on that theme, [a lothneſs to engage in a quarrel whereof you ſhould never hope to ſee an end] I thought my ſelf in ſome degree qualified to anſwer this reaſon of yours, and thereby to do acceptable ſervice to many, who do not think fit that any conſiderations, which have not real and weighty truth in them, ſhould obſtruct that which may be ſo much to the common good, I mean, your writing and declaring your mind on any profitable ſubject.

Sect. 2. That which qualifies me more than ſome others, to evacuate the force of this one reaſon of yours, and makes me willing to attempt it, though not to appear in oppoſition to any other paſſage, that ever you have written, is the true friendſhip that hath paſſed between us, and the ſweet converſation that for ſome time we enjoyed, without any allay or unequableneſs, ſharp word, or unkind, or jealous thought. The remembrance whereof aſſures me unqueſtionably, that you and I may engage in this queſtion, as far as either of us ſhall think profitable, without any the leaſt beginning of a quarrel, and then that will competently be removed from ſuch, as of which you cannot hope to ſee an end.

Sect. 3. And before I go any farther, I appeal to your own judgment, whether herein I do not at leaſt ſpeak probably, and then whether it were not a miſpriſion, which you are in all reaſon to depoſite, to apprehend ſuch inſuperable difficulties or impoſſibilities at a diſtance, which when they are prudently approached, and examined, ſo preſently vaniſh before you. If this one reflexion do not convince you, it remains, that the ſpeculation be brought to practice, and exemplified to your ſenſes.

Sect. 4. You ſet out with a mention of ſome poſitions, wherein, you ſay, Divines, though of contrary judgments, do yet all agree. And then it is not credible that you and I ſhould be ſo ſingular, as to differ in them endleſly; of this number you propoſe five, 1. That the will of man is free in all his actions. 2. That very many things in the world happen contingently. 3. That God from all eternity foreſeeth all, even the moſt free and contingent events. 4. That whatſoever God foreſeeth ſhall infallibly come to paſs. 5. That ſinners are converted by the effectual working of God's grace. Of each of theſe you ſay we have from Scripture, Reaſon and Experience, as good and full aſſurance, as can be deſired for the ẽn, or truth of them, that they are ſo.] And I who fully ſubſcribe to the undoubted truth of each of the Propoſitions, and do it alſo upon the very ſame three grounds (of Scripture, Reaſon and Experience) which you mention, need not the interceſſion of our friendſhip to render it impoſſible to give you any the leaſt trouble of ſo much as explaining your ſenſe in any of theſe. Five Poſitions agreed on by all.

Sect. 5. Next, when you reſolve, that all the difficulty is about the nũs (referring that to no more than three heads) 1. How to reconcile the certain futurition of what God foreſeeth, with the liberty of the rational creature, and the contingency of caſual effects, as they proceed from inferiour cauſes. 2. In what manner or meaſure the effectual Grace of God cooperateth and concurreth with the free will of man, in the converſion of a ſinner. 3. How to cut ſo even a thread, as to take the whole of what we doe amiſs to our ſelves, and leave the whole glory of what we doe well to his grace.] You are again as ſecure as any amulet can make you, that this reſolution of abbreviating the Controverſies, and confining them to theſe few heads, ſhall never engage you in the leaſt degree of Debate: And then I ſhall challenge you to feign, how it can remain poſſible, without contradicting ones ſelf (which ſtill is not quarrelling with you) to engage you in any uneaſie contention, unleſs it be on one of theſe three heads, and when I have by promiſe obliged my ſelf, which now I do, not to raiſe any Diſpute, or attempt to enſnare or intangle you in any of theſe three, you have then nothing to retract but your fears, to which if I tell you, you cannot adhere, diſcerning a ſure and near period to that which you apprehended endleſs, this is all the victory I ſhall project, or be capable of in this matter. Three heads of difficulty.

Sect. 6. Of the firſt of theſe three Difficulties, the reconciling the certain futurition of what God foreſees, with the liberty of the rational creature, and the contingency of caſual effects, It falls out, that you have in your ſhorter Of reconciling Preſcience with Liberty of Contingency.

ſhorter Letter, dated Apr. 8. given that account, which evidenceth it to be, in your opinion, no invincible difficulty; your words are theſe, [That God's preſcience layeth no neceſſity at all upon any event, but that yet all events, as they are foreſeen of God, ſo ſhall they certainly and infallibly come to paſs, in ſuch ſort as they are foreſeen, elſe the knowledge of God ſhould be fallible, which certainty of the event may in ſome ſort be called neceſſity, to wit, conſequentis or ex hypotheſi, according as all the moſt contingent things are neceſſary, when they actually exiſt, which is a neceſſity infinitely diſtant from that which predetermination importeth.] This I take to be ſo clear an explication of that difficulty, and ſo ſolid a determining of the τὸ πῶς, the manner of reconciling preſcience with contingence, that as I fully conſent to it in every part of your period, ſo I doubt not but the laſt part alone hath made it as intelligible to any ordinary underſtanding, as whole Books of Philoſophers have attempted to do.

Sect. 7. For God's preſcience from all eternity being but the ſeeing every thing that ever exiſts, as it is, contingents, as contingents, neceſſary, as neceſſary, can neither work any change in the object, by thus ſeeing it, (convert a contingent into a neceſſary) nor it ſelf be deceived in what it ſees, which it muſt be, if any thing in proceſs of time ſhould be otherwiſe, than from all eternity God ſaw it to be.

Sect. 8. I was lately adviſed with by a Divine, to me unknown, but one that ſeems to be a man of good learning, about the diſtinction frequently made in this matter, betwixt inevitably and infallibly, and my anſwer and replies to his ſeveral objections, (becauſe I would demonſtrate the perfect accordance betwixt you and me in this, which within this year or two is put into a very grave attire, and revered as a great difficulty) I will give you at large by way of Appendage at the end of this Letter, having by hap a copy retained by me, and though it coſt you ſome minutes to ſurvey them, yet I know your patience of all ſuch exerciſes ſo well, that I doubt not of your willingneſs to be thus detained by me, which yet here you ſhall not, loco non ſuo.

Of the manner and meaſure of the cooperation of Effectual Grace with the free will of man.

Sect. 9. Then for the ſecond, In what manner and meaſure the effectual Grace of God cooperateth, or concurreth with the free will of man in his converſion] you ſeem to me to have given a punctual account of each part of that alſo, in the ſaid ſecond Letter, in theſe words, That God worketh not by his Grace irreſiſtibly, but yet ſo effectually on thoſe whom he hath ex beneplacito appointed to ſalvation, in ordering the means, occaſions and opportunities with ſuch congruity to that end, as that de facto it is not finally reſiſted] Here it is evident your reſolution comes home to each term in the difficulty; For if effectual Grace work not irreſiſtibly, then we ſee in what manner it cooperates with the free will of man, viz. ſo as it ſtill remains poſſible for him to reſiſt it. And if the effectualneſs of his working conſiſt in ordering the means, occaſions, and opportunities with ſuch congruity, &c. then as that ſtateth the meaſure of the cooperation (the onely ſecond part of the difficulty) and doth it expreſly in Biſhop Overal's way, ſo this ſuppoſeth Grace ſufficient to converſion and ſalvation to be given to thoſe, who are not converted, and ſaved, quite contrary to the three grand pretenſions of Doctor Twiſs, the Supralapſarians, and Sublapſarians, and whether it be true or no, is preſently freed from all the odious conſequences charged on the ſeveral Schemes of the Antiremonſtrants, and ſo may ſafely be granted, or not oppoſed by them, who yet want evidence of Scripture to eſtabliſh it, and ſo this is not likely to bring any uneaſie engagement upon you.

How to attribute all good to God, and evil to our ſelves.

Sect. 10. And then as there remains no more difficulties, but the third, ſo, if you mark it, the grounds are already laid, whereby that is unqueſtionably reſolved, for having granted that God gives ſufficient Grace, and yet, when he cooperates moſt effectually, he doth it not irreſiſtibly, this is the very thred you ſeek to cut by, ſo as to devolve the whole blame of all our miſcarriages on our ſelves, and the entire glory and praiſe of all our κατορθώματα, good performances, or good ſucceſſes on his Grace. Were any of us ſo left or paſt by, as to be denied ſufficient grace, and yet deſtined to periſh, merely through want of neceſſaries; the whole blame could not rationally fall on our ſelves, it could not be ſaid of Chriſt's yoke, that it were [a] eaſie, or his [b] Commandment not far from us, the fault that was found with the Moſaical œconomy, Heb. 8. 8. and which made another (the Evangelical) neceſſary, would ſtill lie againſt this, viz. that men were not enabled to perform what was required, and yet the non-performance eternally revenged on many of them. But ſufficient Grace being tendred by God, and by no default, but their own, proving ineffectual, the entire blame falls unavoidably on thoſe, who do not thus open to him that knocks, ſo receive, as to make uſe of it, but reſiſt, or grieve, or quench what was ſo mercifully deſigned, and might have been improved by the humble and diligent receivers unto their greateſt advantages.

[a] Matth. 11.
[b] Rom. 10.

Sect. 11. On the other ſide, if our nature being univerſally corrupted by Adam's fall, all poſſibility of riſing out of the grave of ſin be the effect and benefit of the Grace, as that is of the death of Chriſt, if it be God that worketh in us both to will and to doe, of his good pleaſure, the firſt by his preventing, the ſecond by his aſſiſting Grace, and both thoſe bottom'd merely in his εὐδοκία good pleaſure, nothing in us any way meriting the firſt act, or purpoſe of Giving Grace, any farther than our wants and miſeries rendred us the proper objects of his compaſſions and reliefs; and the ſubſequent aids in like manner challengable, onely from his promiſe, and the purport of the parable of the Talents, of giving to him that hath, rewarding the uſe of the lower, with the gift of an higher degree of Grace, then ſtill is this, the attributing nothing to our ſelves, but demerits, and provocations, and giving the whole glory to God.

Sect. 12. Having gone thus far without any conſiderable diſagreement, about the τὸ πῶς, how to reconcile theſe three ſeeming repugnances, wherein you apprehended the greateſt difficulty to lie, and being hereby, as by ſo many poſtulata accorded between us, competently provided and furniſhed of a ſtandard, and umpire, (in caſe any light difference ſhould ariſe) what objection can Saint Paul's Ὦ βάθος, Rom. 11. 33. (belonging expreſly to another matter, the cutting off the obdurate, and gathering all perſwaſible believing Jews and Gentiles, and no way applicable to this) interpoſe, why we ſhould not proceed together to the conſideration of the Doctrine of Decrees, as it hath been variouſly debated by others, and by you perſpicuouſly recapitulated in the proceſs of your papers?

Saint Paul's O the depth.

An Hiſtory of Doctour Sanderſon's thoughts in theſe points.

Sect. 13. To this therefore I preſume of your good leave that we now proceed, and whereas you have prudently choſen to begin with an hiſtory of your own thoughts on this ſubject, which you have laid down with great particularity, I ſhall ſet out with a bare tranſcript of that, which will need no comment of mine, to render it uſefull to the Reader, in diſcovering to him the true and ſole original of thriving

(for

(for ſome time) of thoſe Doctrines among us, and how ſo many of our Church came to be ſeaſoned with them, and in giving him a but neceſſary caution for the laying the grounds of the ſtudy of Divinity in the writings of the ancient Church, rather than in our modern ſyſtemes and Inſtitutions. Your words are theſe,

Sect. 14. When I began to ſet my ſelf to the Study of Divinity as my proper buſineſs, (which was after I had the degree of Maſter of Arts, being then newly xxi. years of age) the firſt thing I thought fit for me to doe, was to conſider well of the Articles of the Church of England, which I had formerly read over twice, or thrice, and whereunto I had ſubſcribed. And becauſe I had then met with ſome Puritanical Pamphlets written againſt the Liturgy, and Ceremonies; although moſt of the Arguments therein were ſuch as needed no great skill to give ſatisfactory anſwers unto, yet for my fuller ſatisfaction (the queſtions being de rebus agendis, and ſo the more ſuitable to my proper inclination) I read over with great diligence and no leſs delight that excellent piece of Learned Hooker's Eccleſiaſtical Polity. And I have great cauſe to bleſs God for it that ſo I did, not onely for that it much both cleared and ſettled my judgment for ever after in very many weighty points, (as of Scandal, Chriſtian Liberty, Obligation of Laws, Obedience, &c.) but that it alſo proved (by his good providence) a good preparative to me (that I ſay not Antidote) for the reading of Calvin's Inſtitutions with more caution than perhaps (otherwiſe) I ſhould have done. For that Book was commended to me, as it was generally to all young Scholars in thoſe times, as the beſt and perfecteſt ſyſteme of Divinity, and fitteſt to be laid as a ground-work in the ſtudy of that profeſſion. And indeed being ſo prepared as is ſaid, my expectation was not at all deceived; in the reading of thoſe Inſtitutions. I found, ſo far as I was then able to judge, the method exact, the expreſſions clear, the ſtyle grave, equal and unaffected: his Doctrine for the moſt part conform to S. Auguſtine's, in a word, the whole work very elaborate, and uſefull to the Churches of God in a good meaſure; and might have been (I verily believe) much more uſefull, if the honour of his name had not given ſo much reputation to his very errours. I muſt acknowledge my ſelf to have reaped great benefit by the reading thereof. But as for the queſtions of Election, Reprobation, Effectual Grace, Perſeverance, &c. I took as little notice of the two firſt, as of any other thing contained in the book; both becauſe I was always afraid to pry much into thoſe ſecrets, and becauſe I could not certainly inform my ſelf from his own writings, whether he were a Supralapſarian (as moſt ſpeak him, and he ſeemeth often to incline much that way) or a Sublapſarian, as ſundry paſſages in the Book ſeem to import. But giving my ſelf moſtly ſtill to the ſtudy of Moral Divinity, (and taking moſt other things upon truſt, as they were, in a manner generally taught both in the Schools and Pulpits in both Univerſities) I did for many years together acquieſce, without troubling my ſelf any farther about them, in the more commonly received opinions concerning both theſe two, and the other points depending thereupon. Yet in the Sublapſarian way ever, which ſeemed to me of the two, the more moderate, rational and agreeable to the goodneſs, and juſtice of God: for the rigid Supralapſarian doctrine could never find any entertainment in my thoughts from firſt to laſt. But MDCXXV. a Parliament being called, wherein I was choſen one of the Clerks of the Convocation for the Dioceſe of Lincoln, during the continuance of that Parliament (which was about four months, as I remember) there was ſome expectation that thoſe Arminian points (the onely queſtions almoſt in agitation at that time) ſhould have been debated by the Clergy, in that CONVOCATION. Which occaſioned me (as it did ſundry others) being then at ſome leiſure, to endeavour by ſtudy and conference to inform my ſelf, as throughly and exactly in the ſtate of thoſe Controverſies, as I could have opportunity, and as my wit would ſerve me for it. In order whereunto, I made it my firſt buſineſs to take a ſurvey of the ſeveral different opinions concerning the ordering of God's Decrees, as to the ſalvation or damnation of men; not as they are ſuppoſed to be really in Mente divina (for all his Decrees are eternal and therefore coeternal, and ſo no priority or poſteriority among them,) but quoad noſtrum intelligendi modum, becauſe we cannot conceive or ſpeak of the things of God, but in a way ſuitable to our own finite condition, and underſtanding: Even as God himſelf hath been pleaſed to reveal himſelf to us in the holy Scriptures by the like ſuitable condeſcenſions and accommodations. Which opinions, the better to repreſent their differences to the eye, uno quaſi intuitu, for their more eaſie conveying to the underſtanding by that means, and the avoiding of confuſion and tedious diſcourſings, I reduced into five Schemes or Tables, much after the manner as I had uſed to draw Pedigrees (a thing which I think you know I have very much fanſied, as to me of all others the moſt delightfull recreation) of which Scheme, ſome ſpecial friends, to whom I ſhewed them, deſired copies: who, as it ſeemeth, valuing them more than I did (for divers men have copies of them, as I hear, but I do not know that I have any ſuch my ſelf) communicated them farther, and ſo they are come into many hands. Thoſe are they which Doctour Reynolds, in his Epiſtle prefixed to Maſter Barlees Correptory Correction, had taken notice of. Having all theſe Schemes before my eyes at once, ſo as I might with eaſe compare them one with another, and having conſidered of the conveniences and inconveniences of each, as well as I could, I ſoon diſcerned a neceſſity of quitting the Sublapſarian way, of which I had a better liking before, as well as the Supralapſarian, which I could never fanſie.

Sect. 15. Thus far your hiſtory, which, I verily believe to have perfect truth in every ſtep of it, without any diſguiſe or varniſh, and ſo I paſs from it without any farther Reflexions.

Sect. 16. Next then follows your diſtincter view of the ſeveral ways, which have been embraced by thoſe of the Antiremonſtrant perſwaſion, and the motives on which you were forced to diſſent and depart from each of them, and to this I am obliged to attend you κατὰ πόδα. And the ways being eſpecially three, the method of greateſt advantage will be to begin with a tranſient view of thoſe, each of which you with great reaſon reject, and to ſet Doctour Twiſſe's firſt (though it came laſt into the world and adorn'd it ſelf with the ſpoils of the other two) becauſe that ſets the object of Election higher, than the other do, homo creabilis, man conſidered before he is created. His deſign and Scheme you have perſpicuouſly drawn, thus, [That God making his own Glory the onely end of all other his decrees, all theſe decrees of creating man, of permitting ſin, of ſending Chriſt, of preaching the Goſpel, of Electing ſome, of Reprobating others, and the reſt, make up one entire coordinate Medium, conducing to that one End, and ſo the whole ſubordinate to it, but not any one part, or joint thereof ſubordinate to any other of the ſame.] Againſt this, your objection I profeſs to be very convincing, taken from his own beloved axiome, ſo oft repeated by him, (and borrowed from him, and built upon by others) that whatſoever is firſt in the intention, is laſt in the execution. For as it is moſt evident that of theſe his ſuppoſed coordinate decrees ſome are after others in execution (the fall after the creation, the coming of Chriſt after both, and ſo of the reſt) ſo if he will ſtand to his principle, he muſt, as you ſay, grant, that thoſe that were thus after any other in the execution, were in God's intention before before them, which will neceſſarily bring in a ſubordination among them, and ſo quite overthrow this (as you call it) new crutches of coordination.

D. Twiſs his way.

Cauſes of rejecting it.

Sect. 17. Your other cauſes of diſlike to His way are equally rational, 1. the falſeneſs of that his Logick Maxime, which he builds ſo much upon, which yet hath no certain truth, or other than caſual, but when it is applied to final cauſes, and the means uſed for the attaining any end. 2. The prodigiouſneſs of his other doctrine, that there are more degrees of bonity in damnato quàm annihilato, ([a] becauſe the bonitas entis) and ſo that it is better for the Creature to be in eternal miſery, than ſimply not to be; when Chriſt expreſly pronounceth the contrary of wicked men, that it had been better for them never to have been born, to have a milſtone about the neck, and to be caſt into the ſea, (a figure to repreſent annihilation) than to be involved in thoſe dangers that attend their ſins. 3. His reſolving God's Election of a man to life eternal to be [b] no act of his mercy, and likewiſe his [c] reprobating and ordaining to damnation to be no act of his Juſtice, but of his pleaſure.] A few ſuch Propoſitions as theſe are competent to blaſt and defame any cauſe, which requires ſuch aids, ſtands in need of ſuch ſupporters, and therefore you will be confident I concurr with you in rejection of that, though I think neither of us likely to undertake the travel of refuting of his whole work.

[b] L. 1. digr. 9.

[c] Ibid. digr. 10.

The Supralapſarians way, The Sublapſarians.

Sect. 18. Next then for the Supralapſarians, with whom the object of the decree is homo conditus, man created, not yet fallen, and the Sublapſarians, with whom it is Man faln, or the corrupt Maſs, your rejections and reaſons thereof are twined together, and are eſpecially two, which you juſtly call very weighty, and ſo I ſuppoſe they will be deem'd by any man, that ſhall conſider the force of them, without prejudice, I ſhall therefore ſet them down from your letter in your own words.

Reaſons againſt both.

Sect. 19. The firſt reaſon is, becauſe though it might perhaps be defenſible, as to the juſtice of God, in regard of his abſolute power over his own creature, yet it ſeems very hardly reconcileable with the goodneſs of God, and his exceeding great love to mankind, as they are plentifully and paſſionately ſet forth in his holy word, to decree the eternal damnation of the greater part of mankind, for that ſin, and for that ſin onely which was utterly and naturally impoſſible for him to avoid; for the Decree of Reprobation according to the Sublapſarian Doctrine, being nothing elſe but a mere preterition or non-election of ſome perſons whom God left, as he found them, involved in the guilt of the firſt Adam's tranſgreſſion, without any actual perſonal ſin of their own, when he withdrew ſome others, as guilty as they, without any reſpect to Chriſt the ſecond Adam, it muſt needs follow that the perſons ſo left are deſtin'd to eternal miſery, for no other cauſe, but this onely, that Adam ſome thouſand years ſince did eat the forbidden fruit, and they being yet unborn could not help it.

Sect. 20. The other reaſon was, becauſe the Scripture not onely ſaith expreſly, that God hath choſen us in Chriſt before the foundation of the world, Eph. 1. 4, 5. and conſequently the decree of ſending Chriſt muſt be precedaneous to that of Election, but alſo doth every where, and upon all occaſions hold forth the death of Chriſt, as intended by God for the benefit of mankind, in the utmoſt extent [the world, the whole world, mankind, every man, &c.] and not for the benefit of ſome few onely, the reſt by an antecedent peremptory decree excluded. To which it would be conſequent, that according to the tenure of (the more moderate of theſe) the Sublapſarians doctrine, Jeſus Chriſt the Judge at the laſt day, when he ſhould proceed to pronounce ſentence upon the damned, ſhould beſpeak them to this effect, Ite maledicti, voluit enim Pater meus pro beneplacito, ut Adam peccato ſuo vos perderet, noluit ut ego ſanguine meo vos redimerem, Go ye curſed, for my Father of his mere pleaſure will'd that Adam by his ſin ſhould deſtroy you, will'd not that I by my bloud ſhould redeem you; the very thought whereof (you ſay) your ſoul ſo much abhorr'd, that you were forced to forſake that opinion of the Sublapſarians, (having, as you profeſs, never fanſied the Supralapſarians) and conclude it unſafe to place the decree of Election before that of ſending Chriſt.

Sect. 21. Theſe two reaſons of changing your judgment, are, I confeſs, ſo worthy of a conſidering man, who makes God's revealed will his Cynoſure, and doth not firſt eſpouſe doctrines of men, and then catch at ſome few obſcure places of Scripture, to countenance them, nor makes his retreat to the abyſs of God's unfathomable Counſels, as the reaſon of (that which is its contradictory) his attempting to fathome and define them, that I doubt not but the tendering of them to all diſpaſſionate ſeekers of truth, that have not ſome intereſts to ſerve by adhering peremptorily and obſtinately to their prepoſſeſſions, will be of the ſame force to diſabuſe and extort from them the ſame confeſſions, which they have from you, cauſing them fairly to depoſite theſe two Schemes, and either not to define at all, or to ſeek out other ſolider Methods, and more Catholick Grounds of defining; and if the wiſe heathen were in the right,

Virtus eſt Vitium fugere, & ſapientia prima

this will be ſome degree of proficiency, which they that ſhall with unſpeakable joy have tranſcribed from you, will alſo have temptation to accuſe your fears, or warineſs, that they received not this leſſon ſooner from you, eſpecially when they are told, what here you expreſs, that theſe have been your thoughts, ever ſince the year, 1625. i. e. 34. years ſince, which is an age or generation in the Scripture-uſe of the word.

Sect. 22. That none may be any longer deprived of this means of their conviction, or permitted to think or teach ſecurely and confidently, and as in accord with you, what you profeſs your ſoul thus long to have abhorred the very thoughts of, I deſire you will at length communicate your thoughts your ſelf, or elſe allow this letter of mine to be your αὐτοψία and doe it for you, under ſome teſtimony of your full approbation of this your ſenſe.

Sect. 23. But all this, thus far advanced, is but the rejection of the ſeveral erroneous ways, and onely the negative part of your thoughts, which yet, by the way let me tell you, is fully ſufficient both to the peace of Churches, and of particular ſouls; If the erroneous ways be rejected, from whence all the miſapprehenſions of God, and ill conſequences thereof flow, the Church is competently ſecured from tares, and then what need expreſs articles, and poſitive definitions come in to her reſcue?

The negative part ſufficient to Peace, &c.

Our Churches moderation. The King's Declaration in order to Peace.

Sect. 24. This I ſuppoſe the reaſon both of our Churches Moderation in framing the Article of Predeſtination, and of our late King's Declaration, in ſilencing the debate of the queſtions. For if by theſe methods the Church could but have prevailed to have the definitions of the ſeveral pretenders forgotten, all all men contenting themſelves, as our Article preſcribes, with the promiſes of God, as they are declared in Scripture, (which ſure are Univerſal and conditionate, not abſolute and particular) the turmoil and heat, and impertinence of Diſputes had been prevented, which now goes for an engagement in God's cauſe, the bare fervour and zeal in which is taken in commutation for much other piety, by many the moſt eager contenders. The doctrines being deemed doctrines of God, are counted evidences of ſanctified men, and affix the cenſure of carnality on oppoſers, and from hence come bitter envyings, railings, and at the leaſt evil ſurmiſings, and theſe are moſt contrary to the outward peace of a Church or Nation.

Good life.

Sect. 25. And for particular mens ſouls, if the rigid doctrines be found apt to cool all thoſe mens love of God, who have not the confidence to believe themſelves of the number of the few choſen veſſels, and to beget ſecurity and preſumption in others, who have conquered thoſe difficulties, and reſolved that they are of that number, and to obſtruct induſtry and vigorous endeavours, and fear of falling, and ſo to have malignant influences on practice, yet ſeeing it is the believing the Antiremonſtrant Schemes (one or other of them) to be the truth of God, which lies under theſe ill conſequences, the bare laying them aſide, leaves every man indiſpenſably under the force of Chriſt's commands to diſciples, terrours to the unreformed, and conditional (moſt expreſly conditional) promiſes to all; and thoſe being ſubſtantially backed with the firm belief of all the Articles of the Creed, particularly of the judgment to come, are by the Grace of God abundantly ſufficient to ſecure Evangelical obedience, the true foundation of peace to every Chriſtian ſoul, and therefore I ſay, eſt aliquid prodire tenus, your negative part, if there were no more behind, will be of ſovereign uſe to all that have been ſeduced into any liking of thoſe errours, which are by a man of your moderation and judgment, in deſpight of contrary prepoſſeſſions, on reaſons ſo convincing and perſpicuous, rejected.

Sect. 26. But in the ſpace of thirty four years, though you have permitted your genius to lead you to other ſtudies (which if your rejections be granted, I ſhall willingly confeſs to be more univerſally profitable, than any minuter ſearches into the decrees) thoſe of moral or practical Divinity, yet it ſeems you have not liv'd ſuch an obſtinate Recluſe from the diſputes and tranſactions of men, but that occaſions you have met with to excite your faculties, to wade a little farther into the Poſitive part of theſe Doctrines: and indeed it is hard to conceive how a man can have ſpent ſo many hours, as the Survey of Dr. Twiſſe's Vindiciæ Gratiæ, were it never ſo ſlight and deſultory, muſt have coſt you, without ſome other reflexions, beſides thoſe of bare averſation to his Hypotheſes.

Sect. 27. To theſe you at length proceed, propoſing them with difference, owning ſome of them, as your preſent thoughts, and opinion, whilſt in others you profeſs to be purely ſceptick, and to propoſe them onely as conjectures, that ſeem to you, in the mean time not improbable, untill you meet with ſome other more ſatisfactory. And in making this difference I fully accord with you, diſcerning that undeniable evidence of grounds in the former, which is not ſo readily diſcoverable in the latter. I ſhall therefore follow your direction herein, and rank theſe ſeverally, ſetting down thoſe which you own as your opinion firſt, and afterward, with that note of difference, proceed to your Conjectures.

Difference between Opinions and Conjectures.

Sect. 28. Concerning the Decrees of Election and Reprobation, your preſent opinion is contained in theſe three propoſitions (prefaced with two more, which are but the diſavowing the three ways of Maſſa nondum condita, condita ante lapſum, & corrupta.)

Three Propoſitions concerning God's Decrees,

Sect. 29. I. That man being made upright, and ſo left in manu conſilii ſui (God permitting him to act according to that freedom of will wherewith as a reaſonable creature he had endowed him) did by his own voluntary diſobedience, through the cunning of Satan, tempting him thereunto, fall away from God, caſt himſelf into a ſtate of ſin and miſery, under the bondage of Satan, without any power, poſſibility, or ſo much as deſire to recover himſelf out of that wretched condition; All which God did decree not to hinder, as purpoſing to make uſe thereof, as a fit occaſion for the greater manifeſtation of his power, wiſedom, goodneſs, mercy, juſtice, &c. Of this my opinion is, that it is, in every branch of it, ſo undeniably founded in the expreſs affirmations of holy Writ, that there can be no doubt of it to any Chriſtian.

Man's Fall.

Sect. 30. II. That man being thus faln, God out of his infinite compaſſion to his creature, made after his own image (and that Satan might not finally triumph in ſo rich a conqueſt, if the whole maſs of mankind ſhould periſh) decreed to ſend his onely begotten Son Jeſus Chriſt into the world, to undertake the great work of our Redemption, and to ſatisfie his juſtice for ſin, that ſo notwithſtanding the ſame, the whole maſs of mankind loſt by the fall of the firſt Adam, might be reſtored to a capability of ſalvation, through the mercy of God, and the merits of Jeſus Chriſt, the ſecond Adam.

The giving of Chriſt for Mankind.

In this, compared with what you before ſaid, and afterwards add, I diſcern your full agreement to the words of our Church-Catechiſm, as thoſe are exactly conſonant to the manifold teſtimonies of ſacred Writ, that Chriſt died for, and thereby redeemed all mankind; your words being not (to my apprehenſion) capable of any of thoſe evaſions, that others are willing to reſerve themſelves in this buſineſs, as of his dying ſufficiently, but not intentionally for all, for that χρησφύλον is ſuperſeded by your words of God's ſending Chriſt, &c. that ſo mankind, &c.] which muſt needs import his unfeigned intention, that mankind ſhould be reſtored to a real capability of ſalvation, which is not with truth affirmable, if any one individual of that whole kind he abſolutely paſſed by, or left, or excluded from his part in this reſtauration, and capability of ſalvation, which yet we muſt reſolve many millions to be, if that which is perfectly neceſſary to the recovery of thoſe which were ſo totally loſt, as your former propoſition truly ſuppoſed, be not really and effectually made up to them by Chriſt. And as in this full latitude I am obliged to underſtand you, ſo I wiſh not any more pregnant words to expreſs it, than thoſe which you have choſen.

Sect. 31. III. That man having by his fall rendred himſelf uncapable of receiving any benefit from the Covenant made with him in his firſt Creation, God was graciouſly pleaſed to enter into a new Covenant with mankind, founded in his Son Jeſus Chriſt, conſiſting of Evangelical but conditional Promiſes, of granting remiſſion of ſins, and everlaſting life, upon the condition of faith in Chriſt, repentance from dead works, and new obedience, and gave commandment that the ſaid Covenant by the preaching of the Goſpel ſhould be publiſhed throughout the world, this, you ſay, you conceive to be that which the Arminians call the general decree of Predeſtination, but is rejected by the Calviniſts,]

niſt is,] And that all theſe Decrees are (according to our weak manner of underſtanding the way of God's counſels, ſalvâ coexiſtentiâ & præſentialitate rerum omnium in mente divina ab æterno) antecedent to the Decrees of Election and Reprobation.

To this alſo I fully aſſent, both as to the truth, and fulneſs of the expreſſion in every part, eſpecially in that of God's entring with mankind (without any reſtraint) the new Covenant, founded in Chriſt: of the conditionateneſs of the promiſes of that new Evangelical Covenant: of repentance and new obedience, together with faith in Chriſt, making up that complete condition: of the antecedency of this Covenant in Chriſt, (and the command of publiſhing it throughout the world) to the decrees of Election and Reprobation: which ſeems to me to be expreſly ſet down from Chriſt's words, Mark 16. 15, 16. And he ſaid unto them, Go ye into all the world, and preach the Goſpel to every creature, he that believeth and is baptized, ſhall be ſaved, he that believeth not, ſhall be damned.] which evidently founds thoſe two decrees in the precedaneous preaching, and mens receiving or rejecting of the Goſpel.

The Decree of publiſhing the Goſpel to all the world.

Sect. 32. And when the Goſpels are all ſo expreſs in ſetting down that command of Chriſt to his Apoſtles of preaching the Goſpel to all the world, to the whole Creation, i. e. the whole Gentile, as well as Jewiſh world, (and the travels of the Apoſtles witneſs their obedience to it) and when the command of Chriſt is equivalent with a decree, and his giving of that in time an evidence of its being by him predeſtin'd from all eternity, it is very ſtrange that this ſhould be denied or queſtioned by the Calviniſts, or the Arminians rejected by them, when in effect they do but repeat Chriſt's own words, who if he gave command to publiſh the Goſpel to all, then muſt the publiſhing of the Goſpel be matter of a general decree, there being no other ſo ſure a way of diſcerning what was ab æterno predeſtined by God in his ſecret counſel, as the Scriptures telling us what was by the Father, or Chriſt in time actually commanded.

Evangelical Obedience.

Sect. 33. Thus far and no farther reach thoſe which you own to be your preſent opinions, and pronounce of them, that you are ſo far convinced from the phraſes and expreſſions frequent in Scripture, that you cannot but own them as ſuch. And then let me tell you, it were very happy that all men would agree in theſe, and yet more happy, if inſtead of more curious enquires, they would ſit down, and betake themſelves uniformly and vigorouſly to that task, which theſe data bind indiſpenſably upon them, and which is of that weight, that it may well imploy the remainder of their lives to perform it to purpoſe, I mean the work of Evangelical obedience, the condition of the new Covenant, without which the capability of pardon and ſalvation, which was purchaſed for mankind in general and for every man, ſhall never be actuated to any.

Matters of Conjecture.

Sect. 34. Beyond theſe therefore what you add, you acknowledge to be but conjectures, which though to you they ſeem not improbable, yet you profeſs to maintain your ἐποχὴ or Scepticiſm in them. And if in any of theſe I ſhould, on the ſame terms of conjecture, or ſeeming probability, differ from you, this ſtill were fully to accord with you in the general, viz. the ſuſpenſion of belief, and proceeding no farther than conjectures in theſe things.

What the iſſue will be, ſhall now be ſpeedily experimented, by proceeding to a view of them, remembring ſtill that you propoſe them but as conjectures.

The firſt.

Sect. 35. The firſt is, That the object of the decrees of Election and Reprobation, as they are ſet forth in the Scripture, ſeemeth to you to be man preached unto, Thoſe being elected to eternal life, who receive Chriſt, as he is offer'd to them in the Goſpel, viz. as their Lord and Saviour, and thoſe reprobated, who do not ſo receive him.] Herein I not onely perfectly agree with you, but more than ſo, I do think it an unqueſtionable truth, which carries its evidence along with it, and ſo will be acknowledged by any that obſerves the limitation by you affixt to the ſubject of the Propoſition, the object of the decrees [as they are ſet forth in the Scripture] For he that ſhall but conſider, that the holy Scripture is a donative afforded us by God, and deſigned for our eternal advantages, not to enable us to judge of others, but our ſelves, not to diſcover all the unſearchable receſſes of his cloſet, or ſecret counſels (abſcondita Domino Deo noſtro) but to reveal to men thoſe truths, which themſelves are concern'd in, would make no difficulty to conclude, that the Scripture ſpeaks onely of thoſe, to whom it ſpeaks, and as the Apoſtle ſaith, 1 Cor. ver. 12. What hath he to doe to judge them that are without, leaving them wholly to God's judgment, ſo doth the Scripture declare God's dealing onely with thoſe, to whom the Scripture comes, to whom ſome way or other (whether by writing or preaching it matters not) the Goſpel of Chriſt is revealed.

The object of Scripture Election.

Sect. 36. This as it appears by innumerable evidences in the Scripture, ſo it is put beyond all diſpute by that even now recited Text, as Chriſt's farewell, Mark xvi. his commiſſion to his Apoſtles, and declaration of the fixed determin'd conſequences of it, an expreſs tranſcript of God's eternal deſtinations or decrees in that matter, Go into all the world, and preach the Goſpel to every creature, He that believeth and is baptized ſhall be ſaved, and he that believeth not ſhall be damned] In which words what can be the meaning of [ſhall be ſaved, and ſhall be damned] but this, that God hath decreed ſalvation and damnation to ſuch? Thoſe therefore are the object of thoſe divine decrees, who are the ſubject of that propoſition, and thoſe are evidently men preached to, of which ſome believe, and are baptized, and thoſe have their parts in the firſt decree, that of election to ſalvation, ſome reject the Goſpel, and believe not, and thoſe fall under the ſecond branch, that of rejection to Damnation.

All Scripture decrees conditionate.

Sect. 37. Againſt the evidence of this, no oppoſition can be made, and to this it is undeniably conſequent, that all the Decrees whereof Scripture treateth, are conditionate, receiving Chriſt as the Goſpel offers him, as Lord and Saviour, the former as well as the latter being the condition of Scripture-election, and the rejecting, or not receiving him thus, the condition of the Scripture-reprobation.

Temerity of introducing abſolute Decrees.

Sect. 38. As for any other which can be fanſied diſtant from this (and ſo all abſolute Election or inconditionate Reprobation) it muſt needs be reſolved to be the mere invention and fabrick of mens brains, without the duct of God's Spirit in Scripture, which if at leaſt it hold not a ſtrict analogy with that which the Scripture hath thus revealed to us, will never be excuſed from great temerity, and the ſin of dogmatizing, the rifling God's ſecrets, and ſetting up our own imaginations if not prejudices, for the oracles of God. If this were well thought of, it would infallibly ſet a period to all farther diſputes on this ſubject. And the Propoſition, which I have laſt ſet down from you, is ſo irrefragably convincing, that I hope it may be ſucceſsfull to ſo good an end, and all men that reade it, reſolve it their duty to preach no other Decrees of God from Scripture, but this that all that receive the Goſpel preached, and live according to the preſcript rule thereof, (for that is to receive Chriſt as there he is offered to them, as a Lord and Saviour) ſhall be ſaved, and all they that reject it, when it is thus revealed, or live in contradiction to the terms whereon it is eſtabliſhed, ſhall be damned. This would probably change curioſity into induſtry, unprofitable diſquiſitions into the ſearch and trying of our own ways, and working out our own ſalvation.

that

Sect. 39. To this propoſition, if it ſhall be granted, you annex two Corollaries, and I that have not onely yielded but challenged the undoubted truth of the Propoſition, can make no queſtion of the Corollaries. The firſt is this,

Sect. 40. That it will be impoſſible to maintain the Doctrine of Univerſal Grace in that manner as the Remonſtrants are ſaid to aſſert it, againſt the objection which is uſually made by their adverſaries, how evangelical Grace can be offer'd to ſuch nations or perſons, as never had the Goſpel preached unto them.]

Sect. 41. The truth of this Corollary (as of all other) muſt be judged of by the dependence from the Principle, the connexion it hath with the former propoſition; That ſpake of the Decrees, as they are ſet forth in Scripture, and of the condition required of them that are elected to ſalvation, receiving Chriſt preached, as he is offered in the Goſpel, and accordingly it is moſt evident, that they that will found their Doctrine on Scripture, muſt find not onely difficulty, but impoſſibility to maintain the gift of evangelical Grace (which I ſuppoſe to be a ſupernatural power to believe and obey the Goſpel) to thoſe, to whom the Goſpel hath never been revealed. What the Remonſtrants are ſaid to aſſert in this matter, I ſhall forbear to examine, becauſe I deſign not to engage in any controverſie at this time with any; onely as on one ſide it is evident, that their adverſaries can receive no benefit by the objection, the ſalvability of all to whom the Goſpel is preached, being as contrary to their Doctrine of onely the Elect, as it would be, if extended to the heathens alſo, all Chriſtians being not with them in the number of the Elect; ſo on the other ſide, I ſhould think it ſtrange, that in our preſent notion of Evangelical Grace, for a ſtrength from God to receive and obey the Goſpel preached, it ſhould, by the Remonſtrants, or any other, be affirmed from Scripture that it is given, or offered to thoſe to whom the Goſpel hath not been revealed: S. Paul ſtyles the Goſpel, the power of God unto ſalvation, and the preaching of it the διακονια πνευματος adminiſtration of the ſpirit, and indeed the ſpirit is in Scripture promiſed onely to them who believe in Chriſt, and therefore ſpeaking of what may be maintained by Scripture, and confining the ſpeech to Evangelical Grace, the Univerſality of it can no farther be by that maintained to extend, than to thoſe to whom the Goſpel is preached, for if Faith cometh by hearing, and hearing by the word, i. e. preaching the Goſpel, it muſt follow, they cannot believe, and ſo have not Evangelical Grace, or ſtrength to believe, without a Preacher.

Whether the Heathens have Evangelical Grace.

Sect. 42. And therefore I remember the Learned Biſhop of Sarisbury, Doctour Davenant in his Lent Sermon (I think the laſt he preached before the King) declared his opinion to be (as for Univerſal Redemption, ſo) for Univerſal Grace within the Church; and as for this he was, I think, by none accounted an Arminian, ſo I never heard any that was of the Remonſtrant perſwaſions, unſatisfied with the ſcantneſs of that declaration, but thought it as much, as, ſpeaking of Grace in the Scripture notion of it, Evangelical Grace, could with any reaſon be required of him.

Sect. 43. As for the ſtate and condition of heathens, to whom the Goſpel is not revealed, and yet it is no fault of theirs that it is not, as all thoſe that lived before Chriſt and many ſince, as it is evident the Scripture was not delivered to them, nor conſequently gave to us Chriſtians rules for the judging of them, ſo it is moſt reaſonable which you add in your ſecond Corollary, which is this,

Sect. 44. That into the conſideration of God's Decrees ſuch nations or perſons are not at all to be taken, as never heard of the Goſpel, but they are to be left wholly to the judgment of God, ſince he hath not thought fit to reveal to us any certainty concerning their condition, but reſerved it to himſelf, amongſt his other ſecret counſels, the reaſons of his wonderfull and unſearchable diſpenſations in that kind. To which I moſt willingly ſubſcribe in every tittle, and challenge it as the juſt debt to the force of that reaſon, that ſhines in it, that no man paſs fatal decretory ſentences on ſo great a part of mankind, by force of thoſe rules, which they never heard of, nor without hearing could poſſibly know that they were to be ſentenced by them. And this the rather upon four conſiderations which Scripture aſſures us of. Firſt, that as all men were dead in Adam, ſo Chriſt died for all, that were thus dead, for every man, even for thoſe that deny him, and finally periſh: which as it muſt extend and be intended by him, that thus taſted death for them, to the benefit of thoſe that knew him not (for if he died for them that deny him, why not for them that are leſs guilty, as having never heard of him, eſpecially when 'tis not the Revelation of Chriſt, to which the Redemption is affixt, but his Death) ſo the certain truth of this is moſt expreſly revealed and frequently inculcated in the Scripture (though nothing be there found of God's decrees concerning them) upon this ground eſpecially, that no perſon of what Nation ſoever ſhould have any prejudice to Chriſtian Religion, when it ſhould be firſt revealed to him, when he finds his intereſt ſo expreſly provided for by ſo gracious a Redeemer, who if he had not died for every man, 'twere impoſſible for any Preacher to aſſure an Infidel, that he died for him, or propoſe any conſtringent reaſon to him, why he ſhould believe on him for ſalvation. To this it is conſequent, that whatſoever God's unrevealed ways are, to deal with any heathen, what degree of repentance from dead works, obedience, or performance ſoever he accept from them, this muſt needs be founded in the Covenant made with mankind in Chriſt, which you have moſt truly eſtabliſhed, there being no other name under heaven, no ſalvation poſſible to lapſed man by any other Covenant; Which, being ſet in oppoſition to the firſt Covenant of perfect unſinning obedience, and therefore called a ſecond and Evangelical Covenant, on condition onely of ſincere obedience, of doing what by God's gift, purchaſed by Chriſt, men are enabled to doe, it follows ſtill, that whatſoever acceptation or mercy they, who never heard of Chriſt, can be imagined to have afforded them by God, muſt be conformable to the tenour of the Evangelical Covenant, and ſo to the praiſe of the Glory of that Grace, whereby whoſoever is accepted by God, is accepted in the beloved.

Of the condition of thoſe to whom the Goſpel is not revealed.

Four conſiderations concerning them. The firſt.

Sect. 45.

The ſecond. Sect. 45. The ſecond Conſideration is the analogy, which, in one reſpect, is obſervable between thoſe to whom the Goſpel is not revealed, and all children and Idiots within the pale of the Church; for although believing in Chriſt were ſuppoſed equally by the law of Scripture to be exacted of all, and ſo of both thoſe ſorts (nay by the intervention of the vow of Baptiſm to be more expreſly the obligation of thoſe that are baptized, than thoſe that are not) yet there is no reaſon producible to free the Chriſtian children and idiots from the blame of not believing, which will not with equal force be producible for thoſe heathens, to whom the Goſpel was never revealed, it being as impoſſible to ſee without the preſence of the object, as without the faculty of ſight, without the Sun, as without eyes, without the revelation of Chriſt, as without the intellective faculty; which if it be not part of the importance of that decree of heaven, Go and preach, and then he that believeth not ſhall be damned, yet it is fully accordant to it, and ſhews that that Text was not deſigned to give ſuffrage to the damnation of all but Chriſtians, which is all that your Corollary, or my obſervations have aſpired unto; to which it is yet farther neceſſarily conſequent, that theſe Scripture Decrees which you ſpeak of (and whoſoever ſpeaks of any other muſt be reſolved to ſpeak from ſome other dictate, than that of Scripture) compriſe not all men, no nor all baptized Chriſtians under them, being terminated onely in thoſe to whom the Goſpel is revealed, and thoſe certainly are not all that are brought into the world, or even to Baptiſmal new birth.

The third. Sect. 46. The third Conſideration is, that ſeeing the Scripture aſſures us, that they which have received more, of them more ſhall be required, and that he that knoweth and doeth not, ſhall be beaten with many ſtripes, this muſt needs advertiſe us, that whatever privileges Chriſtians may have beyond Heathens, this is not one, that a ſmaller degree of obedience and performances ſhall be accepted of them, than of Heathens would be, but the contrary, that to whom leſs is given, leſs will be required, according to that of S. Auguſtine, Ex eo quod non accepit, nullius reus eſt, No man is guilty from that which he hath not received.

De lib. Arbit. l. 3. c. 16.

The fourth. Sect. 47. The fourth Conſideration is, that God rewards thoſe that have made uſe of the ſingle talent, that loweſt proportion of Grace, which he is pleaſed to give; and the method of his rewarding is by giving them more grace, which as it is in ſome degree applicable to heathens, who have certainly the talent of natural knowledge, and are ſtrictly reſponſible for it, ſo if they uſe not that, but retain the truth in unrighteouſneſs, Rom. 1. 18. that makes their condition but the ſame with ours, (who are finally loſt alſo, and at the preſent have our talent taken away from us) if we make not the due uſe of it.

Sect. 48. This, 'tis viſible, hath befaln thoſe Nations who once had the Goſpel preacht to them, and after the knowledge of the truth, return'd to their heathen ſins, and ſo had their candleſtick taken from them (to which and not to God's primary denying them Evangelical Grace, their preſent Barbarity is to be imputed) And the onely concluſion which we can hence duly make, is the acknowledgment of God's juſt judgments on them, and reaſonable fear leſt he deal in like manner with us, if we tranſcribe their copy, imitate them in their demerits. Should God moſt juſtly thus puniſh this Nation at this time, could it either now or in future ages be reaſonable hence to argue againſt the Doctrine of Univerſal Grace, in caſe there were a concurrence of all other evidences for the truth of the Doctrine? Certainly it could not. In like manner then it cannot be reaſonable to argue thus from the like fate, and effects on other Nations.

Sect. 49. To which I may add, that Chriſt being, we know, in God's decree and promiſe, the Lamb ſlain from the beginning of the world, if this argument be now of force againſt the heathens, it muſt equally hold againſt all that underſtood no more of the Predictions of Chriſt, than the Pagans do now of the Hiſtory.

Sect. 50. And then it muſt, ſhould it have force, follow, not onely that the Sacrifice of Chriſt was intended to be of avail to none but the Jews, to whom onely the Oracles of God were committed, (which yet you acknowledge was intended to all) but alſo that as far as we have ways of judging, a very ſmall part of thoſe Jews received the ſalvifick Grace of Chriſt, if it were confined and annext to the revelation and belief of him; For if we may judge of other ages by that wherein Chriſt appeared, the Prophecies of the Crucified Meſſias were very little underſtood by that people. All this makes it more prudent, and rational, and pious to ſearch our own ways, than to paſs ſentence on other men, which is the onely thing I have aimed at in theſe four Conſiderations.

The ſecond Conjecture an undoubted truth. Inward grace annexed to the Miniſtery of the Goſpel. Sect. 51. Your ſecond Propoſition, which you tender as a Conjecture, I cannot but own under an higher ſtyle of an evident truth of Scripture, It is this, That there is to the outward tender of Grace in the miniſtery of the Goſpel annexed an inward offer alſo of the ſame to the heart, by the ſpirit of God going along with his word, which ſome of the Schoolmen call auxilium Gratiæ generale, ſufficient in it ſelf to convert the ſoul of the hearer, if he do not reſiſt the Holy Ghoſt, and reject the Grace offer'd: which as it is grounded upon theſe words, Behold, I ſtand at the door and knock, and upon very many other paſſages of Scripture beſide, ſo it ſtandeth with reaſon, that the offer, if it were accepted, ſhould be ſufficient ex parte ſui to doe the work, which if not accepted, is ſufficient to leave the perſon, not accepting the ſame, unexcuſable] This I ſay I am obliged to aſſent to in the terms, and upon the double ground both of Scripture and reaſon, whereon you induce it. If there were but one text of Scripture ſo convincingly inferring it, that ſure would advance it above a barely probable Conjecture. But I think the whole tenour of the New Teſtament inforceth the ſame, and though you name but one, you ſay there are many other paſſages of Scripture, on which 'tis founded. I ſhall mention but two, 1. that of the Apoſtle who calls preaching the word, διακονια πνευματος the adminiſtration of the Spirit, which the Father expreſſes by verbum vehiculum Spiritus, the word is the chariot in which the Spirit deſcends to us, 2. that deſcription of reſiſting the holy ſpirit, which S. Stephen gives us, Act. 7. 51. by their being like the Jews, which perſecuted the Prophets which ſpake unto them, which concludes the holy ſpirit to be given with the preaching of the Goſpel, elſe how could the rejecting and perſecuting the one be the reſiſting of the other? So likewiſe though you mention but one reaſon, yet that is as conſtringent as many, nothing but ſufficiency of ſupernatural Grace being competent to render him, that is acknowledged naturally impotent, unexcuſable. And therefore deeming that abundantly confirmed to advance it above a diſputable disputable probleme, I proceed to the next Propoſition, the third, which you rank under the ſtyle of Conjectures, It is this,

Sect. 52. That becauſe the ſufficiency of this General Grace notwithſtanding, through the ſtrength of natural corruption, it might happen to prove uneffectual to all perſons, God vouchſafed out of the ſupereffluence of his goodneſs, yet ex mero beneplacito, without any thing on their part to deſerve it, to confer upon ſuch perſons as it pleaſed him to fix upon (without inquiring into under what qualifications, preparations or diſpoſitions conſidered) a more ſpecial meaſure of Grace which ſhould effectually work in them faith and perſeverance unto ſalvation] This (you ſay) you take to be the election eſpecially ſpoken of in the Scriptures, and if ſo, then the Decree of Reprobation muſt be nothing elſe but the dereliction or preterition of the reſt, as to that ſpecial favour of conferring upon them this higher degree of effectual Grace. Againſt this, you ſay, you know enough may be objected, and much more than you eſteem your ſelf able to anſwer, yet to your apprehenſion ſomewhat leſs than may be objected againſt either of the extreme opinions. The third Conjecture of effectual Grace and Scripture Election and Reprobation.

Sect. 53. Of this Propoſition, as being the firſt by you produced, to which your caution ſeems to be due, ſome things may in paſſing be fitly noted. Animadverſions on this Conjecture.

Firſt, that for the ſtating of that community which is here ſet down as the object of Election and Reprobation, and expreſt by a general ſtyle [all perſons] this Caution is neceſſarily to be taken in, that the propoſition is not to be interpreted in the utmoſt latitude, that the ſtyle [all perſons] is capable of, but as analogy with your former doctrine ſtrictly requires, for the generality of men preach'd to: and ſo neither belongs to heathens, nor to the Infants or Idiots, or uninſtructed among Chriſtians, but to thoſe that having the Goſpel revealed to them, and ſufficient grace to enable them to receive it, are yet left in the hand of their own counſel, whether they will actually receive it, or no. The firſt.

Sect. 54. Now of theſe (which is the ſecond thing to be obſerved in your Propoſition) it is manifeſt, that if (as you ſuppoſe both in the former, and in this Propoſition,) they have grace truly ſufficient afforded them, then they want nothing neceſſary to a ſaln weak ſinfull creature, to converſion, perſeverance and ſalvation, and if ſo, then by the ſtrength of this Grace, without addition of any more, they may effectually convert, perſevere and be ſaved; and then though what may be, may alſo not be, and ſo it be alſo poſſible that all that are thus preach'd to, and made partakers of this Grace, no one ſhall make uſe of it to theſe effects, yet this is but barely poſſible, and not rendred ſo much as probable, either upon any grounds of Scripture or Reaſon. In the Scripture there is no word revealed to that ſenſe, or, that I ever heard of, produced or applied to it, but on the contrary, in the Parable of the Talents (which ſeems to reſpect this matter particularly) they that received the Talents to negotiate with, did all of them, except one, make profit of them, and bring in that account to their Maſter, which received a reward, which is utterly unreconcileable with the hypotheſis of God's foreſeeing that the Talent of ſufficient Grace would be made uſe of by none that received no more than ſo. As for that one that made not uſe of it, all that is intimated concerning him, is, that if his ſhare comparatively was mean, yet by the Lord he is charged as guilty for not putting it into the bank, that at his coming he might receive his own with uſury, which certainly evinces, that that lazy ſervant is there conſidered as one that might have managed his ſtock as well as the reſt, and that that ſtock was improvable no leſs than the other, according to their ſeveral proportions, and ſo herein there is no difference taken notice of in favour to your Conjecture. The ſecond from Scripture.

And in Reaſon it hath no ſound of probability, that of ſo great a number of Chriſtians, ſufficiently furniſhed by God, no one ſhould make uſe of it to their ſouls health; 'tis evident in the Apoſtles preaching at Jeruſalem and elſewhere, that at the firſt propoſal of the truth of Chriſt to them, and the Doctrine of Repentance, whole multitudes received the Faith, and came in, and no doubt many of them proved true, and conſtant Chriſtians, and it is not amiſs to obſerve of the heads of Doctrine, which the Apoſtles agreed to publiſh in all their peregrinations, that they are of ſuch force (and were on that account pitcht on by them) as might reaſonably and probably, with the ſuppoſed concurrence of God's Grace, beget repentance, and new life in all, to whom they were preach'd over the whole world, (and then what the Apoſtles deemed a rational and probable means to that end, there is no reaſon or probability to think ſhould never in any produce this effect) according to that of Athanaſius, that the Faith conſeſt by the Fathers of Nice, according to holy Writ, is αὐτάρκης πρὸς ἀνατροπὴν πάσης δυσεβείας, οὖσαν ἡ εὐσεβείας ἐν Χριστῷ, ſufficient for the averting of all impiety, and the eſtabliſhment of all piety in Chriſt. To which may be applied that of S. Auguſtine of the Creed, Quæ pauca verba fidelibus nota ſunt, ut credendo ſubjugentur Deo, ut ſubjugati recte vivant, recte vivendo, cor mundent, corde mundo, quod credant, intelligant; Theſe few words are known to believers, that by believing, they may be ſubjugated to God, that by being ſubjugated, they may live well, that by living well they may cleanſe their hearts, that by cleanſing their hearts they may underſtand what they believe. And herein the all-wiſe providence and infinite mercy of God ſeems to be engaged, who in the Parable of his dealing with his Vineyard, Iſa. v. not onely expoſtulates, What could I have done more to my vineyard which I have not done] but alſo affirmeth that he looked it ſhould bring forth grapes, and as a farther evidence of that, built a wine-preſs, in expectation of its bearing fruit by ſtrength of what he had done to it, which could not well be affirmed by, or of God, if it were not probable and rational, that in ſome it ſhould have the deſired effect. And Reaſon. In Ep. ad Epictet. In libel. de fide & ſymbolo, in Tom. iii.

Sect. 55. And if what, on account both of Scripture and reaſon (the onely ways left us to judge by in this matter) is thus far removed from improbable, may be ſuppoſed to have any truth in it, i. e. if the ſufficient grace annexed to the authoriſed ſufficient means, have without farther addition, ever converted any, it then follows neceſſarily in the third place, that the Election and Dereliction now propoſed by you muſt have for its object not indefinitely (as before you ſet it) man preach'd unto, or all that part of mankind to whom the Goſpel is offered, and that Grace annexed thereto, but onely that portion of ſuch, as are not wrought upon, or who God in his infinite preſcience diſcerns would not be wrought upon effectually, and converted by that meaſure of ſufficient Grace, which he hath annext to the word preach'd. For without enquiring what proportion of the number of men preach'd unto may probably be placed in that rank (or without aſſuming any more, than that it is neither impoſſible And the unreconcileableneſs of this Conjecture with making man preach'd to the object of the Decrees.

nor improbable that there ſhould be ſuch a rank) of men converted, and perſevering by the ſtrength of that foreſaid ſufficient Grace, annexed to the word, the inference is undeniable, that all, whether few or many, that are of this rank (it being no-way probable there ſhould be none) ſhall certainly be ſaved by force of the ſecond Covenant, which decreed eternal life to all that ſhould believe on him and receive him, as the Goſpel tenders him, as their Lord and Saviour, and ſo cannot be compriſed in the number of them to whom this ſupereffluence of goodneſs is ſuppoſed to be vouchſafed, in the granting of which ex mero beneplacito your conjecture makes the Scripture-Election to conſiſt, and in the Derelict̃ion and Preterition of the reſt (in reſpect of that ſpecial favour) the Decree of Reprobation.

Sect. 56. The plain iſſue whereof is but this, that if this conjecture, thus explicated, be adhered to, then many not onely of Children, Idiots, heathen (formerly reſerved to God's ſecret judgments) but of adult baptized Chriſtians alſo, either are or may be ſaved, who are not of the number of the Scripture-Elect. Which whether it be reconcileable with the purport of thoſe places, which in Scripture ſeem to you to reſpect Election, or to favour this opinion, I muſt leave to farther conſideration, being as yet incompetent to interpoſe any judgment of it, becauſe I know not what thoſe places are which moſt ſeem to favour it.

The Doctrine of ſupereffluence of Grace to ſome, acknowledged.

Sect. 57. As for the Doctrine it ſelf, of ſupereffluence of Grace to ſome, (abſtracted from making it any account of God's Decrees of Election and Reprobation) It is ſuch as I can no-way queſtion, for certainly God being granted to give ſufficient Grace to all, there is no objection imaginable againſt this ſuper-abounding to ſome ex mero beneplacito; Nothing more agreeable to an infinite abyſs and unexhauſtible fountain of goodneſs, than ſuch ſupereffluence, and he that hath not his part in it, yet having his portion, and that ſuppoſed ſufficient, ought not to have an evil eye, to complain and murmur at this partiality, and inequality of diſtribution of God's goodneſs, or if he do, the words of the Parable of the Labourers in the Vineyard muſt here have place, Friend, I doe thee no wrong, did not I agree with thee for a peny, take that is thine, and go thy way, is it not lawfull for me to doe what I will with my own? Matt. xx. 13, 14, 15. And it is there obſervable, that all the occaſion of murmuring aroſe from the order there obſerved in accounting with, and paying the Labourers, beginning with them that came laſt into the Vineyard, for by that means they being allowed a days wages for an hours labour, the others expectation was raiſed to an higher pitch, than probably it would, if they had been paid, and diſcharged firſt, for then not ſeeing the liberality that others taſted of, they would in all probability have expected no more, than the hire for which they agreed; And then why ſhould ſo caſual a circumſtance, as the being paid laſt or firſt, have any influence on their minds, or tempt them to murmur at God's goodneſs, who from the nature of the thing had no leaſt temptation to it?

But this of ſupereffluence no part of the Covenant of Grace.

Sect. 58. Onely by the way it muſt be yielded to the force of that Parable, that that ſupereffluence of which ſome are there ſuppoſed to taſte, was no part of the Covenant of Grace, (his agreement with them being but in theſe words, Go into the Vineyard, and what is right ye ſhall receive, ver. 7.) but, above what his bargain or Covenant obligeth, of his good pleaſure, though, on the other ſide, it be obſervable, 1. That an allowable account is there given by thoſe men of their not coming ſooner into the Vineyard, and conſequently of their not bearing the heat of the day, in which all the diſproportion between them and others, all the ſeeming ſupereffluence is founded, viz. they were no ſooner called, or hired by any man, and 2. that by the application of the parable to the ἐσχάτους and πρώτους, to thoſe that came firſt, and thoſe that came later into the Apoſtleſhip, to Peter and Paul, there might ſtill be place for more abundant labouring in thoſe that came laſt, and ſo for reward, in proportion (though through mercy) to that more abundant labouring, according to the way of ſetting down the ſame Parable among the Jews in * Gemara Hieroſol. where the King's anſwer to the murmurers is, He in thoſe two hours hath laboured as much as you have done all the day.

* Cod. Berathoth.

Sect. 59. But without examining the Acts of God's munificence, according to any rules but thoſe of munificence, and again without inſiſting on the method which God himſelf ſeems to direct us to in this matter, in the Parable of the Talents, where the Rule is general, that to him that hath ſhall be given, and he ſhall have abundance, i. e. that the ſupereffluence of Grace is ordinarily proportioned to the faithfull diſcharge of former truſts, making uſe of the foregoing ſufficient Grace, there will be little reaſon to doubt, but that God out of his mere good pleaſure, without any deſert on our part, doth thus diſpenſe his favours to one, more than to another, to one ſervant five Talents, to another ten, but to all ſome, onely the difficulties will be, 1. whether it be not as poſſible, though not as probable, that the ſupereffluence of Grace may be reſiſted, as the lower, but ſufficient degree? and then, whether the condemnation be not the greater, there will be no doubt; Paul that is the moſt pregnant example of the ſupereffluence, is ſtill, under a woe, obliged to preach the Goſpel, and whilſt he preached to others, ſuppoſes it poſſible, that himſelf, if he do not bring his body in ſubjection, may become a caſtaway, and till he hath fought his good fight, and finiſh'd his courſe, and conſtantly kept the faith, we never find him confident of receiving his crown, which then he challenges from God's righteouſneſs, or fidelity; 2. whether the extraordinary favour of God, which ſome men receive, and by virtue of which, over and above the ſufficient Grace, they may be thought to be wrought on effectually, may not rather be imputed to God's ſpecial Providence, than his ſpecial Grace? ſo in Biſhop Overal's way it ſeems affirmable, for in his Scheme the effectualneſs ſeems to be attributed to the giving what is given, tempore congruo, at a time when (whether by ſickneſs, or by any other circumſtance of their ſtate) they are foreſeen by God to be ſo qualified and diſpoſed, that they ſhall infallibly accept Chriſt offered, on his own conditions, and ſo convert, and receive the ſeed into good ground, and ſo perſevere and be ſaved, when the ſame man, out of thoſe circumſtances, would not have been wrought on by the ſame means. And if this be it which you mean (as I doubt not but it is, and that herein you perfectly agree with Biſhop Overal) then I ſay the queſtion is, whether the ſeaſonable application or timing be not rather to be imputed to ſpecial Providence, the mercy of God's wiſe and gracious diſpoſal to thoſe men that are thus favoured, than to ſpecial Grace, as that ſignifies a higher degree of God's grace, than is that ſufficient meaſure, which is afforded to others; it being poſſible that an equal, nay a lower degree of Grace, being congruouſly timed and tendred, may prove effectual, when the like, nay an higher, at ano-

Difficulties concerning ſupereffluence.

I. Whether it be not Reſiſtible.

II. Whether it belong not rather to providence than Grace.

at another time, proves uneffectual. And though all acts of God's good providence may in ſome ſenſe be ſtyled acts of his Grace, and ſo extraordinary providences may be ſtyled ſpecial Graces, in which ſenſe, the ſtriking Paul in his journey to Damaſcus, and calling to him out of heaven with grace proportionable to that call, may fitly be called a work of God's ſpecial Grace; and ſo is every ſickneſs or other judgment, that is ſent to melt any, ſuppoſeable to have a proportionable, and that is an extraordinary and ſpecial Grace annext to it; and the providence, and ſo the grace is the greater, if it be applied tempore congruo, when there is no potent obſtacle or principle for reſiſtence; yet ſtill the queſtion is ſeaſonable, whether this be all that is meant by this ſpecial meaſure of Grace, which ſhall work effectually, or if more be meant, what ground there is for it in the Scripture.

Sect. 60. To this ſecond queſtion your advertiſement by letter hath given the ſatisfaction I expected, that you were not curious to conſider the diſtinction between the Grace and the providence of God, there being no neceſſity for ſo doing, as to your purpoſe, which was onely to expreſs your ſenſe that it muſt be the work of God (whether of Grace or Providence it matters not) that muſt doe the deed, and make the ſufficient Grace effectual. This anſwer I accept, and make no farther return to it; onely from the uncertainty of the former, as to any eſtabliſhment from Scripture-grounds, and ſo likewiſe of this latter, till it ſhall appear by any ſure word of promiſe to have any real influence on the matter in hand, there is way made for a third queſtion.

III. Whether this be it to which Election is determined.

Sect. 61. Whether granting the truth of all that is pretended for the ſupereffluence of God's goodneſs to ſome, this can fitly be defined the thing, whereto Election is determined, and whether all that have not their part in this, are in Scripture-ſtyle ſaid to be Reprobated. This I ſay, not to propoſe any new matter of diſpute, or to require anſwer to all that may be objected againſt this notion of Decrees, which you (and other very Learned and ſober men) have propoſed by way of conjecture onely, but rather to demonſtrate my concurrence with you, that this can amount no higher at moſt, than to a matter of conjecture.

Conſiderations from Scripture oppoſed to the former conjecture.

Sect. 62. And having ſaid this, I ſhall propoſe it to your impartial conſideration, I. Whether the Scripture ought not to be our guide in all even opining and conjecturing in ſuch matters, which are ſo much above our reaſon? II. Whether the Scripture do not furniſh us with theſe expreſs grounds, 1. that there are ſome ſort of auditours that come to Chriſt, become his Proſelytes, embrace the Goſpel, when 'tis preach'd unto them, that are ἱτοιμοι εἰς βασιλειαν τῦ Θεῦ, fit, or prepared, or diſpoſed for the kingdom of God, obedience to the Goſpel, πεπαγμενοι, diſpoſed for eternal life, on file for it (in oppoſition to others who are ὐκ ἀξιοι ζωῆς, ver. 46. not worthy of, meet, or qualified for the Evangelical ſtate) 2. that probity of mind is ſpecified to be this temper, a willingneſs to doe God's will, that (in the parable) of the good ground, and the honeſt heart meant by it. 3. That the Evangelical diſpenſations are governed by the maxim of habenti dabitur, to the humble he gives more grace, the poor are Evangelized, the children, and poor in ſpirit, of ſuch, and of them is the Kingdom of Heaven; and laſtly, that God hath choſen the fooliſh things of the world, the weak, the degenerous, the vilified, thoſe that are not, in oppoſition to the mighty, powerfull, noble and wiſe. III. Whether on theſe and many other the like fundamental Truths of the Goſpel, it be not more reaſonable to fetch the ground of the effectualneſs of that ſufficient grace to one, which is not effectual to another, from the temper and diſpoſition of the heart, to which the Goſpel is preached, than from any other circumſtance (eſpecially when this doth not deny, or exclude the proper efficacy of thoſe circumſtances, whatſoever they or it ſhall any way appear to be) God having made the Baptiſt the forerunner to Chriſt, repentance to Faith, the * breaking up our fallow grounds, to his not ſowing among thorns, and the very nature of the Goſpel being ſuch, that all that are truly ſenſible of their ſins, the odiouſneſs and danger of them, and heartily deſirous to get out of that ſtate, the weary and heavy laden, the humble, docile, tractable, honeſt heart, willing to take Chriſt's yoke upon them, are conſtantly wrought on, and converted, when the promulgate mercies, or promiſes of the Goſpel, and the Grace annext to it, are addreſt to them; whereas the very ſame, nay perhaps a greater degree of light and Grace, meeting with a proud, refractary, pleaſurable, or any way hypocritical, and deceitfull, heart, either is not at all heeded and received or takes no firm root in it.

Luk. 9. 62. Act. 13. 48. Jo. 7. 17. Mat. 13. 8. Luc. 8. 15. Mat. 13. 15. Jam. 4. 6. Mat. 11. 5. Mat. 19. 14. and ver. 3. Luc. 6. 22. 1 Cor. 1. 27.

The ground of effectualneſs of grace more probably deduced from probity of heart.

* Jer. 4. 3.

This probity no natural preparation, but of God's planting by preventing grace.

Sect. 63. And if now (the onely objection I can foreſee) it be demanded, whether this of probity, humility, &c. the ſubactum ſolum, ſoil mellow'd, and prepared for this effectual work of Grace, be not ſome natural quality of the man, for if ſo, then the efficacy of grace will be imputed to theſe natural, or moral preparations, which is groſly prejudicial to the grace of God, and to the owing of all our good to his ſupernatural operations, the anſwer is obvious and unqueſtionable, that this (I ſhall call it Evangelical) temper is far from being natural to any corrupt child of Adam, whereever 'tis met with, 'tis a ſpecial plant of God's planting, a work of his preparing, ſoftning, preventing grace, and as much imputable to the operation of his holy Spirit, as any effect of his ſubſequent or cooperating grace is, which I challenge to be the meaning of thoſe words of Chriſt, Joh. 6. 37. All that my Father giveth me ſhall come to me; where ſuch as theſe are firſt fitted by God, and then by him are ſaid to be given to Chriſt, works of his finger, his ſpirit, and then by the authour of them preſented to Chriſt, as the perſons rightly diſpoſed for his diſcipleſhip, and his kingdom in mens hearts, and this work of God's in fitting them, is there called his drawing of them to Chriſt, ver. 44. and as there it is ſaid that none but ſuch can come to Chriſt, ſo v. 37. all ſuch ſhall come to him, which is an evidence that the coming, wherein the effectualneſs of the grace conſiſts, is imputable to this temper wrought in them by God. And if ſtill it be demanded why this is not wrought in all Chriſtians hearts, I anſwer finally, that the onely reaſon the Scripture teaches us is, becauſe ſome reſiſt that ſpirit that is graciouſly given by God, and purpoſely deſigned to work it in them.

The one objection againſt this ſatisfied.

Sect. 64. And if it ſtill be ſuggeſted, that ſome are naturally more proud and refractary, and voluptuouſly diſpoſed than others, (an effect of their temper, owing oft to their immediate parents, who may tranſfuſe their depravations and corruptions immediately to their children, as well as Adam hath done to us all mediately) and ſo a greater degree of grace will be neceſſary to the humbling and mollifying them, and a lower, which might be ſufficient for meeker tempers, will be unſufficient for them, and ſo ſtill theſe are as infallibly excluded, and barred out, as if it were by a fatal decree paſſing them by in Maſſa, this will be alſo ſatisfied, by reſolving, that God in his wiſe diſpoſals and abundant mercies proportioned according to mens wants, gives a greater degree of preventing Grace to ſuch as he ſees to be naturally in greateſt need of it, or elſe applies it ſo advantageouſly by congruous timing, as he knows is ſufficient even to them, to remove theſe natural obſtacles, but all this (to them, as to others) reſiſtibly ſtill, and ſo, as though it ſucceed ſometimes, yet is frequently reſiſted.

Sect. 65. By this means he that is proud and obſtinate, and continues, and holds out ſuch againſt all the ſoftning preparations of Heaven, (ſufficient to have wrought a kindlier temper in him) being ſo ill qualified for the holy ſpirit of diſcipline, is not converted, but hardened by the ſame or equal means of the word and grace, by which the humble is converted, and then repleniſhed with higher degrees; and when the Scripture is ſo favourable to this notion, ſaying expreſly that God chuſes one, and not the other, gives more grace to one, and from the other takes away that which he hath, reſiſts the proud (when they refuſe diſcipline) * ſpeaks to them onely in parables, becauſe ſeeing they ſee not, reſiſt and fruſtrate God's preventing graces, and infinite the like, why may not this rather be the Scripture-election, than that other which ſeems not to have any, at leaſt not ſo viſible grounds in it?

* Mat. 13. 13.

Sect. 66. Should this be but a Conjecture too, it is not the leſs fit for this place, where our diſcourſe hath been of ſuch, and the onely ſeaſonable inquiry is, either 1. which is of probables the moſt, or of improbables the leaſt ſuch, (and that I ſuppoſe is competently ſhew'd already) or 2. which may be moſt ſafe, and leaſt noxious, in caſe it ſhould fail of exact truth.

The ſafeneſs of this ſtating.

Sect. 67. On which occaſion I ſhall add but this, that the onely conſequence naturally ariſing from this Scheme is, that we make our elections after the pattern of God, chuſe humility and probity, and avert pride and hypocriſie, that before all things in the world, every man think himſelf highly concerned 1. not to reſiſt or fruſtrate God's preventing Graces, but chearfully to receive, cooperate, and improve them, to pray and labour, and attend and watch all opportunities of Grace and Providence, to work humility and probity in his heart, impatience of ſin, and hungring and thirſting after righteouſneſs, as the onely ſoil, wherein the Goſpel will ever thrive, to begin his diſcipleſhip with repentance from dead works, and not with aſſurance of his election and ſalvation, to ſet out early, and reſolutely, without procraſtinating, or * looking back, Luke 9. 62. and 2. if he hath overſlipt ſuch opportunities, to bewail and retrieve them betimes, leſt he be hardened by the deceitfulneſs of ſin. And 3. whatſoever good he ſhall ever advance to, by the ſtrength of God's ſanctifying and aſſiſting grace, to remember with the utmoſt gratitude, how nothing hath been imputable to himſelf in the whole work, but from the beginning to the end, all due to ſupernatural Grace, the foundation particularly (that which if it be the moſt imperfect, is yet the moſt neceſſary part of the building, and the ſure laying of which tends extremely to the ſtability of the whole) laid in God's preventions, cultivating our nature and fitting us with capacities of his higher donatives; And what can leſs prejudice, nay more tend to the glory of his grace, than this?

* Μελλήσεως καὶ ἀναβολῆς μετάνοια, Tit. Boſtr.

Compared with the other.

Sect. 68. Whereas the other Scheme, as it takes ſpecial care to attribute all the work of converſion to Grace, and withall not ſo to limit that communicative ſpring, as to leave any deſtitute of a ſufficient portion of it (in which reſpect I have nothing really to object againſt it, if it could but approve it ſelf by God's word to be the Truth) ſo when it bears not any ſuch impreſs of Divine Character upon it, it may not be amiſs to conſider, Whether he that is perſwaded that the ſufficient Grace is ſuch as may, and (as ſome ſet it) God ſees will never doe any man good, without the addition of his ſupereffluence, which he affords to few (and that if that come, it will infallibly doe the work, if it come not, he is ſo paſt by, as to be reprobated by God) may not have ſome temptations to deſpair on one ſide, and not doe his utmoſt to cooperate with that ſufficient Grace, which is allowed him, and ſo with the fool in Eccleſiaſtes * fold his hands together till he comes to eat his own fleſh, or elſe to preſume on the other ſide, and expect ſecurely till the coming of the congruous good time of God's choice, which ſhall give the effectualneſs to his Grace, and ſo be ſlothfull and periſh by that preſumption?

* Cap. 4. 5.

Sect. 69. Whether the Scheme, as it is ſet by learned men, (abſtracting now from the truth of it) be in any conſiderable degree liable to this danger, I leave thoſe, that are favourable to it, to conſider, preſuming that if it be, it will not be thought fit to be pitcht upon, as the moſt commodious without either the authority of Scripture, or ſome other preponderating advantages tendred by it, which to me are yet inviſible. And thus much may ſerve for the doctrine of God's Decrees, which if I miſtake not, leaves them in relation to man, in this poſture, (as far as the Scripture-light leads us.)

An Anacephalæoſis of the Doctrine of God's Decrees.

Of Election.

Sect. 70. 1. That God decreed to create man after his own image, a free and rational agent, to give him a Law of perfect unſinning obedience, and confer on him grace and faculties to perform it, and to reward that obedience with eternal bliſs, and proportionably to puniſh diſobedience.

2. That foreſeeing the wilfull fall of the firſt Man, with whom, and with all mankind, in him, this Covenant was made, and conſequent to that, the depravation of that image and that grace, (the image of Satan, corruption of the will, and all the faculties, taking the place of it) he decreed to give his Son to ſeek and to ſave that which was loſt, making in him, and ſealing in his bloud a new Covenant, conſiſting of a promiſe of pardon and ſufficient Grace, and requiring of all the condition of uniform ſincere obedience.

3. That he decreed to commiſſionate meſſengers to preach this Covenant to all mankind, promiſed to accompany the preaching of it to all hearts with his inward ſufficient grace, enabling men to perform it in ſuch a degree, as he in this ſecond Covenant had promiſed to accept of.

4. That the method which he hath decreed to uſe in diſpenſing this ſufficient Grace, is, 1. to prevent and prepare mens hearts by giving them the grace of humility, repentance and probity of heart, by awaking and convincing men of ſin, and giving them (in anſwer to their diligent prayers) grace ſufficient to produce this in their hearts, and then upon their making uſe of this Grace to the deſigned end, to add more powerfull aſſiſtences and excitations, enabling them both to will and to doe, and upon their conſtant right uſe of theſe, ſtill to advance them to an higher degree of ſanctification, and perſeverance, till at length he accompliſh and reward them with a crown of Glory.

Sect. 71.

Sect. 71. On the other ſide, to forſake them in juſtice, that obſtinately reſiſt and fruſtrate all theſe wiſe and gracious methods of his, and having moſt affectionately ſet life and death before them, and conjured them to chuſe one, and avoid the other; ſtill to leave unto them, as to free and rational Agents, a liberty to refuſe all his calls, to let his talents lie by them unprofitably; which if out of their own perverſe choices they continue to do, he decrees to puniſh the contumacy finally, by aſſigning them their own options, to take their talents from them, and caſt them into outer darkneſs, where ſhall be weeping and wailing and gnaſhing of teeth. Of Reprobation.

Sect. 72. How clearly every part of this Scheme is agreeable to the ſeveral parables, whereby Chriſt was pleaſed to adumbrate the Kingdom of Heaven, and innumerable other paſſages in the Goſpel, and the whole purport of the new Covenant, I leave to every man to conſider, and then to judge for himſelf, whether it be not ſafer and more Chriſtian to content our ſelves with this portion which Chriſt hath thought fit to reveal to us, than to permit our curioſities to deeper and more pragmatick ſearches, eſpecially if thoſe ſhall either directly, or but conſequentially undo, or but darken what is thus explicitely ſetled. The concluſion.

Sect. 73. I proceed now to your ſecond head of diſcourſe, (which alſo I ſuppoſe, is, by what hath been already conſidered, competently eſtabliſhed) concerning the efficacy of Grace, &c. where your Propoſition is thus ſet down. Of the efficacy of Grace.

Sect. 74. That in the converſion of a ſinner, and the begetting of Faith in the heart of man, the Grace of God hath the main ſtroke, chiefeſt operation, yet ſo, that the free will of man doth in ſome ſort cooperate therewith (for no man is converted or believeth without his own conſent) all parties pretend to agree. The point of difference is, how to ſtate the manner and degree of the cooperation, as well of the one as of the other, ſo as neither the Glory of God's Grace be eclipſed, nor the freedom of man's will deſtroyed. In which difficult point, you ſay, you think it fitter to acquieſce in thoſe aforeſaid acknowledged truths, in which both ſides agree, than to hold cloſe to either opinion.]

Sect. 75. In this propoſition, it being by you in the Concluſion moſt undeniably and Chriſtianly reſolved, that the one care ought to be, that neither the glory of God's Grace be eclipſed, nor the freedom of man's will deſtroyed, It would not be amiſs a little to reflect on the former part, and demand whether your expreſſion were not a little too cautious, in ſaying, the grace of God hath the main ſtroke and chiefeſt operation] did I not diſcern the ground of that caution, becauſe you were to expreſs that whereunto all parties muſt be ſuppoſed to conſent. This being abundantly ſufficient to account for your caution, I ſhall not doubt of your concurrence, with me, that it may with truth be ſaid, and I ſuppoſe alſo by the agreement, if not of all Chriſtians, yet of both parties in this debate, particularly of the Remonſtrants, that the grace of God is in lapſed man the one ſole principle of ſpiritual life, Converſion, Regeneration, Repentance, Faith and all other Evangelical vertues, and that all that can juſtly be attributed to our will in any of theſe, is the obeying the motions, and making uſe of the powers, which are thus beſtowed upon us, by that ſupernatural principle; To work and work out our own ſalvation, upon the ſtrength of God's giving us to will and to doe; by [giving us to will and to doe] meaning his giving us power to each, as Δύναι λαὸν τῷ κυρίῳ, Luke 1. is giving us power to ſerve him in holineſs and righteouſneſs all the days of our lives, every initial and more perfect act of holineſs, eſpecially perſevering in it all our days, being wholly imputable to that power, which is given by God's Spirit. For indeed when it is conſidered, what the ſtate of our corrupt Will is, being naturally averted from God, and ſtrongly inclined to evil, it ſeems to me ſcarce proper to call this in relation to ſupernatural vertues, a free will, till God by his preventing Grace hath in ſome degree manumitted it, till Chriſt hath made it free; Being then what it is, i. e. in ſome degree emancipated by God's Grace, and by Grace onely, (this act of Chriſt's love, and Grace being reached out to enemies, to men in their corrupt ſtate of averſion and oppoſition to God) the will is then enabled (ſtill by the ſame principle of Grace) to chuſe life, when it is propoſed, and the ways and means to it, and though it be left free to act or not to act, to chuſe or not to chuſe, yet when it doth act and chuſe life, it doth it no otherwiſe (to my underſtanding) than the body doth perform all the actions of life, merely by the ſtrength of the ſoul, and that continual animation it hath, it receives from it; which makes the parallel complete, and gave ground to the expreſſion and compariſon betwixt giving of natural life, and regeneration. The power of Grace in converſion, &c. What the freedom of will now is.

Sect. 76. What freedom the Will naturally (under this corrupt ſtate) hath to other things, of all ſorts, I do not now conſider any farther, than that it is fully furniſhed with ability to ſin, and ſo to refuſe and contemn, and to receive in vain the Grace of God, and Grace it ſelf doth not deprive it of that part of its corrupt patrimony: As for an uniform conſtant choice of thoſe things that belong to our peace and ſpiritual end, for the beginning of that, and every ſtep of motion through, and perſeverance in it, It's freedom, and ſtrength, and every degree of life, or action, is wholly and entirely from Grace, and then he that without him can doe nothing, can doe all things through Chriſt that ſtrengthens him. And ſo the onely remaining queſtion is (which to me, I confeſs, is a poſing one) What exception can poſſibly be ſtarted againſt this ſtating, and conſequently what farther doubt there can be in this matter. Ability to ſin.

Sect. 77. I have of my ſelf by my natural generation, (but this is alſo from God) power for natural, nay ſinfull actings, for this I need no farther principle, and the ſupervenience of a ſupernatural takes it not from me; Our experience aſſures us, what the Scripture ſo oft mentions, that we often reſiſt the Holy Ghoſt, which we could not do, if at leaſt it were not tendered to us: But for all degrees of good, from the firſt good motion toward converſion, to the enſtating us in glory, it is wholly received from the Spirit of God, and the glory of it cannot in any degree, without the utmoſt ſacrilege, be arrogated or aſſumed to our ſelves, as the work of our free will; and ſeeing it is one act of ſuperabundant grace to enable us to doe any thing, and another to reward us for doing it in ſo imperfect a manner, (and with ſuch mixtures of manifold pollutions) and a third to exerciſe us in, and reward us for thoſe things, which are ſo agreeable and gratefull to our reaſonable nature, Commandments far from grievous, a gracious yoke, as well as a light burthen, Not unto us, O Lord, not unto us, but to thy Name, give we the praiſe. Praiſe the Lord, O my ſoul, and all that is within me, praiſe his holy Name. All good due to Grace.

Sect. 78. What you add on this theme, is by way of reflexion, on the inconvenient opinions of the oppoſite parties in this matter.

Predetermination and irreſiſtibility.

I. That on the Calviniſts part theſe two things, viz. the phyſical predetermination, and (which muſt neceſſarily follow thereupon) the Irreſiſtibility of the work of Grace, ſeem to you to be ſo inconſiſtent with the natural liberty of the will, and ſo impoſſible to be reconciled therewith, that you cannot yet by any means fully aſſent thereto] The ſtyle wherein this concludes [cannot yet fully] ſignifies to me, that you have, with great impartiality, (if not with favour and prepoſſeſſion of kindneſs to the Antiremonſtrant ſide) endeavoured your utmoſt to reconcile theſe two Doctrines of Predetermination and Irreſiſtibility, with the common notions of Morality and Chriſtianity, and you cannot find any means to doe it; and I fully conſent to you in it, and cannot but add, that the very being of all future judgment, and ſo of Heaven and Hell, conſidered as rewards of what is here done in our bodies, whether good or bad, nay the whole œconomy of the Goſpel, of giving, and giving more, and withholding and withdrawing Grace, and the difference betwixt the Grace of Converſion and Perſeverance, and the force of exhortations, promiſes, threats, commands (and what not?) depends immediately and unavoidably on the truth of the Catholick Doctrine of all ages, as in theſe points of Predetermination and Irreſiſtibility, it ſtands in oppoſition to the Calviniſts. The ſhewing this diffuſedly, according to the merit of the matter, through the ſeveral ſteps, were the work of a volume, of which I ſhall hope there can be no need, after ſo many have been written on the ſubject.

How unreconcileable with Chriſtian principles.

Sect. 79. Your next reflexion is on the Arminians, of whom you ſay,

Of Arminians attributing too little to Grace.

On the other ſide, me thinks, the Arminians aſcribe leſs to the Grace of God, and more to the Free-will of man, than they ought, in this, That according to their Doctrine, why of two perſons (as Peter and Judas*) ſuppoſed to have all outward means of converſion equally applied, yet one ſhould be effectually converted, the other not, the diſcriminating power is by them placed in the will of man, which* (you ſay) you ſhould rather aſcribe to the work of Grace] If this be the right ſtating of the caſe between the Arminians and their oppoſites, I am then without conſulting the Authours, aſſured by you that I am no Arminian, for I deem it impoſſible (I ſay not for any man, not knowing what miracles the magick of ſome mens paſſions may enable them to work, but) for you that have written what I have now ſet down from you, to imagine you aſcribe more to the Grace of God, and leſs to the will of man, than I have thought my ſelf obliged to doe, making it my challenge and intereſt, and requiring it to be granted me (and not my conceſſion onely) that all that any man is enabled to doe, is by Chriſt ſtrengthening him.

Sect. 80. But not to queſtion what others doe, or to accuſe or apologize for any, let us conſider the caſe you ſet, and allow the truth to be judged of, in this whole queſtion, by what this particular caſe ſhall exact.

Of Judas whether he were not converted.

Sect. 81. But 1. in the ſetting of it, I cannot but mark two things, 1. That the perſons made uſe of to ſet the caſe in, are Judas and Peter. 2. That to the word [converted] is prefixed [effectually.] This would make it probable that you think a man may be converted, and yet not effectually converted, or however that Judas was not effectually converted. That Judas was converted, and, as far as concerned the preſent ſtate, abſtracted from perſeverance, effectually converted, I offer but this one teſtimo-

* John 17. 12.

ny, the words of Chriſt to his Father, * [Of thoſe whom thou gaveſt me I have loſt none, ſave onely the ſon of perdition] That whoſoever is by the Father given to Chriſt, is converted, and that effectually, is concluded from Chriſt's univerſal propoſition, All that my Father giveth me, ſhall come to me, John. 6. 37. and here it is expreſly ſaid that Judas (though by his apoſtaſie now become the ſon of perdition) was by God given to Chriſt, and therefore he came to Chriſt, i. e. was converted, which alſo his being loſt, his very Apoſtaſie teſtifies, for how could he Apoſtatize from Chriſt, that was never come to him? From hence it ſeems to me neceſſary either to interpret your ſpeech of final perſeverance, as if none were effectually converted, but ſuch who perſevere, (which as it belongs to another queſtion, that of perſeverance, to which you after proceed, and not to this of reconciling irreſiſtibility and free will, ſo it would ſeem to ſtate it otherwiſe, than I perceive you afterwards doe) or, to avoid that, to underſtand no more by Judas and Peter than any other two names, ſuppoſe Robert and Richard, John at Noke and John at Style, (as you ſince tell me your meaning was) the one converted effectually, i. e. really, the other not, when both are ſuppoſed to have the ſame outward means of converſion equally applied to them.

Whence Diſcrimination comes.

Sect. 82. Now to the queſtion thus ſet of any two, and ſuppoſing what hath been granted between you and me, that the outward means are accompanied to both with a ſufficient meaſure of inward Grace, My anſwer you diſcern already, that the Diſcrimination comes immediately from one man's reſiſting ſufficient Grace, which the other doth not reſiſt, but makes uſe of: In this ſhould I add no more, there could be no difficulty, becauſe as it is from corruption, and liberty to doe evil, (that meeting with the reſiſtibility of this ſufficient grace) that one reſiſts it, ſo it is wholly from the work of grace upon an obedient heart, that the other is converted; And ſo this ſtating aſcribes all the good to the work of grace, i. e. to that power, which by ſupernatural grace is given him, and all the ill to man and his liberty, or ability to reſiſt.

For man's liberty to reſiſt.

From God's Preventions.

Sect. 83. But from what hath been ſaid, there is yet more to be added, viz. that the obedience of the one to the call of grace, when the other, ſuppoſed to have ſufficient, if not an equal meaſure, obeys not, may reaſonably be imputed to the humble, malleable, melting temper, (which the other wanted) and that again owing to the preventing graces of God, and not to the natural probity, or free-will of Man, whereas the other, having reſiſted thoſe preparing graces, or not made uſe of them, lieth under ſome degree of obduration, pride, ſloth, voluptuouſneſs, &c. and that makes the diſcrimination on his

Nothing imputed to man but power of reſiſting.

ſide, i. e. renders him unqualified and uncapable to be wrought on by ſufficient grace, and ſo ſtill, if it be attentively weighed, this attributes nothing to free-will, conſidered by it ſelf, but the power of reſiſting and fruſtrating God's methods (which I ſhould think, they that are ſuch aſſertours of the corruption of our nature, ſhould make no difficulty to yield him, but that they alſo aſſert irreſiſtibility of grace, and that is not reconcileable with it) yielding the glory of all the work of converſion, and all the firſt preparations to it, to his ſole grace, by which the will is firſt ſet free, then fitted and cultivated, and then the ſeed of eternal life ſucceſsfully ſowed in it.

The whole work of converſion to Grace.

Sect. 84.

Sect. 84. If the Remonſtrants yield not this, you ſee my profeſſion of diſſent from them; if they do, as for ought I ever heard or read (which indeed hath been but little in their works, that I might reſerve my ſelf to judge of theſe things, without prepoſſeſſion) they doubt not to doe, you ſee you have had them miſ-repreſented to you. But this, either way, is extrinſecal and unconcernant to the merit of the cauſe, which is not to be defended or patronized by names (but arguments) much leſs to be prejudged or blaſted by them.

Sect. 85. You now add, as a reaſon to inforce your laſt propoſition, That although the Grace of God work not by any phyſical determination of the will, but by way of moral ſuaſion onely, and therefore in what degree ſoever ſuppoſed, muſt needs be granted ex natura rei poſſible to be reſiſted, yet God by his infinite wiſedom can ſo ſweetly order and attemper the outward means in ſuch a congruous manner, and make ſuch gracious inward applications and inſinuations, by the ſecret imperceptible operation of his holy Spirit, into the hearts of his choſen, as that de facto the will ſhall not finally reſiſt. That (you ſay) of the ſon of Syrach, Fortiter & Suaviter, is an excellent Motto, and fit to be affixed, as to all the ways of God's Providence in general, ſo to this of the effectual working of his Grace in particular.] Of the congruous manner, &c. making Grace effectual.

Sect. 86. This for the ſubſtance falls in with the laſt of thoſe which you ſo cautiouſly ſet down for mere conjectures, ſeeming to you not improbable. And ſo here you continue to propoſe it, 1. as that, which God can doe, (and thus no Chriſtian can doubt of it) 2. by the one teſtimony which you tender for the proof of it, the words of Eccleſiaſticus [ſtrongly but ſweetly;] which though it be there moſt probably interpreted of the works of God's Providence, not particularly of his Grace, ſo if it were, moſt fully expreſſes their thoughts, who building on the Promiſe of ſufficient Grace, and the way of the working of that by moral ſuaſion, will apply the fortiter to the ſufficiency, and the ſuaviter to the ſuaſion, and yet reſolve (what frequent experience tells us) that thoſe that are thus wrought on, ſtrongly and ſweetly too, and as ſtrongly and ſweetly (if not ſometimes more ſo) as they that are converted by it, are yet very (very) many times, not converted. This a member of the former Conjecture. Fortiter & ſuaviter.

Sect. 87. Here therefore the point lies, not whether God can thus effectually work upon all that he tenders ſufficient grace unto, nor again, whether ſometimes (and whenſoever he pleaſeth) he doth thus work, (for as this is the moſt that you demand, ſo this is moſt evident, and readily granted) but 1. Whether all are effectually converted and perſevere, and ſo are finally ſaved, on whom God doth work thus ſweetly and powerfully, attempering the outward and inward means, applications and inſinuations, by the ſecret imperceptible operations of his Spirit, and that in a congruous manner (I add time alſo) 2. Whether this doing thus is ſuch an act of his Election, as that all to whom this is not done, ſhall be ſaid in Scripture to be left, paſt by, and reprobated. What is the onely queſtion here.

Sect. 88. If thus it is, (not onely can be) and if it may be convincingly teſtified by any text of Scripture, that this really is the Scripture Election, it ſhall be moſt willingly and gladly yielded to: But till this be done, 1. that other Scheme, which I ſo lately ſet down, may be allowed to maintain its competition againſt this, and 2. it is to be remembred from the premiſſes, that the glory of God's grace in every one's converſion is abundantly taken care of, and ſecured, without the aſſiſtence of this: 3. that the ground of the Antiremonſtrants exception to the Arminian occurs in this way of ſtating too, for ſince 'tis here affirmed, that grace even thus applied is poſſible to be reſiſted, why may not the accepting this higher degree be as imputable to man's will, as of the other barely ſufficient grace the objecter ſuppoſes it to be?

Sect. 89. Laſtly, the ſaying of our Saviour, Matth. 11. 21. is of no ſmall moment in the caſe, and yields a ſubſtantial prejudice to this way. For 1. it is expreſly affirmed, ver. 20. of thoſe Cities wherein were wrought αἱ πλείσται δυνάμεις αὐτοῦ his moſt abundant powers or miracles, that ὐ μετενόησαν they repented not: His miracles, I ſuppoſe, had his grace annexed to them, and it is hard to believe that where his moſt numerous miracles were afforded, they ſhould all want the advantage of the congruous timings to give them their due weight of efficacy: However there is no pretence of believing it here, where it is ſaid, Chriſt ἤρξατο ὀνειδίζειν began to reproach and upbraid them, that the miracles had been ſo ſucceſsleſs among them, which he could with no propriety doe, if any circumſtance needfull to their efficacy had been wanting to them: and ver. 22. the more intolerable meaſure of damnation, which is denounced againſt them, puts this beyond queſtion, that theſe wanted not the more ſuperabundant advantages of Grace. Secondly, it is alſo as explicitly pronounced by Chriſt, that thoſe miracles and that grace which were not effectual to the converſion of thoſe Jewiſh Cities, Chorazin and Bethſaida, would have been ſucceſsfull to the converſion of others, and made them Proſelytes and Penitents of the ſevereſt kind, in ſackcloth and aſhes. Whereupon I demand, Had thoſe means, thoſe miracles (the inſtruments and vehicles of Grace, that were then uſed to Chorazin and Bethſaida) the timings and other advantageous circumſtances, which the opinion, now under conſideration, pretends to be the infallible means of the ſalvation of the Elect, or had they not? If they had, then it ſeems theſe may fail of converting, and ſo have not that ſpecial efficacy, which is pretended, it being expreſly affirmed, that here they ſucceeded not to converſion. But if they had not the timings, &c. then it remains as undeniable, as the affirmation of Chriſt can render it, that thoſe means, that Grace, which hath not thoſe advantageous circumſtances, may be, nay, if granted to Tyre and Sydon, heathen Cities, would actually have been ſucceſsfull to them. And what can be more effectual to the prejudice of a conjecture, than this double force of the words of Chriſt confronted expreſly to both branches of it? And then I hope I may with modeſty conclude, that there remains no viſible advantage of this way, to recommend it, in caſe the Scripture be not found to own, and more than favour it in ſome other paſſages. Matth. 11. 21. a ſpecial prejudice to the conjecture.

Sect. 90. Your laſt Propoſition on this Theme is, that Sith the Conſiſtence of Grace and Free-will is a Myſtery ſo tranſcending our weak underſtandings, that it hath for many years exerciſed and puzzled the wits of the acuteſt Schoolmen to find it out, inſomuch as hundreds of volumes have been written and daily are de concurſu Gratiæ & liberi arbitrii, and yet no accord hath hitherto followed, you ſay, you have ever held, and ſtill do hold it the more pious and ſafe way, to place the Grace of God in the throne, where we think it ſhould ſtand, and ſo to leave the will of man to ſhift for the maintenance of its own freedom, as well as it can, than to eſtabliſh the power and liberty liberty of free will at the height, and then to be at a loſs how to maintain the power and efficacy of God's Grace.]

Sect. 91. But if what hath been clearly laid down, for the attributing all our ſpiritual good to the work of Grace, and aſſuming nothing of this kind to the innate power of free will, but a liberty to reſiſt Grace, the reſt being humbly acknowledged to be due to a ſupernaturally conferred freedom, or emancipation, whereby we are enabled to make uſe of Grace, and by the power thereof to cooperate with it, Then 1. the conſiſtence of grace and free will in this ſenſe, is no ſuch tranſcending Myſtery, and I think there is no text in Scripture that ſounds any thing towards the making it ſo. 2. 'Tis evident, that the difficulties that have exerciſed the Schools in this matter ariſe from their endeavouring to ſtate it otherwiſe, ſome by maintaining Predetermination and Irreſiſtibility, which all the powers of nature cannot reconcile with Man's free will ad oppoſitum; And ſome few that go another milder way, are yet afraid of departing too far from the former, and inſtead of irreſiſtibility ſubſtitute efficacy, as that ſignifies infallibility of the event to the Elect, and ſo find difficulty to extricate themſelves; whereas Grace ſufficient, but reſiſtible, given together with the word to all, to whom Chriſt is revealed, hath 1. it ſelf nothing of difficulty in the conception, and 2. being underſtood, utterly removes all farther difficulty in this matter. For hereby we place the Grace of God in the throne, to rule and reign in the whole work of converſion, perſeverance and ſalvation, (and what can be more demanded, that we have not aſſerted? certainly nothing by you, who in ſetting down the conſent of all parties, expreſt it by no more than its having the main ſtroke and chiefeſt operation) and need not put the will of man to ſhift for the maintenance of its own freedom, as long as we can do it with much more ſafety and temper, than either by ſetting it at the height with the Pelagians, or endangering to convert it into a mere trunk, or leaving men to the duct of their own humours, either to advance it above its due, and grow inſolent, or depreſs it below what is meet, and ſo give up themſelves to ſloth, and indifferency.

Conſiſtence of Grace and free will.

The difficulties in the Schoolmens way whence.

How eaſily ſuperſeded.

Sect. 92. On the third or laſt head concerning Grace and Perſeverance, your propoſitions are three, the two former I ſhall ſet down together, becauſe the firſt is but a preparative to, or one way of proof of the ſecond, which onely concerns our purpoſe.

Of falling from Grace.

I. That Faith and all holy Graces inherent in us, Love, Patience and Humility, &c. are the gifts of God wrought in us by his Grace and holy Spirit, none will deny, But that they are wrought in us by infuſion and in inſtanti (as Philoſophers teach forms to be introduced into the matter by natural generation in inſtanti,) at leaſt that they are always or ordinarily ſo infuſed, you ſee no neceſſity of believing, or why it may not be ſaid of theſe χαρίσματα (ſpiritual Graces) notwithſtanding they be acknowledged the gifts of God, as well as of thoſe χαρίσματα (ſpiritual gifts, as we tranſlate them) which are certainly the gifts of God as well as the other, and ſo acknowledged; that they are (after the manner of other habits) ordinarily acquirable by induſtry and frequented acts, and the bleſſing of God upon our prayers and endeavours. To what purpoſe elſe were it for Miniſters in their Sermons uſually to preſs motives to ſtir up men to labour to get Faith, Love, &c. and to propoſe means for their better direction how to get them?

II. Whence (you ſay) it ſeemeth to you farther probable, that Faith and all other inherent Graces, as they may be with God's bleſſing attain'd, may be alſo loſt again by ſloth, negligence and carnal ſecurity, and therefore you cannot but doubt of the truth of that aſſertion which the Contraremonſtrants do yet aver with great confidence, That Faith once had, cannot be loſt, and other the like. The diſtinction that they uſe, as a ſalvo in this Queſtion, of a true and temporary Faith, ſignifieth (ſay you) little or nothing, for it at once both beggeth and yieldeth the whole Queſtion: It 1. beggeth the Queſtion, when it denieth that Faith that may be loſt, to be true Faith; and withall 2. yieldeth the Queſtion, when it granteth a temporary Faith, which term is capable of no other conſtruction, than of ſuch a Faith, as being once had is afterwards loſt. It is one of the Articles of our Church, that after we have received the holy Ghoſt, we may depart from Grace given.]

Our Article.

Sect. 93. In theſe two there is nothing for me to queſtion, and as little to add to them, unleſs I annex, what I ſuppoſe you did not think needfull, the expreſs conſent of Scriptures and Fathers, whereon our Churches Article muſt be reſolved to have been founded. In the old Teſtament the examples of the Angels in Heaven, of Adam in Paradiſe, and in a remarkable manner of two to whom God had given eminent teſtimony, 1. David, in the matter of Uriah, an odious murther added to adultery, and continued in impenitently, till after the birth of the child, the blemiſh whereof ſtill ſticks to him, and remains upon record, as an allay to all his excellencies, now that he is in heaven. 2. Solomon, whoſe heart was by his multitude of wives and concubines taken off from God, and debauched to Idols, no way being left us to diſcern whether ever he returned or no, unleſs his Eccleſiaſtes be a declaration and fruit of his Repentance. And as theſe and many other examples, even of that whole Old-Teſtament-Church, the Jews, make this evident, ſo the words of Ezekiel are expreſs both for total and final falling away. If the righteous turn from his righteouſneſs, in his unrighteouſneſs ſhall he die.

Grounds of it in Scripture.

In the Old Teſtament.

Ch. 3. 20. & 18. 24.

Sect. 94. The New alſo is parallel, in the example of Peter, thrice, with time of deliberation between, and after expreſs warning from Chriſt, and his reſolute promiſe to the contrary, denying and abjuring of Chriſt, whoſe return from this fall with bitter tears, is called by Chriſt Converſion, and the ſin upbraided to him thrice after his reſurrection, Simon, ſon of Jonas, loveſt thou me more than theſe? in reference to his confident undertaking, though all men ſhould deny thee, or be offended, yet will not I. And if the argument from Chriſt's expreſs words, formerly produced, be of force, then is Judas (one of thoſe that was by God given to Chriſt, and came unto, and believed on him) an example of the blackeſt ſort, teſtifying to this ſad truth, That a Believer and Diſciple of Chriſt may betray him to his Crucifixion, and die in deſperation.

In the New.

John 21. 25.

Mark 14. 29, 31.

John 17. 12. & 6. 37.

Sect. 95. To theſe two inſtances, the former greatly aggravated with circumſtances, the latter final, and of the higheſt degree imaginable, It is not needfull to add more, elſe it is obvious to encreaſe the catalogue with thoſe that were polluted by the Gnoſticks, by name, Hymenæus and Alexander, who putting away a good conſcience, concerning Faith made ſhipwreck, and again Hymenæus and Philetus, who fell off ſo far, as to the denial of any future Reſurrection, of whom the Apoſtle there ſpeaking, ſaith, If God peradventure will give them repentance, and they may recover themſelves out of the ſnare of the Devil] looking on their eſtate as that of lapſed believers, and though not utterly hopeleſs, yet extremely dangerous, And this exemplified in whole Churches, Apoc. 2. and 3. which are therefore threatned preſent deſtruction, if they do not ſpeedily return.

Sect. 96.

Sect. 96. To which purpoſe the Texts in the ſixth and tenth to the Hebrews are unanſwerable; In the ſixth, that it is impoſſible, i. e. extremely difficult, for thoſe that were once enlightned, &c. if they fall away, to renew them again unto repentance, adding the ſimilitude of the reprobate earth, whoſe end is to be burned. From which how diſtant is the Doctrine of thoſe, that either imagine it impoſſible for ſuch to fall away totally, or if they are fallen away, not to be renewed again to repentance? In the tenth alſo, 'twere vain to make ſo ſevere interminations againſt thoſe who ſin wilfully after receiving the knowledge of the truth, (as we reade, ver. 26.) if there were no poſſibility of ſo ſinning, but eſpecially the 38 verſe is remarkable, The juſt ſhall live by faith, ὑ ἐὰν ὑποστείληται, And if he (the juſt) ſhall draw back, my ſoul hath no pleaſure in him] explicating verſe 39. what drawing back he ſpeaks of, even drawing back unto perdition, and that is final, as well as total, and both, it ſeems, very poſſible, as every where appears by the exhortations to him that thinketh he ſtandeth, to take heed leſt he fall, when if he do, It had been better never to have known the way of righteouſneſs, than after he hath known it, to turn from the holy Commandment, and this in ſuch a degree, as is expreſt by returning to the vomit, and wallowing in the mire, the acts and habits of the foulest ſins, in forſaking of which their converſion conſiſted. 1 Cor. 10. 12. 2 Pet. 2. 21.

Sect. 97. The Teſtimonies of the Fathers are too long to be ſet down, and indeed unneceſſary to the confirmation of that, to which the Scripture hath teſtified ſo plentifully, eſpecially ſince it is not (it cannot be) denied by the contrary-minded, that S. Auguſtine, the onely fautor of their cauſe in the point of Decrees, and effectual Grace, granteth poſſibility of falling, both totally and finally, from a juſtified eſtate, and uſeth it as a means to prove his abſolute Decrees. S. Auguſtine.

I now proceed to your third and laſt Propoſition in theſe words,

Sect. 98. Yet I believe we may ſecurely admit the doctrine of perſeverance of God's elect, and the certainty thereof, ſo as it be underſtood, 1. Of their final perſeverance onely, leaving room for great (perhaps total) interruptions and interciſions in the mean time. 2. Of the certainty of the thing, (certitudo objecti,) in regard of the knowledge, and purpoſe of God, but, not of any undoubted aſſurance, that the elect themſelves have thereof, (certitudo ſubjecti, as we uſe to diſtinguiſh them,) there being a great deal of difference between theſe two Propoſitions, It is certain that the elect ſhall not fall away finally, and, The elect are certain that they ſhall not fall away finally.] Of perſeverance of the elect.

Sect. 99. In this Propoſition I can fully yield my concurrence, if by rendring my reaſons for my conſent, I may be allowed to expreſs what I mean by it. This I ſhall doe through the ſeveral branches of it.

1. I believe not onely that ſecurely we may, but that of neceſſity (and under the pain of contradiction in adjecto,) we muſt admit the Doctrine of Perſeverance of God's Elect, and the certainty, (moſt unqueſtionable certainty) thereof, God's Election of any perſon to the reward of the Covenant, being undoubtedly founded in the perſeverance of that perſon in the faith, this perſeverance being the expreſs condition of the Covenant, He that endureth to the end, the ſame ſhall be ſaved, he and none but he, but if he draw back, God's ſoul hath no pleaſure in him. Matth. 24. 30. Heb. 10. 30.

Sect. 100. Which that it is nothing available toward concluding that they which can fall totally from their juſtified eſtate, may not yet fall finally alſo, I infer to be your ſenſe from your great diſlike of the Calviniſts Salvo, taken from the diſtinction of a true and temporary faith, which aſſures me, you take that faith for true, which yet is but temporary, than which nothing is more contrary to the eſtabliſhing the perſeverance of all the faithfull, unleſs there be ſome promiſe that all temporaries ſhall ſo recover again before their death, as finally to perſevere, (which as I think, 'twill not be pretended, ſo if it be, they are no longer temporaries,) or unleſs it ceaſe to be in their power to continue in their ſins, into which they are fallen, which ſure it cannot, unleſs the grace of perſeverance be irreſiſtible, which if it were, there is no reaſon, why that of converſion, to all that are converted, ſhould not be irreſiſtible alſo. Temporary faith may be true.

Sect. 101. 2. For their great, (perhaps total) interruptions and interciſions in the mean time, I can no way doubt, but thoſe are ſubject to them, who yet upon God's foreſight of their return, and perſevering conſtancy at length, are elected to ſalvation. It is certain, which the Article of our Church ſaith, that as they which have received the holy Ghoſt may depart from grace given and fall away, ſo by the ſame grace of God they may return again, and then returning they may no doubt perſevere, and then 'tis certain they are elected to ſalvation, the mercy and pardon in Chriſt extending not onely to the ſins of an unregenerate ſtate, and the infirmities and frailties of the regenerate; but alſo to all the wilfull ſins and falls of thoſe that do timely return again by repentance, as David and Peter did (but Judas certainly, Solomon poſſibly did not,) and then continue ſtedfaſt unto the end. And ſo 'tis onely the final perſeverance that is required indiſpenſably of the elect, which is reconcileable with their great, perhaps total interciſions. The elect ſubject to interciſions.

Sect. 102. But 'tis not amiſs here to advert, that this doth no more ſuppoſe or include the reconciliation or favour of God, to thoſe that have been once regenerate, when they are fallen into groſs ſins, than to the unregenerate remaining in the ſame or greater ſins, it being as poſſible in reſpect of us, (perhaps more probable in reſpect of God,) that the unregenerate may convert and perſevere, (and then they are approved to be the elect,) as that they that were once regenerate, but now fallen, may return again. It is as certain from before Paul's birth, and from all eternity, that he was elected, as that David or Peter was, and then either his blaſphemous perſecuting the name of Chriſt muſt have been at the time when he was guilty of that, reconcileable with God's favour, viz. before his converſion (and then for the gaining of God's favour what needed his converſion?) or elſe Peter's denying and abjuring of Chriſt, David's adultery and murther muſt not be reconcileable, notwithſtanding their ſuppoſed election. For as to the ſonſhip of their former life, that will no more excuſe their contrary waſting ſins, than the future ſonſhip of the other, nay it will ſet the advantage on the other ſide, the unconverted Saul obtains mercy, becauſe he did it ignorantly, in unbelief, Whilſt their ſins have the aggravation of being ſins againſt Grace, and forſaking and departing from God, which reſpect makes the ſtate of Apoſtates as the moſt unexcuſable, ſo the moſt deſperately dangerous ſtate. The falls of thoſe that have been once regenerate no more reconcileable with God's favour than of the unregenerate. Nay the advantage is on the unregenerates part, 1 Tim. 1. 13.

Sect. 103. 3. That there is a Certitudo objecti to all the elect, cannot be doubted, for if they be elected to ſalvation, they will finally perſevere, if they perſevere not, they were not elected. Again this certainty of the object, is a certainty in regard of the knowledge and purpoſe of God. 1. Of his knowledge Certainty of the object.

that

that either they will not fall, or if they do, that they will riſe again, and then finally perſevere. 2. Of his purpoſe or decree of election, that every ſuch, finally perſevering, though formerly lapſed Chriſtian, ſhall be ſaved.

Certainty of the ſubject.

Sect. 104. 4. For the Certitudo ſubjecti; as I conſent to you fully in diſclaiming any neceſſity of that, ſo I ſuppoſe it is wholly extrinſecal to this ſubject, devolving to this other queſtion, not whether every one that is elect, be ſure he ſhall not fall away, but whether every believer be or ought to be ſure of his election? Of which if he were ſure, I could not reſiſt his being obliged to believe himſelf certain of his final Perſeverance; Election and final falling being incompetible.

Sect. 105. Having given you this interpretation of my ſenſe, and ſo conſent to each branch of your Propoſition, I have no more to add, but that if you mean it in a farther ſenſe, proportionable to your former conjecture on the head of decrees, or Biſhop Overal's opinion, I ſhall no otherwiſe debate or queſtion it, than I did that, and ſo the fate of this and that are folded up the one in the other, and if the Scripture ſhall be found favourable to the one, it ſhall be yielded, and then there will be no controverſie of the other.

The great need of caution in handling this ſubject of Perſeverance.

Sect. 106. Onely I deſire to add, that it will deſerve our ſpecial care and warineſs, ſo to deliver our thoughts in this matter, that we leave no man any ground of hope, that in caſe he depart from his duty, and ſo fall from Grace, or into any wilfull act or habit of ſin, he ſhall yet be ſo preſerved, whether by God's Grace, or by his power, and providence, that he ſhall not finally die without repentance: for as there is no promiſe of God to found that hope, ſo in time of temptation to any pleaſurable, tranſporting ſin, &c. it will be in danger to betray and ruine him, that hath a good opinion of himſelf, eſpecially if he hath been taught, that faith is a full aſſurance of his Election.

Of God's favour to rebellious children.

Sect. 107. The ſame I ſay of Grace, as it ſignifies the paternal favour of God to his elect children, which is thought by ſome to be onely clouded, and, as to their ſenſe and preſent experience and comfort, darkned by their moſt wilfull ſins, ſo as God may be highly diſpleaſed with them, as David with his ſon Abſalom, and yet continue his paternal Love and favour to them, as David did his to that ungracious ſon, in the height of his Rebellion.

Sect. 108. 'Tis poſſible this Example of David may have ſome Rhetorical Energy in it, to perſwade and deceive ſome. If it have, then 1. I may not unfitly ask this queſtion, whether they think God had then that kindneſs to Abſalom that David had? If he had not, how can it be drawn into example to God? If he had, how then can it agree with it, to cut him off in the midſt of his Rebellion, which 'tis manifeſt David would not have done. But omitting that, I anſwer 2. that 'tis viſible, that this in David was paſſionate indulgence, ſuch as men (as Joab tells him) diſliked, and to this kind of humane paſſionate, I oppoſe that other kind of divine diſpaſſionate love, producing in God bowels of pity, frequent admonitions and warnings, powerfull meſſages, ſtrong and earneſt calls, and propoſition of all rational motives to repentance. But if thoſe prevail not, the juſt ſtill continuing to draw back, God's ſoul hath no pleaſure in him, and the greater obligations of Love and Grace they are, againſt which he hath ſinn'd, the greater the provocations are in the ſight of God, and nothing conſequently but the greater degree of puniſhment to be expected. How God is affected toward rebellious ſons is ſet down, Iſa. 1.2,10,11,12, &c.

Sect. 109. And then to put any man in hope, that what is not ordinarily revealed in the Goſpel, may yet be laid up for him in the cabinet of God's ſecret counſels with this ſeal upon it, The Lord knoweth thoſe that are his, as if they might be his ſtill in God's acceptation, which walk moſt contrarily to him, this may prove a moſt dangerous ſnare of ſouls, and it is ſtrange it ſhould ſeek ſhelter in that Text, 2 Tim. 2. 19. which was moſt expreſly deſigned to the contrary, as is evident both by the notation of the στερέωμα in the beginning of the verſe, which in all probability ſignifies the Covenant of God, the βεβαίωσις ſtability whereof, there preſt, muſt aſſure us that there is no ſalvation to be expected, but according to the contents of that great indenture, once for all ſealed in the bloud of Chriſt, of which as that indeed is one part, which is inſcribed on one ſide of the ſeal [The Lord knoweth thoſe that are his] i. e. he will never fail to own thoſe that continue faithfull to him; ſo the other, on the other ſide, is moſt emphatical, [Let every one that nameth the name of Chriſt, depart from iniquity] which if he do not, he hath forfeited all the Privileges of his Chriſtianity.

No comfort for ſuch from 2 Tim. 2. 19.

The Marcuſians hereſie in this point, a good warning.

Sect. 110. The Gnoſtick hereſie, one branch of it eſpecially, noted in Marcus's Scholars, in Irenæus, is a ſeaſonable warning to all ſober Chriſtians in this matter; He told them of an ἀπολύτρωσις, a redemption, or kind of Baptiſm, which rendred them φύσει πνευματικὰς, naturally and immutably ſpiritual, no more to be polluted by ſin, than gold by lying in the mire, or the Sun-beams by lighting on a dunghill, and that whatever they did, they ſhould (as with the helmet of the mother of the Gods) be rendred ἀόρατοι τῷ κριτῇ, inviſible to the Judge. The effects whereof, as to all carnality, &c. were ſo deteſtable, that it becomes every man moſt ſolicitouſly to guard and ſecure his Schemes of Election and Doctrine of perſeverance of the Elect, from all probability, if not poſſibility, of miniſtring to the like, and that cannot well be by any other method of reſolution, but this, that thoſe that perſevere unto the end ſhall be ſaved, and none elſe, our tenure in all the privileges of Election, 1. God's favour, 2. the continual aſſiſtence of his Grace, and 3. the inheritance of ſons, being inſeparably relative and annext to the conſtant filial obedience, which he indiſpenſably requires of us, under the Goſpel of conditional promiſes.

The concluſion

Sect. 111. Thus have I paſt through all your Letter and given my ſelf the liberty of theſe ſtrictures, by way of reflexion on all and every paſſage therein, which belonged to this ſubject of God's Decrees and his Grace; And without the addition of any unneceſſary recapitulation of the ſeverals, it is already evident, how perfect the agreement is between us in all that you in any degree poſitively aſſert, or own as your opinion: And if in one particular which you are ſo carefull to propoſe, as a bare conjecture, and not allow it your favour in any other quality, it ſhould happen that we finally diſſent (though in propriety of ſpeech conjectures are not ſentiments) yet it were ſtrange the diſpute betwixt us ſhould be of any length. And ſo you diſcern the utmoſt of uneaſineſs, which is likely to be given you by this addreſs of,

Dear Sir,

Your moſt affectionate brother and ſervant,

H. HAMMOND.

A Second LETTER,

BEING

A View of two Emergent Difficulties.

Dear Sir,

Sect. 1. THE very friendly reception which my larger trouble found from you, is my full encouragement to proceed to the concluſion of my importunity and your exerciſe, which cannot now be far off, if I may judge by your Letter.

Sect. 2. Two difficulties, you ſay, you have ſprung by farther entring into the conſideration of this matter, the firſt occaſioned by my diſtinction betwixt the work of Grace and of Providence, the ſecond ariſing from the Conceſſions of Scripture of God's withdrawing his grace from thoſe that reject it. Two difficulties.

Sect. 3. To thoſe I ſhall make theſe returns, which I doubt not will prove ſatisfactory. The firſt ſeemeth to favour an ἐποχὴ or ſuſpence, and to avert all defining in theſe points: For, ſay you, ſince the efficacy of Divine grace followeth the acts of his Providence, ſo as it may ſeem in a manner to depend chiefly thereupon, and the ways of his providence are abyſſus multa, deep and unfathomable, it ſeemeth to you to conclude ſtrongly that the manner how God effectually worketh by his grace to the converſion of a ſinner is alſo to our underſtandings incomprehenſible.] To this you cannot but foreſee my reply, that the propoſal of that diſtinction was by me deſigned as a prejudice to Biſhop Overal's way, which you had then mentioned as your conjecture. And if it ſhall have indeed that influence upon you or any man, as you ſpeak of, to encreaſe the difficulty, and to conclude ſtrongly, that the manner of God's working, &c. is incomprehenſible; yet you know this cannot in juſtice be applied farther than to that particular Scheme, againſt which peculiarly this diſadvantage was propoſed, and then the onely regular concluſion is, that this which you propoſed but as a conjecture, ſhould now grow lower in your eſteem, and ſcarce be thought worthy to be own'd as ſuch. An argument from the unfathomableneſs of God's providence. The diſtinction between providence and grace. The force thereof againſt the forementioned conjecture.

Sect. 4. And the more force there is in this one conſideration, thus to incline you, the leſs ſhall I deſpair, that two more conſiderations, which then encompaſſed this, and the ſuperadded tender of another way, that the Scripture-grounds, eſpecially Chriſt's parables in the Goſpel, ſuggeſted, will in ſome degree prevail with you, to depoſite this conjecture, which (beſide other prejudices againſt it,) hath no grounds of Scripture to pretend to, in exchange for that other, that hath, and pretends no farther, than it ſhall approve it ſelf to be thus founded. Other conſiderations to prejudice it.

Sect. 5. This is all that I may ſay to an objection which I was to cheriſh and ſtrengthen, (rather than anſwer.) But I ſhall not think that needfull, onely I leave it to have that force with you, which you ſhall ſee fit to give it, remembring onely that it ought not to have force with him, that accepts not that Scheme, that alone is concerned in it.

Sect. 6. Which Scheme having been propoſed by you with perfect warineſs, and profeſſion of allowing it to be no more than a conjecture, one ſuch difficulty as this, is, I acknowledge, ſufficient to remove you from it, and in that caſe it will not be unſeaſonable again to tender that which you may find better qualified for your acceptance, having without queſtion an advantage, from the parable of the ſower, to recommend it. I ſhall endeavour to make this clear to you. Your ſuppoſed intricacy, or unfathomable queſtion, is, what it is that makes ſufficient grace to be effectual to any? I ſay the parable of the ſower was intended by Chriſt on purpoſe to anſwer that queſtion, which it hath competently performed, for here we ſee, the ſeed being the ſame, (whether that were the word, or grace, it matters not, as long as 'tis remembred that the word is the vehicle of grace, and the inſtrument of conveying it to the heart,) all the difference taken notice of, is onely in the ſoil, viz. ſome trodden down, and cruſted; ſome ſtony; ſome thorny; ſome good, and mellow. Proportionably to this four-fold difference of the ground, the ſeveral fates of the ſeed are deſcribed, and your own queſtion divided into four, and anſwer exactly accommodated to each. The other way confirmed from the parable of the ſower. The queſtion, what makes ſufficient grace effectual? Punctually anſwered by Chriſt. The fourfold difference of ſoil.

Sect. 7. The firſt queſtion is this, what is it that makes ſufficient grace, uneffectual, to ſome men, ſo that though it be on God's part freely afforded them, and as freely as to any other, yet it hath not the leaſt effect upon them? And the anſwer is evident in the explanation of that parable, Matth. 13. 19. becauſe he is ἀκούων τὸν λόγον καὶ μὴ συνιείς, one that hears the word, to which that grace is annexed, but either underſtands it not, or minds it not; and ſo the Devil comes and catcheth away that which was ſown, (and in that caſe there is no great need of that Devil towards the obſtructing effectualneſs, let the ſeed lie there never ſo long, if it be not minded, it can ſignifie nothing toward an harveſt.) The one queſtion divided into four. The firſt.

Sect. 8. The ſecond queſtion is, what is it that makes ſufficient Grace, after it is received, and that with joy, (great forwardneſs and alacrity at the firſt) to become ſo uneffectual to the ſupporting a man in time of temptation, that rather than endure any ſmart for piety, he falls into any the groſſeſt ſins? And the anſwer follows, ver. 21. becauſe ſuch a man is of a temper that yields not Grace any depth to root in, he hath ſome ſtonineſs at the bottom, ſome pleaſure, or paſſion, or other remains of reſiſtence rooted in him, which he hath not deveſted himſelf of, and when duty begins any way to check that, he is impa- The ſecond.

tient, and throws off piety, of which he made very fair profeſſions, and ſuch as had, as far as his trials formerly went, reality in them, till this laſt ſignal trial was made of him, for which, it ſeems by the effect, he was not qualified.

The third. Sect. 9. The third queſtion is, what is the reaſon that ſufficient Grace, once received and bringing forth fruits, though it come not to combat with any ſharp trials, doth yet many times decay and periſh after a while? And the anſwer is, ver. 22. that there remained in the heart of ſuch ſome piece of ill temper unreformed, which in time prolified, and ſent out great and waſting ſins (though not ſo generally decryed in the World) viz. worldly ſolicitudes, and ſuch as the wealth of the World is apt to beget in them that have or ſeek it, and theſe being permitted to thrive in the ſoul, 'tis regular that Grace, which cannot conſiſt with ſuch (you cannot ſerve God and Mammon) ſhould be overrun, and choaked, and at length deſtroyed by that means, which had it not been for this cauſe of abortion, as it was ſufficient, and effectual for a while, ſo it would have proſper'd to perſeverance.

The fourth. Sect. 10. And this introduceth the fourth and laſt queſtion, What then is it that renders ſufficient Grace Effectual both to Converſion and Perſeverance? And the Anſwer is, ver. 23. the goodneſs of the ſoul, probity of the heart, wherein that ſufficient Grace is received, and what that is, is beſt diſcerned by

The Character of the honeſt heart. the oppoſition of all the former three, 1. it is a ſincerely, pliable, ductile temper, that neglects not to make uſe of any grain of Grace, 2. it hath an uniform Courage to combat with difficulties, and is not enſlaved to pleaſures, 3. it utterly deſpiſes the World, the allurements and the terrours of it, and uſes it as if it uſed it not. The former part of this temper renders it effectual to converſion, the two latter to perſeverance alſo. And conſidering that parable is ſet down by Chriſt to give account of the various ſucceſſes of the word of the kingdom, i. e. of the Goſpel, among all thoſe to whom it is made known, who with you are the adequate object of the Scripture-election, and reprobation, what can be farther required to the clear ſatisfaction of your whole difficulty?

The Conjecture compared with this other way. Sect. 11. And then remembring that the onely remaining queſtion, viz. whence is this probity? hath been fully anſwered in the former papers, I appeal to no other than your ſelf, whether this be not both a perſpicuous, and authoriſed ſtating, having ſo weighty a paſſage of Goſpel to found it, and therefore in all juſtice preferrable to your bare Conjecture, which, beſides that it is preſſed with difficulties (as your ſelf acknowledge) which to you ſeem unanſwerable, is not provided of any pretence of a foundation, hath no authority from holy Scripture to recommend it.

One pretenſion for the Conjecture. From the finding the hidden treaſure. Sect. 12. If it have any, it is moſt probably that other ſhort parable in the ſame Chapter, ver. 44. where the kingdom of God is compared to a treaſure hid in the field, the which when a man hath found, he hideth, &c. There the man, which found the treaſure, is not ſuppoſed to ſeek it (for that makes another parable, ver. 45.) but by the mere providence of God (which the heathen Philoſophers were wont to ſtyle chance, and commonly give this very inſtance of it the treaſure found in the field,) happily to fall upon it, when he paſſeth by on ſome other errand; And this indeed is matter of frequent obſervation. Auguſtine is converted by S. Ambroſe's Sermon, when he came to it on no ſuch deſign; Saul is called to from Heaven, and converted to Chriſtianity, when he was going to Damaſcus on the moſt diſtant deſign of perſecuting it. And to omit the many more examples of thoſe of whom it hath been literally true, that they have found God, when they ſought him not, asked not after him, one eminent ſtory our books give us, of two young children brought to a City to be ſold, at a time when a devout Nun had vowed, to take ſome young child, and beſtow her whole life, and utmoſt induſtry to bring it up in ſtrict piety, and accordingly came and bought one of them, and as ſoon as ſhe had bought her, a Bawd came in her preſence and bought the other, by which means theſe two, which were ſo lately in the very ſame indifferent condition, by this act of Divine providence (to which this was to be attributed) were ſtrangely diſcriminated, the one brought up and early engaged, and ſo perſevering to the lives end in all piety, and the other by the contrary diſcipline debauched, and educated to the trade of harlotry, wherein ſhe lived and perſevered. In which it is viſible how ſignal an influence this one act of Divine Providence had on ſo diſtant eternal fates of theſe two, and how eminent an ingredient it was in the ſaving the one and damning the other.

The converſion of Auguſtine. Of Saul.

The diſtant fate of two children.

Anſwered. Sect. 13. But from all theſe and innumerable the like, (which are freely granted, and allowed to be competent to confirm your main concluſion, that the Providence of God is Abyſſus multa) you will ſoon diſcern, that there comes in no leaſt advantage to that Learned Biſhop's Scheme, which is the matter of your Conjecture, and our onely preſent enquiry. The whole weight of that (as far as I, or any man queſtions it) being laid, not on the ſuperabundance afforded to one above the other, (which is willingly granted) but on the foreſeen univerſal inefficaciouſneſs of the barely ſufficient Grace, acknowledged to be given to all, till that ſuperadded advantage adminiſtred by God's providence in the choice of the congruous timing, come in, as the work of God's Election, to make the diſcrimination.

The point of the difficulty. Whether the barely ſufficient Grace be univerſally inefficacious.

No pretence for this. Sect. 14. Now ſeeing in all theſe examples, and in that parable, nothing like this is to be found, no evidence, or intimation of God's foreſeeing, 1. that that man that found the treaſure, would never have been wrought on by that meaſure of ſufficient Grace, which that opinion allows God formerly to have afforded him, unleſs by that ſeaſonable act of Providence he had thus faln on the treaſure in the parable, or 2. that Auguſtine would never have been converted, if he had not been ſurpriſed by S. Ambroſe's Sermon, or 3. that Saul would not have been converted at another time, without, or even with that viſion, and voice from Heaven, or laſtly that that fortunate child, that fell into the Nun's, inſtead of the Bawd's hands, would never have been brought to Heaven any other way, and could not have miſcarried under this method: Through all theſe inſtances, I ſay, it is ſtill apparent, that nothing is gained toward the approving the Conjecture, theſe advantageous turns of providence afforded one man and not another, and the ſignal efficacy of ſuch, being moſt freely granted by thoſe who deem the Conjecture improbable.

Sect. 15. And indeed, if it be well conſidered, all that theſe, and a myriad of the like inſtances infer, is no more than this, the great and admirable variety of God's providential acts, not as thoſe are all one with, but as in his hands they are inſtrumental and ſubſervient to his Grace, whereby in divers manners manners grace is advantageously assisted by providence, to one in this wise, and admirable manner, to another in that; No man, who is allowed the sufficient Grace, being denied some benefit or other of Providence to assist Grace, and make it more than probable to become effectual to him, if he doth not betray and frustrate the opportunities of the one, as well as the power and efficacy of the other. Providence allowed to assist Grace.

Sect. 16. So that still acknowledging most willingly, and admiring the abyss of Providence, this no way obstructs the comprehending the manner (or perplexes the doctrine) of the cooperation of the Grace of God with the will of man, but leaves it where the Parable of the Sower set it, that the efficacy of Grace, and successfulness, whether to conversion, or perseverance proceeds from the mellowness, and preparedness of the soil, from the advantages which it meets with in the honest heart, as that again is wholly due to God's preventing Graces, which have thus fitted the soil for the kindly seeds-time, planted pliableness, humility in the heart, where Grace may be deeply and durably rooted, but this still resistibly in both parts, as hath formerly been expresst. But is of no force to the Question.

Sect. 17. One fancy I know there is, which hath pleased some men in this matter, that God gives sufficient Grace to those who do not make use of it, but resist it, and yet more than so, the power of using, or accepting, or not resisting it, but gives to the Elect and onely to the Elect, ipsam non-resistentiam, the very not resisting, and this they will have to be the signal discriminating Grace. A Fancy of God's giving the Elect ipsam non-resistentiam.

Sect. 18. Of these I shall demand, 1. Whether in those which have not this ipsam non-resistentiam given them, this be an effect of God's Decree, which hath determined the certain infallible giving it to some peculiar persons, and so the not giving it to all others? If it be not, then this is no foundation of discriminating Grace, or consequently fruit of Election and Reprobation, and so is still impertinent to the matter for which it is brought. Examined and found weak.

Sect. 19. But if it be the effect of God's Decree, determining the giving it to some, and denying it to others, I then 2. demand, whether all they to whom it is not given, do therefore infallibly receive the grace of God in vain, because they have not this ipsa non-resistentia (which is more than the power of not resisting) given them?

Sect. 20. If this be not affirmed, then, as before, this comes not home to discriminating Grace, nor consequently to the business of Election and Reprobation, which it was meant to assist. But if it shall be said, that they therefore infallibly resist, or receive in vain, because this ipsa non-resistentia is not given them, then it seems this gift of ipsa non-resistentia is such, as that they who have it not, want somewhat which is necessary to their effectual receiving, or not resisting Grace, and if this be the condition of the far greatest part of the World, then how can it with any sincerity be affirmed (as by those that make use of this expedient, it is profest) that God hath to all mankind given Christ, and in him all things, and particularly Grace sufficient, and the power of not-resisting Grace, which according to this fancy, none can chuse, but resist, who have not the ipsam non-resistentiam given them, which yet they affirm to be given but to a few, i. e. to none but the elect?

Sect. 21. This were (by interpretation, and in effect) for God to give to all men a power to an act, which yet the greatest part of those which have it given them, can never make use of to that act, for want of somewhat else which is not given them, which to all them which have not that somewhat else given (and those the far greatest number of men for whom Christ died) is not a power to that act, viz. of not-resisting, which what is it other than a direct contradiction, a power and not a power to the same act? and withall so far from being a favour to them, that it is in event infallibly and inevitably the greatest curse, that could have befaln them, viz. the heightning and extremely aggravating of their guilt and punishment, proportionably to their sin of resisting such sufficient grace, of standing out against Christ, which as it is the height of guilt, (and awarded the dregs of God's wrath,) now under the Gospel, and makes their condition in the world to come, much worse, than it would have been, if Christ had never been born, or preached to them, so it had never been thus direfully charged upon them, if they had not had the power of not-resisting given them by Christ.

Sect. 22. This is a competent prejudice and discouragement to this fancy, of founding discriminating grace and the doctrine of unconditionate decrees in this difference betwixt the power of resisting, and the ipsa non-resistentia, the latter given onely to the Elect. Considered in relation to this fancy.

Sect. 23. But it will farther be defeated, if we reflect on that place of Scripture, wherein God's giving the ipsa non-resistentia chiefly seems to be mentioned, Phil. 2. 13. under the style of ἐνεργῶν τὸ θέλειν καὶ ἐνεργεῖν, working in us to doe, or work, which that it tends not to the support or advantage of this fancy may be evident by these three considerations. Phil. 2. 13.

Sect. 24. First, By the importance of the phrase, [working in us to doe, as before to will,] which (as was formerly noted, in passing,) will best be understood by other parallel phrases, as δοῦναι λατρεύειν, God's giving to serve, Luke 1. 72. Which is evidently his giving grace, or power, or supernatural abilities to serve, not onely furnishing him with a remote, and fundamental power, or faculty, but withall having a particular immediate influence on the effect, actuating that power, when it is actuated, and so properly causing, or making him actually to serve, yet so as to leave him power also to neglect, and receive that power in vain, as the Scripture elsewhere saith; Thus Revel. 11. 3. I will give, we render, I will give power, viz. power to the subsequent act, prophesying there, as in Luke, serving in holiness. By which analogy it is evident, that God's working in us to doe, or work, is not interpretable to any more, than his giving supernatural power, or sufficient grace to doe, or work, and causing him actually, though not irresistibly to work, and then here is no pretence whereon to found the foresaid difference between God's giving the power of not-resisting, and the ipsa non-resistentia, these two being equivalent in this Text.

Sect. 25. Secondly, The same appeareth by the Apostle's exhortation foregoing in this Text, to work and work out our own salvation with fear and trembling, for the inforcing whereof this reason is given, for it is God that worketh, &c. Here our own working is under the Apostolical exhortation and precept, we are commanded to work, as elsewhere συνεργεῖν to cooperate, and work together with God, which could not have place, if God alone (and not we,) did work in us the very working, whereas interpreting it of God's giving us the power of working, or doing, as well as of willing, and withall engaging us to make use of that power, and cooperating with us in the very act, and ſo cauſing us actually to work, yet ſo as to leave us a power of reſiſting, and fruſtrating, and receiving this power or grace in vain, this is a moſt proper and effectual inforcement of the exhortation addreſt to us, to work and work out our own ſalvation.

Sect. 26. Thirdly, This farther and moſt irrefragably appears by the perſons, to whom both the exhortation, and this inforcement thereof is tendred, viz. the brethren indefinitely, or beloved, verſe 12. the whole Church of Profeſſours at Philippi to whom he writes, which being not made up wholly of the Elect, ſincere, and perſevering Chriſtians, but like the Net, in Chriſt's Parable, that caught both good and bad, and had no doubt ſome inſincere perſons, hypocrites and temporaries in it, the affirmation notwithſtanding is indiſcriminately of all, God worketh in them to work, which could not hold, if by this phraſe were meant his giving the ipſa non-reſiſtentia, and that as an evidence of diſcriminating grace, and an effect of his Election, for this is not ſuppoſable to have belonged to that whole Church, any more than it then did, or now is believed to do to all Chriſtians.

Sect. 27. I have enlarged thus far, becauſe I was not willing to omit, but rather to prevent whatſoever I could foreſee might probably be objected in this buſineſs. And ſo this may ſuffice to have returned to your firſt difficulty.

The ſecond difficulty. Concerning God's withdrawing ſufficient Grace.

Sect. 28. The ſecond difficulty you thus propoſe; Whereas it is ſaid, and that, (as you conceive) moſt truly and agreeably to plain evidence of Scripture, that God withdraweth his grace from ſuch as rejecting it when it is offered to them by the preaching of the Goſpel, do thereby fruſtrate the Counſel of God againſt themſelves, it ſeemeth hard to conceive how the grace of God ſhould be ſo withdrawn from them, that ſo doe, but that, ſo long as they are not deprived of the outward means, the ſame ſufficient grace that was offered to them at the firſt hearing of the Goſpel, is offered to them ſtill; which if it was then ſufficient on God's part, to doe the work, is alſo ſtill ſufficient, and that in the ſame degree, and how then can it be ſaid to be withdrawn? It is true that the converſion of ſuch a perſon, after ſo long obſtinacy and refuſal is more difficult than before, which may ariſe from the greater indiſpoſition of the perſon to be wrought upon, but how it can be imputed in the leaſt, to the withdrawing of the divine grace, (to which yet undoubtedly it may and ought to be imputed,) upon the former ſuppoſal on the like ſufficiency remaining, I muſt profeſs my ſelf not able to underſtand.]

The ſeveral ways of God's withdrawing Grace.

Sect. 29. To this I ſhall not doubt to apply a ſatisfactory anſwer, and ſuch as you will acknowledge to be ſuch, by diſtinguiſhing of God's withdrawing his grace. For 1. it being God's method to give more grace to thoſe that walk worthy of it, the humble obedient children of grace, when he on our provocations ſtops that current, this may be called withdrawing. God's ſmitings are his admonitions, (hear ye the Rod,) his admonitions, as any other diſpenſation of his Word, are vehicles of grace, and when theſe prevail not, they are thus withdrawn, i. e. not farther encreaſed, why ſhould ye be ſmitten any more, &c. Iſa. 1.) Yet is this withdrawing conſiſtent with God's affording ſufficient grace, either by inſtruments of ſome other kind, or even of the ſame kind, the continuance of that proportion, which was formerly afforded; as he that gives a competency, and would if he ſaw it well uſed, daily make additions to it, though he ſee cauſe to withhold thoſe additions, yet he may continue that competency. But in propriety of ſpeech, (the truth is,) this is rather withholding, than withdrawing, yet becauſe the not giving what was promiſed to be given is tantamount to withdrawing, I therefore place this in the firſt rank, ſuppoſing it clear, that this doth not onely leave ſufficient grace; but is it ſelf deſigned to awaken and quicken thoſe that did not formerly make good uſe of it, leſt a worſe thing yet befall them.

The firſt rather withholding.

Conſiſts with his affording ſufficient.

The ſecond. Not total.

Sect. 30. Secondly, Then withdrawing being taken in the proper ſenſe, for taking away from and diminiſhing the ſtock, before afforded, that may yet be but in part, not total, and there being a latitude in ſufficient grace, ſome degrees of that may be taken away, and yet that which remains be ſufficient, an image of which is that degree of Church-cenſures, which cutting off from the participation of the Euchariſt, or ſuſpending from it, allows the hearing of the Word, and partaking in the prayers of the faithfull. And this act of God's withdrawing, again is ſo far from denying ſufficient grace, that it is purpoſely uſed and deſigned, as the moſt probable means to make that ſufficient grace effectual, which formerly had not been ſo.

The third total, but onely for the time, and neither ſimply total.

Sect. 31. There may yet be a third, and yet farther degree of withdrawing, which at the preſent, and as to ſufficient grace, may be ſaid to be total, i. e. ſuch a withdrawing of grace at the preſent, that it ſhall truly be ſaid ſuch a man is not now allowed ſufficient for his neceſſities, whether it be that his neceſſities are grown greater, and ſo the former competency will not ſuffice, or be it alſo, that ſome of that which he had is withdrawn, as when he that for ſome time had no violent temptations, and was furniſhed with ſtrength proportionable to what he had, upon his betraying this ſtrength, and ſinning wilfully againſt it, is by God called out to ſharper Combats, having been foiled with the weaker, and perhaps ſome part of his former ſtrength withdrawn from him alſo, when he hath moſt need of ſuccours, and ſhould certainly have had them, had he not thus provoked the withholding them. In this caſe the aim of this puniſhment of God's is yet moſt wiſe and mercifull, thus to convince ſuch a man of his guilts, and impotence, (the effect of them,) and ſo as by turning Nebuchadnezzar into the field, thoroughly to humble him, to excite ardency of prayers, both for pardon, and grace, which God in that caſe fails not to give, and ſo to reſtore ſuch a man to a greater ſtability of his former ſtate.

Sect. 32. And ſo ſtill this is neither final, nor ſimply total, as that ſignifies withdrawing all grace, but onely total for a time in the ſenſe declared, as it ſignified the withdrawing what was neceſſary to their preſent ſtate.

Sect. 33. And I need not ſhew you how far this is reconcileable with ſufficient grace, any farther than thus, that ſuch an one though ſeverely mulcted hath yet time for repentance and grace to make ſome uſe of it, which if he fails not in, he hath aſſurance of more grace, and this demonſtrated to be ſo, by his not being cut off in his ſins, (God's long-ſuffering leading him to repentance,) and by the light of God's word, and articulation of his calls daily continued to him, which are not void of that grace, which is ſufficient to work conviction, and hath the promiſe of more, (upon asking,) made to him that is thus qualified for it.

Rom. 2. 4.

Sect. 34. Fourthly, There is the removing the Candlestick, the withdrawing all the outward ordinary means of Grace, the preaching of the Word and Sacraments, which if it be done by the censures of the Church, is called the delivering up to Satan, or if it be done by God's judgments, invasion of Barbarians, &c. it is yet to those persons that are thus punished, perfectly proportionable to that of the Church-censures. And yet of those it is said expresly by the Apostle, that the end of inflicting them is for admonition, that they may be disciplined, taught not to blaspheme. This supposes continuance of Grace to them that are thus punished, and that sufficient to make use of this punishment to their amendment, nay the punishment, though it be the withdrawing of one instrument of Grace, is it self another, and therefore purposely chosen and allowed in exchange for the former, because it is looked on as the more probable to produce the Effect. The fourth total, yet it self designed as a Grace, most effectual of any. 2 Cor. 13. 10. 1 Tim. 1. 20.

Sect. 35. They that see so great a benefit withdrawn from them for their unworthiness, will be thereby excited to reflect on their provocations, and bewail them, and contend by all regular means to regain what they have forfeited, and to repair their defects some other way, and this being the very end to which this punishment is by God designed, it is not imaginable, he doth yet (till this method also be despised) withhold that degree of Grace from such which is necessary for the producing of the Effect.

Sect. 36. All the Ordinances of God, we know (and such are the Censures) yea and all the wise dispensations of his providence, particularly his punishments of this life (and therefore this, as the last, beside excision) are instruments of Grace in the hands of his wisedom, as well as the preaching of the Word is, and therefore in all reason to be resolved to be the vehicles of Grace also, and so neither is this any objection against God's giving sufficient Grace to those, whom he thus punishes, in case they begin to make use of it. If they do not, but continue still obstinate, 'tis just it should at length be withdrawn from them. God's punishments instruments of his Grace.

Sect. 37. But this must be understood onely of those persons to whom the light of the Gospel had formerly shined, not to their distant posterity, which never have had any gleams of it, though their Ancestours had the fullest Sunshine. These are to be reckon'd with the Heathen, with whom you know we undertook not to meddle, treating onely of the Scripture-Election, terminated in those to whom the Scripture is revealed.

Sect. 38. Fifthly, There is a total and final withdrawing of all Grace, as well as the means of it, which is visible in the cutting off such an one in his sins, and when this comes, our former supposal of sufficient Grace, as of the preaching of the Word, and God's calls, are utterly at an end, but this breeds no shew of difficulty, that man having enjoyed and mispent his time of sufficient Grace, and now the store-houses are shut up. The fifth total and final withdrawing of all Grace by excision.

Sect. 39. But there is yet possibly a sixth state of withdrawing, when before either cutting off, or withdrawing God's outward calls, whilst life, and the preaching of the word is continued, the obdurate sinner, that hath long hardned his own heart against God, thereby provokes him totally to withdraw all inward Grace from him, as much as if he were already in hell; This seems to be Pharaoh's case after the sixth judgment, and was designed by God to very excellent ends, to make him an example to all those that should be inclined to harden their hearts against God; And though we know not that God thus deals with any others, yet it is sure he justly may with all whom he may justly cut off in their sins. And in this case I acknowledge the non-conversion of such a man is not onely imputable to the indisposition of the person to be wrought on, but also to the withdrawing of the divine grace, for then, as I said, the former supposal (of the like sufficiency remaining) ceaseth, and is out-dated. The sixth before excision.

Sect. 40. What fresh difficulties can arises from this concession, I cannot divine, unless, 1. it should be objected, that then, it seems, the word is not always the vehicle of Grace, and then, 2. who knows when it is so, when not? And how then is this reconcileable with the doctrine of sufficient grace always accompanying the word? And to these the answers are obvious, 1. that it is granted that the Word is not the vehicle of Grace to the Devils who believe and tremble, to the damned who have received their sentence, nay nor to those that are thus arrived to the highest degree of obduration in this life, and have, as Pharaoh, this exterminating sentence passed upon them. It is sufficient if it be so to them that are in a capacity to make use of it, and have not utterly hardned themselves against it, the Scripture-expression being, that the Gospel is the power of God to salvation to every one that believes it, and this is enough to establish our pretensions, the doctrine of sufficient grace. There is a competent time allowed every man, and 'tis certain, death is the conclusion of it, 'tis possible some space before death. The word is not accompanied with Grace to the damned, or the highest degree of obduration. Rom. 1. 16.

Sect. 41. As for the second, if it were on the premised grounds granted, that sometimes it cannot be known whether or no the preaching of the Word do then bring this Grace with it, yet the one regular consequence would be that we should all be the more carefull to make use of Grace, when it is afforded: But when to this is added, that this barren season is always the reward of obstinate obduration (and of nothing less than that) As long as we have any softness left, that is our assurance that this sad time is not yet come upon us. They that go on in their obdurate course, have reason to expect this fatal period every hour, but they that have remorse, and any degree of sincere relenting, may know by this, that this state of spiritual death hath not yet seised them, and that is sufficient to guard this doctrine from all noxious consequences, having provided that none shall hereby think his state desperate, that is willing to reform it. Where any softness, none of that.

Sect. 42. But then it is farther to be remembred, that there appears not in the word of God, any other example of this total spiritual dereliction finally inflicted, before death, but onely that of Pharaoh, after the time that God is said to have hardned his heart; and the reason of this is set down, God keeps him alive, after the time due to his excision, that he might shew in him his power. And such singular examples ought no farther to be taken into consideration by us at this distance from them, than to warn us, that we keep as far as it is possible from the like provocations. And then there remains not, that I discern, any farther appearance of difficulty in this matter. Pharaoh the onely example of it in Scripture. Rom. 9. 17.

Sect. 43.

Sect. 43. As for any others that shall be apt to occur, when men set themselves to consider of these points, not divining what they are, I may not pretend to speak to them, any farther than thus, that in all probability they may be measured by these, which you have chosen to mention, and by nearer approach to them be likewise found not to be so deep, as at the distance they are conceited to be. This then concludes your trouble; It remains that according to my promise I now onely annex the Letters of Presience, and hasten to subscribe my self,

Your most affectionate brother and servant,

H. HAMMOND.

THE EXTRACTS OF Three LETTERS

Concerning God's Presience reconciled with Liberty and Contingency, referred to, and promised in the first Letter to D. Sanderson, Sect. 8.

The First LETTER.

Sect. 1. AS to the distinction betwixt inevitably and infallibly, (of which you desire my sense) it is certain you must understand no more by the infallibility, than is vulgarly meant by Necessitas ex Hypothesi, which is no more than that whatsoever is, cannot not be, or, omne quod est, eo ipso quod est, necessario est. For so whatsoever is seen, or (which is all one in an infinite Deity) foreseen by God, is thereby supposed to have, in that science of his, an objective Being; If it were not, or did not come to pass, it should have no such objective Being, if it have, it is thereby evidenced to be seen by him, who was, is, and is to come, and so (being infinite) is equally present to all, and equally sees, and knows all from all eternity. What therefore you conclude (as it is most agreeable to this, so it) is most true, that God knows all things as they are, such as come to pass contingently, he knows to come contingently, and from thence I undeniably conclude, therefore they are contingent. As for Socinus's resolution that he foresees onely what are foreseeable, and that contingents are not such, but onely those that come to pass by his decree, I conceive it as dangerous as Mr. Calvin's, that he predetermines all things, and it is visibly as false. For it is evident by the prophecies of Judas, &c. that God long (before) foresees sins, which are as certainly contingent, and not decreed or decreeable by God. If therefore any that writes against the Remonstrants go about to retort their arguments, and conclude from their acknowledgments of God's presience, what is charged on their adversaries doctrine of predetermination, I conceive it is but a boast, that hath no least force in it, predetermination having a visible influence and causality on the object, but eternal vision, or prevision being so far from imposing necessity on the thing to be, that it supposes it to be already, from the free choice of the Agent, and that being of it is, in order of nature, before its being seen. God's seeing, or foreseeing hath no more operation or causality of any kind on the object, than my seeing your letter hath caused your letter. You wrote freely, and now I see it, and that being supposed, it is infallibly certain that you have written, and that you cannot not have written. And just so it is in respect of God. Onely I am finite, and so is my sight, I see few things, and those onely which are present, but God being infinite sees all ab infinito, that are never so long hence future.—At Cambridge they have lately printed Origen contra Celsum, and Philocalia Gr. & Lat. (which were rarely had and dear) the latter of which hath good Chapters on this subject.

Sect. 2. This Letter met with some prepossessions, so far advanced, as to cause a Reply of some length, and that necessitated my larger endeavours to remove them, which I shall here add also; His Reply to which this refers, is none of my goods, and therefore I may not take that liberty in disposing of that, but you will discern the force of it, in my returns which were as follows.

The

The Second LETTER.

SIR,

Sect. 3. I Received your Letter, and in it your ſenſe of that difficult point, which I cannot approve of, but on the contrary aſſure my ſelf, that as Omnipotence is not onely the power of doing all things that any or all creatures can doe, but more than ſo, the doing all things that imply not a contradiction, (as the ſame thing at once to be and not to be, the doing of thoſe being as impoſſible to God, as it is to lie,) ſo the Omniſcience of God is the knowing all things which any creature can know, and not onely ſo, but the knowing all things which imply not a contradiction to be known, and then that will be extenſible to all things that are paſt, preſent, or to come, of what ſort ſoever they are; what is paſt, or preſent, or being future is decreed by him, or comes to paſs by ſome neceſſary cauſe in nature, which he decrees not to hinder, God's knowledge of theſe will not, I ſuppoſe, be doubted of. All the queſtion will be of future contingents, which before they are done, are poſſible to be, or not to be, but whenſoever they come to paſs, are as determinately in being, as is any thing elſe, (the moſt neceſſary,) that is already done. Unleſs then, what by being future, is out of my reach, is alſo by being future, out of God's reach, there can be no pretence that any ſuch future contingent ſhould not be objicible to God's all-ſeeing knowledge.

Omniſcience proportionable to Omnipotence.

Future contingents within God's reach.

Sect. 4. And that nothing that ever ſhall be, or will come to paſs, is thus out of God's reach, muſt ſure be yielded to God's immenſity, which relating to time, as well as place, it will be equally derogatory to it to limit it to the preſent time, in oppoſition to the future, * and to the preſent, (be it whatſoever finite,) place. This therefore I take to be the one thing fit to be conſidered in this matter, whether God's immenſity comprehend not a commenſuration to all time, and ſomewhat beyond that, as much as infinite is beyond finite.

Proved by God's immenſity.

Sect. 5. This I ſuppoſe cannot be denied to the Notion which is due to a Deity; and if ſo, then God was immenſe from all eternity, and cannot be imagined to advance or arrive to this by any vel nam proficiency, or improvement, by continuing or enduring from the beginning to this time, or to the end of the world, but in every imaginable point of time, even before time was, he was thus immenſe; and if ſo, his knowledge being as immenſe as himſelf, all that he was from eternity preſent to, (i. e. all things that ever were or ſhall be,) muſt needs be objected to his knowledge.

Sect. 6. Againſt this, your prime argument is, that it is no more derogatory to his omniſcience not to know that which is in nature unintelligible, than to his Omnipotence, not to doe things impoſſible.] This is expreſly Socinus's grand argument, and to it I anſwer. 1. That the phraſe (in nature unintelligible,) may be ſet to ſignifie no more than what no natural, i. e. created power can know, and then there is no truth in the propoſition, unleſs proportionably [impoſſible] ſignifie what no finite natural created power can doe: and if both thoſe phraſes be meant ſo, there is nothing gain'd by it, becauſe a Deity may both doe and know more, than any creature can. But then ſecondly, the phraſe [in nature unintelligible] may alſo ſignifie that which in the nature of things, whether finite or infinite, created or uncreated, is not poſſible to be underſtood; And thus I ſuppoſe you mean it, and then the interpretation of the phraſe muſt be, that for ſuch a thing to be objicible to any, though infinite, underſtanding, implies a contradiction, (for nothing elſe is ſimply impoſſible:) And this being your meaning, I abſolutely deny, that for God to be by his immenſity preſent to all time, (and all that he is preſent to, he may ſee,) implies a contradiction, or hath any appearance, (to him that conſiders what infinite is,) of ſo implying. And if you will make trial and attempt to prove it doth, it muſt be by proceeding on the known definition of contradictories, a repugnance in terminis, as idem eodem reſpectu eſſe & non eſſe, and then you will ſoon diſcern the unqueſtionable truth of my denial. For God's ſeeing all future contingents, will neither imply God to be, and not to be, to ſee, and not to ſee, to ſee certainly, and not to ſee certainly, nor the future contingent to be, and not to be, or to be neceſſarily and not to be neceſſarily, or to be future, and not to be future. For the thing being future and contingent now, and ſo continuing till it comes to paſs, and when it comes to paſs, coming to paſs contingently, and ſo as it might not come to paſs alſo, but when it actually is done, it implying a contradiction, (and ſo being impoſſible,) not to be done, and ſo being neceſſary neceſſitate hypotheticâ, i. e. ſuppoſing that it is, all this God ſees and knows by the ſeveral acts of his intellect, anſwerable to the ſeveral notions of the thing.

Socinus's argument anſwered.

Of the contradiction.

Sect. 7. From all eternity, and ſo in every point of time, before it comes to paſs, God ſees it both as future, and as contingent, and ſo, as that, which till it is, may be or may not be; and when it comes to paſs, in ipſo fieri, he ſees the man that does it, act freely, having power to the contrary, and the thing never neceſſary, but as being done, and that onely by that neceſſity, whereof that propoſition in logick is to be underſtood, Omne quod eſt, eo quod eſt, neceſſario eſt. All which is very obvious to be conceived, and there is not the leaſt contradiction, or ſhew thereof in it.

Sect. 8. This one would think you readily granted, when you ſay, God infallibly knows all that is paſt, preſent, or poſſible to be, (for no man demands any more,) yet you deny it again in theſe words, [mere contingents which with equal poſſibility may be, or may not be, have no being in act, and therefore can caſt no reflexion, or objective being into the mind of God.] To which I reply, Firſt, that you ought to advert, 1. That what may be, or may not be, may be; 2. What may be, is poſſible, and 3. You your ſelf confeſs that God knows all that is poſſible. Secondly, that the having no being in act, (which ſeems to be your ſtumbling block,) is a phraſe proportioned to the thing, and to our finite underſtandings, to which the thing is future onely, and ſo hath no being yet: but when God is conſidered as infinite, then whatſoever ſhall ever be in act, that actual being of it, is the object of God's ſight, and hath been ſo from all eternity, and is no more removed from him, than that is removed from me, which is preſent with me; And if you ſay, God ſees before, what in after time ſhall hang in the balance of humane indetermination, i.e. what he may doe, deliberates, and is free to doe, or not to doe, but hath not yet done, I demand, why may he not alſo foreſee which end of the balance doth at length overpoiſe? (is not one of theſe as truly future, as the other, when the man is not yet born?) And ſo again, which end doth not overpoiſe, and never will, although he ſee it might, if the man ſhould chuſe ſo, and that the man may ſo chuſe, but ſtill that he doth not. This is it, wherein you ſay the contradiction is, and now it is viſible there is none, nor the leaſt approach towards any.

A ſecond objection.

Sect. 9. Here you add, (which is your ſecond main objection,) that it is a miſtake to call that poſſible, which God foreſees ſhall never be, for if God foreſees the contrary, (i.e. that it ſhall never be,) it is indeed impoſſible. But, 1. I pray, is nothing poſſible to come to paſs, but what actually comes to paſs? If ſo, nothing that is, is contingent. But if ſome things be poſſible to come to paſs, which yet do not come to paſs, why may not God ſee they will not come to paſs? And if he can, then that is no miſtake, which you ſay is. 2. Do but change the word foreſight into (which is the ſame,) ſeeing from all eternity, and then it is plain, that God from all eternity, may ſee that thing will never actually be, which yet is free for the agent to doe, or not to doe, (and God ſees that too,) and ſo is poſſible every way, ſave onely ex hypotheſi, on ſuppoſition that it will never be; And as the bare hypothetical neceſſity is no abſolute neceſſity, ſo the bare hypothetical impoſſibility is no abſolute impoſſibility. 3. God ſees every thing as it is, and its being or not being ſuch, is in order of nature antecedent to God's ſeeing it; Therefore it infallibly follows, that if it be poſſible to be, though it ſhall never be, God ſees it is poſſible to be, and if God ſees it poſſible, it unavoidably follows that it is poſſible.

Sect. 10. And it is not fit here to interpoſe, that though it ſeem to us poſſible, in reſpect of ſecond cauſes, yet if God foreſee the contrary, it is indeed impoſſible;] For what I am by God left free to doe, or not to doe, that, not onely ſeems, but is indeed poſſible, and ſo it is, though in event I never doe it, and being ſo in it ſelf, God's ſeeing, it will never be, hath no leaſt influence upon it, ſo as to make the leaſt change in it, (for that is the work of his will, not of his knowledge,) and ſo it cannot from poſſible convert it into impoſſibe.

Sect. 11. When therefore you ſay, no cauſe can effect that which God ſees ſhall never be, this is onely true in ſenſu compoſito, that, in caſe it ſhall never be, and ſo God ſees it ſhall never be, no cauſe ſhall effect it; but in ſenſu diviſo it is moſt falſe, for I am truly able to write more lines to you than I ſhall ever write, or conſequently than God foreſees I ſhall write, and even this, that I am thus able, God equally foreſees.

Sect. 12. By this you ſee how far I am from being convinced, or by any reaſon forced to grant, that future determinations of free agents are not foreſeeable, and what the inconvenience is of affirming they are not, even no leſs than derogating from God's Immenſity, and Infinity, and judging the perceptions of an infinite Creatour by our finite, created meaſures, his more than unfathom'd Ocean by my ſpan, and feigning contradictions, where there are none.

Inconveniences enumerated and anſwered. The firſt.

Sect. 13. Now to the Inconveniences which you enumerate, I ſhall reply alſo, as oft as I perceive I have not prevented, or anſwered them already. The firſt is, that the ſight can be no more certain than the things are which are ſeen, and therefore there cannot be a certain knowledge of thoſe things, which in their cauſes are uncertain,] I anſwer that all the certainty of the knowledge of any thing depends upon its being firſt, and then of its being known to be, and not onely upon the certainty of its cauſes; I do now as certainly know that I have written nine pages to you, as I know that the fire burns, therefore that may be known certainly, which is not certain in its cauſes. And as that which is preſent to me is certainly known by me, ſo are all things to come from all eternity, preſent to an immenſe Creatour, be they contingent, or not. And in this caſe there is not more in the effect than in the cauſe, for what is contingently come to paſs, being done, is certain, and cannot be undone, and God ſees it, as it is, therefore he ſees it as done, and ſo certain, yet as done contingently, and ſo as that which might not have been, the being, certain, the manner of its coming to act, uncertain. The being then being the cauſe of the ſeeing, or in nature antecedent to it, and the ſeeing, the effect or conſequent of the being, the certainty of the effect is but proportionable to, and exceedeth not the cauſe.

The ſecond.

Sect. 14. The ſecond inconvenience is, that of ſaying that every thing that happens was certain to be, before it happens] But I ſay not ſo, unleſs by certain you mean ex hypotheſi, certain to be, in caſe it be; for in caſe it ſhould not be, God ſhould ſee it would not be, and then it ſhould be as certainly otherwiſe.

The third.

Sect. 15. The ſhort is, All Exhortations, Induſtry, Preaching, &c are founded in the liberty of our actions, and if they be free till they be actually determined, and then are paſt freedom, and become neceſſary, ſo conſequently muſt Exhortations, &c. be all uſefull, till the thing be done, (and then indeed, as to the doing, or not doing that, they are not uſefull, but their ſecond ſeaſon of uſefulneſs comes in, in caſe it were a ſin, Exhortation to Repentance, &c.) and that is as much, as can be or need be pretended to, and this is fully competible with God's ſeeing certainly from all eternity, whatſoever ſhall come to paſs in time; His ſeeing it ſuppoſing it done, though for the manner of its being done, that were contingent, and if ſo, then it is not certain to be, before it happens, but it is certain to be, when it is, and it firſt is, in order of nature, before it is ſeen, and its being already ſeen, before it be done, depends onely on the immenſity of God's preſence, and ſight, which reacheth out to all that ever ſhall be; ſo that that which is future to us, he is preſent to it, and in that ſenſe, though he ſees it future, 'tis yet preſent to him.

Sect. 16. Your third inconvenience is, that, by this the damnation of ſuch or ſuch men is as fixed and unalterable, as though they were reprobated from all eternity, and it is as ill in reſpect of me, if I muſt inevitably be damned by my own free will, as if I had been ſentenced to Hell by God's decree, and in reſpect of God worſe, for he muſt be deprived of the free exerciſe of his omnipotence, (becauſe he cannot make that not to be which he foreſees will be) and brought under a Stoical Fatality, and ſo be an helpleſs ſpectator of what anothers will is pleaſed to effect.] I anſwer if by [ſuch and ſuch men] you mean ſuch or ſuch individual entities, without reſpect to their qualifications or demeanures, then all your conſequence, as it is inconvenient, ſo it is falſe; for from God's ſeeing ab æterno, that Judas will be reprobated, it follows not, that he ſees he will be reprobated, but for his wilfull Treaſon. But if you mean by [ſuch or ſuch men] men ſo or ſo qualified, i. e. finally impenitent, then 'tis true, but not inconvenient, that final impenitents ſhould from all eternity be reprobated. And ſpeaking of theſe in this ſenſe, 'tis true, which you add, that it is as ill in reſpect of the perſon, i. e. final impenitents, meaning by [as ill] as ſad and penal, nay 'tis more ſad, and penal to be reprobated for final impenitence, which I am guilty of by my own free will, than it would be to be onely by God's decree involved in it, my wilfull culpable guilt being ſome addition to my miſery, and (as long as God is juſt) it being expectable that thoſe puniſhments will be ſharper, which I bring on my ſelf, by the exerciſe of my free will, than what comes on me by a decree grounded no way in my actions. And ſo ſtill this is no Inconvenience. But if you mean by [as ill] that which hath as little mixture of God's goodneſs towards me, then your conſequence is falſe, for to God's ſeeing Judas reprobated, and his ſeeing it ab æterno, if is no way conſequent, that he gives him no power to eſcape Damnation, viz. Grace to be able to ſtand and not fall, or Grace to recover if he will make uſe of it, but the contrary rather follows; For how can God ſee him damned for the betraying Chriſt, and not repenting and returning, unleſs this were done wilfully by him (ſins of weakneſs and ignorance finding mercy, as in the caſe of Saul, perſecuting the Church) and unleſs he were firſt a Diſciple of Chriſt, and ſo were illuminated, and aſſiſted by Chriſt, and if he were ſo, then he had this power and grace, or might have had it, if he were not wanting to himſelf, and if ſo, then this was not ſo ill to him (in this ſenſe, of which now I ſpeak) as to have been irreſpectively reprobated, and never vouchſafed this Grace.

Sect. 17. So when you ſay, It is worſe in reſpect of God, and prove that, becauſe he muſt be deprived of the free exerciſe of his omnipotence] there is no truth in that conſequence, or the reaſon of it. For God's omnipotence conſiſts not in being able to make both parts of a contradiction true, that were in the very attempt a departing from veracity, a falſeneſs, a ſin, and ſo the greateſt impotence, and ſo moſt contrary to omnipotence. And ſuch is that, which alone your conſequence, and the reaſon of that ſuppoſes, making that not to be, which he foreſees will be, for by the latter part of that expreſſion you mean that which from eternity he ſees to be done, and then to be done and not to be done, is in terminis contradictory. And this impotence or not being able to cauſe the ſame thing at once to be and not to be, is far from all notions of Stoical fatality, that I ever heard of (elſe ſure all rational creatures muſt be Stoicks, for they all reſolve that what is, cannot not be) and as far from making God an idle helpleſs ſpectatour of what anothers will is pleaſed to effect: for his providence, and aſſiſtence, and efficacy belong to other things, not to the making that not to be, when it is, but to the preventing it before it came, giving Grace ſufficent, preventing, reſtraining, exciting, &c. ordering it and diſpoſing of it to his own wiſe ends, when it is done, and puniſhing the doer juſtly, if he repent not, to which he is alſo ready to give Grace, if he humbly aſk, and ſeek and knock for it: All this is ſuppoſed to be done by God, and ſo God is no helpleſs ſpectatour, and all this is reconcileable with the effects being wrought by our free will, as long as God's grace works not irreſiſtibly.

Sect. 18. Here I remember that of St. Auguſt in. de Civ. l. 5 c. 10. Nullo modo cogimur, aut retenta præſcientia Dei, tollere voluntatis arbitrium, aut retento voluntatis arbitrio, Deum, quod nefas eſt, negare præſcium futurorum, (this is expreſly contrary both to the Calviniſts pretenſion on the one ſide, and the Socinians on the other.)

Sect. 19. Your fourth inconvenience is, that then God never purpoſed to ſave all mankind.] If by purpoſing you mean decreeing, and by ſaving, actually beſtowing heaven upon them, then that conſequence is true, but not in the leaſt wiſe inconvenient, for God never decreed to ſave final impenitents, and ſuch are many of mankind, after the giving of Chriſt, but on the contrary, hath ſworn ſuch ſhall not enter into his reſt. The ſaving of mankind which God decreed is the redeeming them, and giving them Chriſt, and Grace, and making them ſalvable, and being deficient in nothing toward that end to thoſe, that will make uſe of it. As for the other notion of Salvation, it is no where ſaid that God purpoſed that in the notion of decreeing, but onely that he ſo will'd as to deſire it, and to give ſufficient means of effecting it, but thoſe means proportioned to rational agents, and ſo not violent or irreſiſtible, or ſuch as ſhould, by being contrary to freedom, exclude rewardableneſs. So when you ſay, Chriſt could not have an intention to die for them who he foreſees would be nothing advantaged by it] if by dying for them] you mean ſo dying, that they ſhould actually be ſaved, ſo 'tis true, he intended not to die for thoſe that are finally impenitent, and ſo are not advantaged by it, for ſure it is no part of his Covenant or intention in dying, to ſave ſuch: but if by dying for them you mean purchaſing pardon, upon ſuppoſition of repentance, then that he intended thus to die for them, that make not this advantage of it, (and ſo he ſees make it not) appears evidently by many texts, which tell us of his redeeming thoſe that deny him, that periſh, &c. and is intimated by the very ſtyle you uſe of their being nothing advantaged by it, for if he did not purchaſe thoſe advantages for them, why is that phraſe uſed? The fourth.

Sect. 20. Your fifth Inconvenience is, that on this ſuppoſition, God could not ſeriouſly call upon ſuch, whom his preſcience points out for Damnation to repent, more than I could bid him take heed that he fall not, whom by tumbling down I ſaw mortally bruiſed already.] I anſwer, 1. that if you mean any more by that phraſe [his preſcience points out to Damnation] than [he ſees ab æterno, that they will not repent, but die in their ſins,] I reject the phraſe, as not belonging to the queſtion, my hypotheſis being far from yielding, that preſcience doth any other way, but this, or in any other ſenſe, point out any to damnation. And therefore changing that obſcurer for this other more perſpicuous phraſe, I ſay that God's preſcience of mens not making uſe of his call, is very reconcileable with the ſeriouſneſs of his call, which I infer from God's own words, and oath, as I live ſaith the Lord, I deſire not the death of him that dies, turn ye, turn ye, for why will ye die? what can be more ſerious than this ſpeech, directed to thoſe that die, and he ſees, obſtinately will die? But this differs widely from my warning him to take heed of falling, whom I ſee actually fall'n, becauſe whenſoever God thus calls not to fall, the man is not fall'n: when he calls him to ariſe again, being fall'n, he is not irreverſibly fall'n, and therefore accordingly he calls him (not, not to fall, but) to riſe again. And what God doeth thus in time, God ab æterno decreed to doe, and his foreſeeing it would not produce the deſired effect, was in order of nature after the decree of doing it, and therefore is in no reaſon to The fifth.

have any influence on (ſo as to change) the decree, and if not ſo, then the decree ſtanding ſtill in force, it is moſt neceſſary that it ſhould be performed, and ſo that God ſhould in time call thus ſeriouſly to repentance.

Sect. 21. And indeed, for God to foreſee (as he doth, or elſe would not puniſh for it,) that his moſt ſerious call will be rejected, and yet not to ſuppoſe his call is moſt ſerious, is an abſolute contradiction, and ſo cannot poſſibly be ſuppoſed or imagined.

The foreſeeing of Judas's ſin.

Sect. 22. To my argument of Judas's ſin being foreſeen, and foretold by God, (from whence I conclude that that is foreſeen which is not cauſed by God, or to which the man is not determined by any act of God's will) which you ſay is very preſſing, you anſwer by referring to my judgment 1. whether the Prophecies could not have been fulfilled, had Judas never been born: 2. whether by liſtning to his Maſter he could not have repented, &c.] To the firſt I anſwer, that the prophecy, as it was terminated in him, could not poſſibly have been fulfilled, had he never been born, and that the πλήρωσις, or utmoſt completion of the prophecy Pſal. 41. 9. was terminated in him, the holy Ghoſt by St. Peter tells us, Act. 1. To the ſecond, that I doubt not but by liſtning to Chriſt, he might have repented, and then God foreſaw that he might, yet foreſaw he would not doe what he might, and ſo foretold this; whereas if he would have done otherwiſe, it is as undoubted, that God ſhould have foreſeen that, and, might, if he had pleaſed, have foretold it alſo, as Chriſt did not onely his treaſon, but alſo, St. Peter's denial, and repentance alſo. As for that which you ſuggeſt, that the prophecy of him might be like that of Jonah, conditional] 1. there is little probability for it, when the event hath ſo much otherwiſe interpreted it, which if it had not done, I ſhould not have reſiſted your ſuggeſtion, as far as concerned his periſhing. But then 2. you know my Argument was founded in God's foreſeeing his ſin (and not his periſhing) and to that his conditional foreſight, exemplified in Jonas to Nineveh, is not appliable.

The argument from thence defended.

Hom. 83. in Mat. Sect. 23. That which you cite from Chryſoſtome, who gives for a reaſon why Chriſt admitted Judas to the Sacrament, that nothing might be omitted that might conduce to his amendment] belongs not to your firſt, but ſecond queſtion, and ſo I allowed of it, as you ſee, and am not prejudiced by it. For to your concluding queſtion I anſwer expreſſly, Chriſt look'd on Judas's not ſinning, or repenting, as poſſible, till by his repudiating all the means of Grace, and his meaſure of iniquity fill'd up, he withdrew his Grace from him, which whether he did before, or not till his death, I have no means of defining. Onely this I reſolve, that Chriſt's foreſeeing what he would doe, had no leaſt influence on the effect, any more than the effect hath on the cauſe, or the ſenſe on the object, God's foreſight being in nature conſequent to, and cauſed by his doing it, not the cauſe of it. And when you ſay, that if it were poſſible, then the contrary was not certain, I grant it was not certain, till it was done; and when you infer, then it could not be foreſeen, I deny the conſequence, for thoſe things which are not certain, till they are done, may by an immenſe Deity be ab æterno ſeen to come to paſs in time, and ſo that ſight or foreſight be as certain, as a foreſight of what is moſt neceſſary in its cauſes: and the reaſon is clear, becauſe, of that which is done, it is as certain that it is done, as of that which is in cauſis, it is certain, that it is in cauſis, and being ſo, it may caſt a reflexion on the underſtanding of him that is preſent to it, and ſo is God to futures, as well as to the preſent.

Sect. 24. And when you ſay in your Poſtſcript, that it is a contradiction to ſay that things paſt or future are preſent, and therefore all things are not, nay cannot be preſent to God;] I anſwer, 1. that you uſe not the right definition of a Contradiction, in ſaying thus, for future doth not contradict preſent, but preſent and not preſent is a contradiction, and ſo future and not future; 2. although it be granted of any finite thing, that it cannot be both preſent and future, yet God being immenſe, may and muſt be preſent to that which is future, or elſe he is bounded and limited. Yet this doth not infer God to ſee what is future as preſent (which you ſay is to be deceived) but to ſee what is future as future, which though indeed it be future, yet he by his immenſity may be preſent to it. And none of the inconveniences, which you add, follow on this; onely let me tell you (on ſtrength of that Propoſition, Quicqnid eſt, neceſſario eſt id quod eſt,) that as God cannot change what is paſt, ſo he cannot change that which is preſent, ſo as to make it, when it is preſent, not preſent, and then no more can he change that which is future, ſo as to make it not future. All that can be done is, either 1. to make that which is contingent (and ſo may be or may not be) to become neceſſary, by decreeing it; or 2. to come to paſs really, though but contingently, or elſe 3. not to come to paſs, or finally to leave it ſtill free, yet to foreſee what will be freely done, as much as what will neceſſarily be done.

Sect. 25. So that you ſee the maxime which you miſlike, is not ſo much, that all things are preſent to God, i.e. repreſented to him ſub ratione præſentis, as this, that God by his immenſity is preſent to all things, and his ſight being as infinite as his being, this is as eaſie to be underſtood, as the other, or as any infinite is comprehenſible by our finite underſtandings, which you call duller apprehenſions, for ſo ſure are all ours, when we employ them upon infinites. You ſee into what a length I am run, indeed much above mine own intentions, but ſhall not repent of it, if it contribute to the diſabuſing you, and ſhewing you the way out of this intricacy.

Sect. 26. This ſecond Letter having ſome enforcements of the old, and addition of new ſcruples, returned to it, by the ſame hand, which I accounted it my duty to anſwer at Large, by a third Letter, (which I ſuppoſe will conclude this controverſie) I ſhall here alſo ſubjoin it. It was as followeth.

The

The Third LETTER.

SIR,

Sect. 27. THough yours of---made haste to me, yet I found no leisure to afford it any serious reflexions, till this---and therefore being already guilty of too long delays, I shall not now encrease them by proeme, but fall immediately to the view of your reply. And in it, what you first lay down, partly by way of concession, partly by way of apology for your own Notion, partly by way of opposition to mine, I must confess I see not what propriety of application it hath to that which was the ground-work of my Paper, viz. that whatsoever hath a being, or ever shall have a being, (which though by being future 'tis out of my reach, yet by being future, is not removed out of God's reach,) is objicible to God's all-seeing eye of knowledge, and this upon the grounds of his infinite unlimited immensity, by you and by all Christians acknowledged, and the no contradiction, (which alone renders it impossible to God,) which it implies, for God thus to reach out immensly, and see all ab æterno, which (and in the manner as it) in time comes to pass.

The ground of our assertion God's immensity, and the no implicancy of a contradiction. God's immensity extends to the knowledge of all things possible.

Sect. 28. Instead of shewing this implicancy of a contradiction, (which alone was to have been done,) you have tendred a reason to prove, [that God's knowledge is not properly said to be immense, in regard he knows all things possible,] viz. because they conjunctim are not absolutely infinite. But sure this hath no force against my position, which doth not prove God's immensity of knowledge, by this argument of his knowing all things possible, or by any other, but takes that for granted, and needing no proof, and from thence infers and concludes the other, viz. his knowing all things past, present, or future, and against this concluding 'tis visible your reason is of no kind of force, [for that these conjunctim are not infinite,] for an immense knowledge may and must see all finites, though it self be infinite.

An objection against that answered. God's immensity supposed not proved.

Sect. 29. So again, when you say his immensity cannot relate to time, and place, which are both finite, and you cannot see how any quantitative extension should be subjected in a purely spiritual essence, and press this with absurdities, and strange consequences, (as if it were maintained by them, against whom your debates lie,) if you consider again, you will see, there was no cause for it, I am sure in my papers there was none, which when they proposed to your consideration, whether God's immensity comprehend not a commensuration to all time, immediately added, and somewhat beyond that, as much as infinite is beyond finite. By comprehending a commensuration to all time, if when it had that immediate addition to explain it, it can be misunderstood, I must then farther express my self, that I meant, no quantitative extention, or indeed any more than this, that God is, was, and shall be, from, and to all eternity, and as his Essence, so is his Immensity, Omnipresence, Omniscience; he sees and knows all things, not onely that are or have been, but that ever shall or will be, i. e. shall ever have an actual being, objicible to knowledge, and even for possibles, that yet never come to pass, he sees and knows both parts, 1. That they are possible to be, 2. That they will never be.

A second objection. What is meant by commensuration to all time.

Sect. 30. This I have added in relation to those words of yours, on which you seem to lay weight, [The time to come is now no time, as the things which merely be possible are now no things, and therefore to apprehend that God is in such time, or that such things are present with him, is to conceive that that is not.

A third objection.

Sect. 31. Here, First, let me tell you, your comparison, or proportion holds not, being laid betwixt the time to come, which is really future, and the things merely possible, which shall never be; But passing that, 'tis certain Secondly, that though the time to come, according to our finite measures, is now to us no time, i. e. is not the present time, (which holds equally of the time past, which being past is now to us not present,) yet in respect of God's Immensity this cannot be said, for that were to incumber him with our finite rules, and measure infinite by our span of time, which with me you profess to avert, and abhor.

Answered. What is future is objicible to God.

Sect. 32. So though the things merely possible are now no things, (I shall add, nor ever shall be,) yet even these are objicible to him as they are, i. e. as things merely possible; which yet never shall actually be, for he may and doth see that they are possible, and also that they shall not come to pass.

So what is merely possible.

Sect. 33. And when against this you argue, that this is to conceive that which is not,] If you mean by it, that which is not actually, I grant it, but find no inconvenience in affirming, that God sees or conceives that to be possible, which he sees is not, nay shall never be; But if you mean, that if so, then God conceives contrary to truth, there is then no shew of truth in that consequence, for his conceiving that to be merely possible, which is merely possible, is to see according, (and that is not contrary,) to truth. Nazianzen's speech that God ἔστιν αἰεί, always is, but neither properly ἦν was, nor ἔσται, shall be, and that eternity is neither χρόνος time, nor χρόνου μέρος, part of time, is so far from having any unkind aspect on my notions, that it is the very thing that I contend, that we must not go about to fathom eternity by our finite lines of time, but lay all that is done in time, or ever shall be, γυμὰ ὂν καὶ πεπεγχυσιωμένον, naked and bare before him, and still acknowledge that beyond this there is an infinite abysse, which we cannot fathom.

A fourth objection answered. Orat. 42. No proportion between our finite and God's infinite.

Sect. 34. On this what you build, and apply equally to that which is past, and future, [that which is past vanishing, say you, into nothing, and before it was, being nothing,] might (methinks) by being reflected on, extricate you out of your labyrinth. For can you doubt that God knows what is now past? I presume you do not, can not: And then why may he not as well know what is future? When the onely objection to that, being [because it is not, and he must then know that, that is not,] you have equally resolved, that that which is past, is not, as that that is future; and so that your objection either holds against both, or neither; I pray consider this.

A fifth objection answered. God may know that which actually is not.

Sect. 35. Next when you insist, that the acts of his infinite understanding, in relation to the creature, must needs be finite, as the creatures are finite.] I cannot apprehend, how you can reap any the least advantage by it, meaning, as the words import, that God sees things as they are, for this you know and acknowledge is my ground also, and to this it is consequent, (and so not strange,) that whatsoever he sees ab æterno, he must

A sixth objection answered.

God ſeeing every thing as it is.

must ſee, as it is, i. e. as it is done in time, whether neceſſarily, or contingently, but no way conſequent, that he can ſee nothing ab æterno, becauſe it is in time that it comes to paſs, for that which comes to paſs in time, he that is eternal, and immenſe, and omniſcient, may (ſeeing it implies no contradiction,) ſee ab æterno, though I who am finite, and whoſe ſight is limited, and finite, cannot.

A ſeventh objection anſwered.

Sect. 36. When therefore you argue, that it is no more derogatory to his eternal wiſedom, to ſay that he ſees or knows this or that in time, and not ab æterno, than it is to his infinite power, to ſay that it works in a finite manner,] Me thinks the fallacy ſhould be too groſs to impoſe on you, upon a ſecond view: The former member of your compariſon expreſly denying his ſeeing or knowing ab æterno, which is the greateſt derogation to immenſity, and omniſcience and eternity, when the latter hath no ſuch negation of his power of working, but affirms onely that he works in a finite manner, (which he may do ſometimes, when there is no need of interpoſing his infinite power,) but not that he works not ab æterno, which the proportion, if it were obſerved, would exact, and then that would be as derogatory to his power alſo.

An eighth objection anſwered.

Sect. 37. The obſerving of this will I hope clear to you that which you ſay is ſo ſtrange, it being but the ſame fallacy again in another dreſs (which therefore I ſhall no farther purſue,) or if the reaſon which you add, from the temporarineſs of the creature, which ab æterno had no being, ſave onely in mere poſſibility] have ſtill any force with you, I hope it will ceaſe to have ſo, when 1. you conſider that an objective being is ſufficient to cauſe knowledge, and that its being in time is no hindrance to an immenſe Deity to ſee it ab æterno, for if he may ſee it a day before it come to paſs, why may he not equally ab æterno? 2. That futures, though contingent, differ from mere poſſibilities, that which is merely poſſible never coming to an actual being, and ſo being not future, and of ſuch I ſhould err indeed ſtrangely, if I thought God did foreſee them as future, or ſee them as having an actual being. It ſuffices that he ſees them as they are, i. e. as merely poſſible, and why that which is poſſible, though it never be, God may not ſee ab æterno to be poſſible, I neither ſee, nor am offered by you any ſhew of reaſon. How you come to conceive it ſaid by your adverſaries that the acts of God's underſtanding are all neceſſarily eternal, (you mean I ſuppoſe by your whole diſcourſe ab æterno) I gueſs not, when he that ſaith God ſees ab æterno, what now I doe, muſt alſo grant that he now, i. e. in time ſees me doe it, or elſe could not believe him Omniſcient. 'Tis the part of immenſity to doe both, and of Omniſcience to know all things both future, and preſent, and the affirming one of theſe is very far from denying the other.

Difference between poſſible and future.

All God's acts are not ab æterno.

A ninth objection anſwered.

Sect. 38. You ſay this is no convincing argument, God's underſtanding was infinite ab æterno, therefore whatever he knows, he knew ab æterno; more than this, God's power, &c. was infinite ab æterno, ergo, what he does now, he does ab æterno.] But 1. Who urged that former argument in that form? Not I ſurely. 2. If I now ſhall, your parallel bears no proportion with it, unleſs the antecedent and conſequent be better ſuited than they are; For in your antecedent you ſpeak of power, in the conſequent of doing, which belongs to God's will, not to his power, (for ſure God does onely what he wills, not whatſoever he hath power to doe, or to will.) But ſet both to the ſame, viz. to his power, and then it will follow inevitably thus, God's power and ability of doing whatſoever he pleaſed was infinite ab æterno, ergo, Whatſoever he now does he had power to doe ab æterno, And this is the argument which alone is ſuitable to the former, God's underſtanding was infinite ab æterno, ergo, Whatſoever he knows, (or now ſees,) he knew or ſaw ab æterno, i. e. Whatſoever now is, or ever ſhall be done. Both theſe are apparently true, though one of thoſe which you had ſuited amiſs, were falſe, the other remaining true.

God's knowledge ſuitable to his power.

God's coexiſtence to all that ever is, not to what never ſhall be.

Sect. 39. Having removed theſe rubs, which you ſay thus hinder your conſent, I ſhall hope you will yield to as much as I pretend, which is not, you ſee, that God coexiſts to things that neither are, nor ever will be, i. e. to things onely poſſible, but not future, but that God's immenſity is ſuch, as that he reacheth out and is preſent, ab æterno, to all that is done in time, and ſo that all that ever ſhall be, is ab æterno objected to his knowledge; Againſt this nothing that you have ſaid in your five firſt pages hath any ſemblance of force, and therefore I hope this now will be granted by you, and then I have it under your hand at the bottom of your fifth page, that moſt of your objections will be eaſily anſwered, which therefore I might leave your ſelf to doe; but having a little more leaſure than ordinary, I will a while accompany you in the view of every of them; and begin with your defence of your firſt objection.

The enforcements of the former objections anſwered.

The firſt enforcement of the firſt.

Sect. 40. And there Firſt, when to prove it to imply a contradiction that a thing that is not, (as, ſay you, all mere poſſibles are,) ſhould be intelligible, you thus argue, its being intelligible implies that it is, ſo it is, and it is not, (which is a contradiction,) the fallacy is two fold, 1. You confound futures that are (by being ſuch) ſuppoſed to have an objective being, though not as yet an actual, with mere poſſibles, which never ſhall be, and ſo are not future, but onely poſſible to be, and agreeably are ſeen and known onely to be poſſible, but not to be future; and 2. You confound an objective being, which alone is implyed in being intelligible, with preſent, or actual being; and now take it out of theſe ambiguities, and ſet it as it is, that God ab æterno did or now doth ſee that which to day is not, but to morrow ſhall be, and then what is become of that, [is and is not,] i. e. of the contradiction? or conſequently of your whole cauſe? Nothing being impoſſible to God, but what implies a contradiction; which therefore again I preſs; ſhew the contradiction, or yield the cauſe.

The ſecond.

Sect. 41. Secondly, when to your ſaying that all things paſt, preſent, or poſſible, are known to the divine wiſedom, I returned a parentheſis, [No man demands any more,] and you now reply, that I did not fully apprehend your meaning, which was that God knew all things poſſible, not as future, my rejoynder is, that I well diſcerned the difference betwixt poſſible and future, all things being not future, which are poſſible; Yet becauſe all futures are poſſible, (though all poſſibles are not future,) I could not miſapprehend your words, which ſpake of all things poſſible,] in concluding that all futures were comprehended under that ſtyle of all things poſſible, for ſure futures are in that number, and then if all futures were intelligible to God, and by you granted to be infallibly known by him, this as I ſaid, was all I demanded. There is difference I conceive, betwixt poſſible and merely poſſible, all futures are poſſible, but what is merely poſſible excludes futurity. Sometimes you ſpeak of mere poſſibilities, and then I never apprehend you to mean futures, as when you ſpeak of all that is poſſible, I am obliged to do.

Poſſible and merely poſſible differ.

Sect. 42. Now then if you ſpake, or ſpeak of mere poſſibilities, and ſay that God knew all things merely poſſible, as merely poſſible, and not as future, you ſay moſt truly, but then your example of A. B's future marriage is nothing to your purpoſe, for if it be conſidered as future, then though it be yet poſſible to be, or not to be, yet it is not merely poſſible, for by being ſuppoſed future, it is conſequent that it ſhall be, whereas what is merely poſſible, ſhall never be. When therefore you ſay, both are known by God as poſſible, (viz. that he ſhall marry, and that he ſhall not,) neither as future, you deceive your ſelf, for though he ſees both as poſſible, yet he ſees one as future, viz. as contingently future, future when it might be otherwiſe, and the other as merely poſſible, i. e. not future, ſees it, I ſay, as future, not by conſequences, or per ſcientiam mediam onely, in the ordinary notion of that, viz. if this be, that will follow (for which ſcience there is place ſometimes in things merely poſſible, and not future, as in the example of the Oracle concerning the men of Keilah, that if David truſted them, they would deliver him up, when yet he not truſting himſelf to them, they did not, could not deliver him,) but by reaching out ſo far as to ſee it done, in that other notion of Scientia media, whereby God ſees what man will freely doe and not onely conditionally what he might or would doe. Scientia media.

Sect. 43. Your following objections againſt this, that what is known as future, is certainly known will be, but A. B's marriage is altogether uncertain,] is of no more force than the anſwer of the double neceſſity, ſimplex, and ex hypotheſi, evacuates, for what is certainly known will be, may be alſo in reſpect of the agent uncertain, as being free for him to doe, or not to doe, which notwithſtanding when he hath done, it is then certainly what it is, and as ſo, it is ſeen by God from all eternity.

Sect. 44. Thirdly, when I ſaid that the having no being in act, is a phraſe proportioned to the thing, and to our finite underſtandings, 'tis viſible, 1. That I ſpake of the phraſe, and nothing elſe. 2. That my meaning is, that to our finite underſtandings that is not preſent, or in act, which is ſtill future, but yet God by his immenſity may reach out, and be preſent to it, or ſee it, as we do that which is before our eyes.

Sect. 45. And when againſt my words you argue thus, [if it be proportionable to the thing, then it is alſo to God's underſtanding which depends thereon,] 'tis plain again, that you miſapprehend me, for I oppoſe God's infinite, to our finite underſtandings, and not God's underſtanding the thing, to the reality of it; God underſtands it, as it is, and ſo ſees that future, and contingent, which is truly ſo, (as Cicero ſaith, Ut præterita ea vera dicimus quorum ſuperiori tempore vera fuerunt inſtantia, ſic futura, quorum conſequenti tempore vera erunt inſtantia, ea vera dicemus) but till it actually be, God ſees it by his infinite ſcience, which by our finite we cannot reach. The third. De Fato.

Sect. 46. Let it then be granted that God's underſtanding depends on the thing, what follows thence? No more but this, that future contingents having yet no being in act, and therefore being not viſible to our finite faculties, have yet a being objective, as being really, though contingently future, and God's knowledge being proportioned to the things, and depending on them as ſuch, i. e. as future contingents, and not as actually being, theſe he knows by his infinite knowledge.

Sect. 47. But ſay you, his underſtanding can be no more actual than the thing is from whence he derives that underſtanding,] what truth is there in this? I know what is paſt, my knowledge is actual, but the thing paſt is not ſo; I know if the courſe of nature be not altered, or, (which as to this matter, is equivalent, I believe,) the Sun will riſe to morrow, here my knowledge or belief is actual, but the object is future, not yet actual, ſave onely that it is now actually true, that the Sun will riſe then. And then why may not God's knowledge be actual either of what is paſt, or future, (and ſo now actually is not,) and yet he ſee it as it is, i. e. what is paſt as paſt, what future as future,

Sect. 48. Fourthly, when to my queſtion, Why, if God ſees before, that which in after time hangs in the balance of humane indetermination, he may not alſo foreſee which end of the balance will at length overpoiſe?] You anſwer, that the foreſight of the former is the foreſight of poſſibles, but the foreſight of the other is the foreſight of a contingent future, and that the one is not as truly future, as the other,] you cannot but ſee, you do not render any anſwer to the queſtion, i. e. any reaſon why he may not ſee what is really, though contingently future, as well as that which is merely poſſible? It is true, one is not as truly future, as the other, but what ſhew is there of reaſon, that what is leſs future, or not future at all, ſhall be ſeen, and that which is future, and ſhall really be, ſhall yet not be ſeen by him that is Omniſcient? can its no kind of being, not ſo much as in futurition, ſet the advantage on that ſide, and make that moſt intelligible, which hath no being, and that leaſt, which hath? If it do, yet ſure it ſhall be no ground of reſolving that the really future is not at all, even to God foreſeeable, or that there is any contradiction in this, which if you remember was incumbent on you to prove, by that of hanging in the balance, &c. but is not now attempted by you.

Sect. 49. I proceed to your defence of your ſecond objection. And firſt when you grant that many things are poſſible, which will never be brought to act,] how could you ſay before, that it was a miſtake to call that poſſible which God foreſees ſhall never be? Is that a miſtake which is perfectly true? Or is not God's foreſight agreeable to what is? The firſt inforcement of the ſecond.

Sect. 50. But ſay you now, God that ſees all things as they are, ſees them as poſſible, not the one ſide of a contradictory propoſition as determinately true, and the other as aſſuredly falſe, for ſo he ſhould ſee them as they will be hereafter, but not as they are now,] I anſwer, 1. God that ſees them as they are, ſees them not onely as poſſible, but as future, for they are not onely poſſible, but future. 2. Of contradictory propoſitions, as, that I ſhall kill my ſelf to morrow, and I ſhall not kill my ſelf to morrow,] one is determinately true, I mean not by determinately true, that God hath decreed it ſhall be, but it is true on the one ſide, and not on the other; for if I kill my ſelf to morrow, then it is true to day, that I will kill my ſelf to morrow, and if ſo, then it is falſe, that I ſhall not kill my ſelf to morrow. What then is determinately true, God ſees as determinately true, and ſo ſees it as it is. 3. If he ſees them as they will be hereafter, ſure this is ſufficient, who would deſire any more? Nay this is to ſee them as they now are, for now they are future, i. e. things that now are not, but ſhall hereafter be.

Sect. 51. In your reply to my ſecond anſwer, it is no way pertinent which you ſay of a bare ſuppoſition proving nothing, yet being granted proving any thing that is neceſſarily deducible from it. For, 1. when I ſpeak of a bare hypothetical neceſſity, you ſpeak of a bare hypotheſis or ſuppoſition, which is quite another thing, The ſecond.

thing, your bare ſuppoſition is a ſuppoſing, (though no more than ſuppoſing) that to be, which is not, but our bare hypothetical neceſſity is a conditional, as that is oppoſed to an abſolute neceſſity. How wide are theſe one from the other? 2. Then if you review that my ſecond anſwer, to which you make this reply, you ſhall ſee how little propriety it hath to it. It was this, Change the foreſight into ſeeing from all eternity, and then it is plain, that God from all eternity may ſee that will never actually be, which yet is free for the agent to doe or not to doe, (and God ſees that too,) and ſo is poſſible every way, ſave onely ex hypotheſi that it will never be, and as the bare hypothetical neceſſity is no abſolute neceſſity, ſo this bare hypothetical impoſſibility is no abſolute impoſſibility. To this your reply is, that though a bare ſuppoſition prove nothing, yet it being granted, it infallibly proves any thing neceſſarily concluſible from it.] You ſee now how little this is ad Iphicli boves; and yet, 3. If it were pertinent, it would not be for your advantage; for ſuppoſing, (as I alſo do,) that God ſees the thing as contingently future, free for the agent to doe or not to doe, it muſt by your rule neceſſarily follow, that the thing is contingent, and ſo not abſolutely neceſſary, or any other ways, than that when it is, it cannot be, which was all I had to make good in that anſwer.

The third.

Sect. 52. In my third anſwer you grant all I ask, onely you interpoſe, that to our purpoſe it is all one whether God's preſcience render the object certain, or preſuppoſe and find it certain; and; as if this were, upon the mere ſaying it, preſently granted, as a Maxime clear by its own light, you add no word of proof to it.

Great difference betwixt rendring and finding certain.

Which how far from reaſonable it is, you will now diſcover. And 1. to render, and to find, are as far from all one, as to cauſe and not to cauſe, for ſure what I render certain, I cauſe to be ſo, what I find certain is cauſed by another and not by me. And being thus diſtant in themſelves, it is ſtrange they ſhould to our purpoſe be all one. Is it all one to our purpoſe, whether I commit ſin freely, when I had grace to abſtain from it, or God cauſe or work it in me? What two things can be leſs all one than theſe? and this the one purpoſe, for which the men, with whom you diſpute, do inſiſt on this ſubject, and diſtinguiſh betwixt God's foreſight and his decree. And therefore as you are very ſolicitous that your opinion ſhould be freed from the imputation of derogating from the Divine immenſity, and Omniſcience, ſo at this time, it concerns you to be as carefull, leſt you offend againſt God's purity, and other attributes, when you make it all one for his preſcience to find and to render the object certain; i. e. to ſee all the ſins that we commit, and to cauſe them. I pray conſider this, and it will force you either to acknowledge that God foreſees certainly what we doe freely and contingently, or to deny our ſins, (i. e. voluntary actions,) to be free, or to deny that Chriſt foreſaw that Peter would deny, or Judas betray him, both which he foretold to his Diſciples.

The defence of the objected inconveniences, anſwered. The firſt.

Sect. 53. I proceed to your defence of the objected inconveniences againſt my anſwers to them. And firſt, it breaks no ſquare, whether [in themſelves] be inſerted, or omitted, 1. becauſe what is in its cauſes utterly uncertain, is ſo in it ſelf; 2. becauſe you yield to all I ſaid on this head as rational and convincing, and onely queſtion the truth of my principle, which you know I was not again to prove in that place, when I was anſwering the objections, or inconveniences.

The ſecond.

Sect. 54. Your ſecond inconvenience I underſtood before in the very ſenſe that your inſtance now ſets it, and accordingly I rendred anſwer to it, and ſhewed wherein it was that Exhortations, &c. were founded, viz. in the liberty of our actions, ſo long as till they be actually committed, and no longer. And to this you give no anſwer at all, nor to ought I ſay on that head, but onely ſay over in another Scheme the ſame thing to which I anſwered.

Preſcience makes not exhortations vain.

Sect. 55. In this your new Scheme you ſay, that had it been known aforehand, that A. B. would obſtinately have continued in his wickedneſs, it had been vain to have uſed exhortations, and ſo for God (ſuppoſing his preſcience,) it were vain to enjoyn them.] Here the word [vain] in the obvious notion imports unprofitable, or uſeleſs, and then, 1. I pray conſider, whether it be fit to ſpeak thus of God. It is certain Chriſt ſaw Peter would fall, Judas would betray him, yet he told them both of it before, and that telling them was a timely admonition, and equivalent to an exhortation, adding of Judas a terrible threat, or denunciation, that it was better for him that he had never been born. Would you think it tolerable for any Chriſtian to ſay hereupon, it was vain for Chriſt to doe all this? I trow you would not, and therefore will your ſelf think fit to avoid it.

The example of Pharaoh.

Sect. 56. Should you have any ſcruple in this, the ſtory of Pharaoh, and the paſſages, Rom. 9. referring to it, would à multò majori & fortiori, ſuperſede or anſwer it. God had there foretold Moſes, that he would harden Pharaoh's heart, which I hope is much more toward inferring a neceſſity, than Chriſt's foretelling Peter, or Judas of the fall of the one, and treaſon of the other. And yet God exhorts Pharaoh after that, and he that objects againſt his doing ſo, Rom. 9. that ſaith τί ἔτι μέμφεται; Why doth he yet, after that ſixth judgment, when God himſelf hath ſent his plagues on his heart, why doth he ſtill, or yet) find fault, is anſwered, Nay but O man, who art thou, that diſputeſt againſt God?

Sect. 57. In the former part of that ſtory, when it was not come to that height, yet it is moſt evident that from the beginning of Moſes's miſſion to Pharaoh, God had foretold that Pharaoh would harden his own heart, and that (alone) is perfectly parallel to our caſe, which is of preſcience of future contingent acts of Man's will, yet are all God's meſſages and ſigns by Moſes purpoſely ſent to melt, and perſwade him to let the people go. Doth any man now want a perſpective to diſcern that theſe meſſages of heaven were not vain? Or that ſuch acts of Divine wiſedom, (his ways that are not like ours,) are not to be ſubmitted to our tribunal, but adored and reverenced, and no otherwiſe approached by us? But then,

Sect. 58. Secondly, if by vain you mean no more, than that which doth not finally obtain the effect principally deſigned, ſo there will be no difficulty in affirming with S. Paul, that God's grace and ſo his exhortations, &c. may be received in vain, for ſo God knows it is too frequent for us to doe; mean while, what thorough our default becomes fruitleſs to us, doth not return ſo to God, but ſerves God's ſubſequent (though it reſiſts his antecedent) will, which is alſo God's will, viz. to puniſh the obdurate, as well as his antecedent is to ſave the humble and tractable, and the more frequent the exhortations are, ſuppoſing grace annext to enable to make uſe of them, (as you know we ſuppoſe,) the more culpable is the obſtinacy againſt ſuch means, and the more culpable, the more juſtly puniſhed, and ſo God's juſtice vindicated from all aſperſion, and Man's freedom aſſerted: And the exhortations, that have contributed to all this, will not be deemed vain, though they attain not the fruit primarily intended, the ſalvifick effect or deſign of them.

Sect. 59. And whereas you compare this to a Phyſician preſcribing a medicine, which he foreſees will doe him no good.] I muſt ask by what means it comes to paſs that that medicine will doe him no good? By its own inſufficiency or impropriety to the diſeaſe, or by the obſtinacy of the patient, that he will not take it? If by the former, I then acknowledge with you that Phyſician were vain; but that is no way appliable to God, whoſe medicaments are ſufficient, being the power of God to ſalvation to all that believe. But if it be by the ſecond onely, then the Phyſician is far from vain, as doing all that the wit of man can doe, or wiſh toward the recovering of his patient. For he that will not uſe his Recipe's, ſeems bent on his own death, and as guilty of it, as he that cuts his own throat, and 'tis no diſparagement to the Phyſician, that when he is preſcribing remedies for his fever or conſumption, he doth not cure his obſtinacy, or that he preſcribes to him, as to a wiſe man he would preſcribe, (though indeed the event be much other, than it would be in a wiſe man, but that is not the Phyſicians fault,) and as little can the vanity be imputed to God's operations, when by our defaults onely they prove uneffectual; God himſelf, Iſa. 5. appealing to us in the like caſe, what could he have done more to his vineyard which he hath not done, when yet pro uvis labruſcas, inſtead of grapes it brought forth nothing but wild grapes. The uneffectualneſs of God's acts not chargeable on him.

Sect. 60. In that place no doubt it was poſſible for God to have done ſomewhat which he did not, viz. to have forced the ground to bring forth good grapes, but to a Vineyard interpreted there to be the houſe of Iſrael, to a rational Vineyard, and to that which was to be left in a ſtate of rewardableneſs, of doing and not doing, of freedom, the dowry of the will of men and Angels, with which they were created, this was not competible, and therefore 'tis truly ſaid, God could doe no more, than he did, or doth, (whatſoever the event be and be foreſeen by him,) and that is as contrary as is poſſible to the objection of vainneſs. Force not competible to a rational vineyard.

Sect. 61. For the enforcing the third inconvenience, you ſay, it ſeems hard that final impenitents ſhould from all eternity be reprobated, unleſs conditionally,] never conſidering, what was moſt conſpicuous in my anſwer, that final impenitence it ſelf is that onely condition. When therefore you ſay, It were, as if a perſon ſhould be ſentenced to death for a fact before it be committed, you fall back into the two miſtakes, which my anſwer, if adverted to, had prevented. 1. You ſpeak of a perſon ſimply, and abſtracted from guilt, when I ſpeak of a final impenitent, i. e. a perſon ſo very ill qualified, and ſouly guilty. 2. I ſuppoſe his ſentence to be founded in his guilt, and his guilt in order before his ſentence, but both of them in the mind of God, (who ſeeing his guilt, awards that puniſhment, adapts his revenge to that fact,) ſeen as paſt, before ever that ſentence goes out againſt him. The third.

Sect. 62. Here you ſay, A. B's Salvation was ab æterno poſſible, (which I grant,) and thence infer, that God did not ab æterno ſee his damnation as certain, but onely as poſſible. But I deny the conſequence, for he may ſee both his ſalvation and damnation as poſſible, and yet ſee one of them as onely poſſible, the other being alſo future, which is ſomewhat more, than onely or barely poſſible. Mean while nothing hinders, but what is, (and God ſees,) thus future, he might by his omnipotent power have prevented, (which yet, you ſay, by my reaſon he could not,) onely then, he had not ſeen it as future, but as that which would have been, if he had not prevented it.

Sect. 63. Again you ſay, that if God had infallibly foreſeen that A. B. living longer would unavoidably have fallen into ſin, and therein have perſevered till death, you verily believe, in regard of his goodneſs and love to mankind, not onely in general, 1 Tim. 2. 4. 2 Pet. 3. 9. but to A. B. himſelf, Ez. 18. 32. that God would take him away in his infancy, as ſoon as baptized, when he was in the ſtate of grace and ſalvation.] In this proceſs of yours, I wonder whence the word unavoidably came. For I that according to your ſuppoſition, look on A. B. as one baptized, and in the ſtate of grace, and ſalvation, can never grant that he unavoidably falls and finally perſeveres in ſuch ſin, as brings damnation; I grant he may fall, and that finally, but ſure not unavoidably, for by that grace he was enabled to ſtand, and if he fall, he falls wilfully, but that is not unavoidably. Wilfull falls are not unavoidable.

Sect. 64. And what if God ſees from all eternity that he will thus fall, doth that render his fall unavoidable? No, but God's foreſeeing that he would fall wilfully, when he had grace to ſtand, (which circumſtance he foreſaw, as well as the fall it ſelf,) muſt inſer the quite contrary, that when he falls he might have ſtood, and ſo fell not unavoidably. Nor made ſo by God's preſcience.

Sect. 65. But then leaving out that unſeaſonable word, [unavoidably,] which in all reaſon you might have done, when in relation to the certitude of God's preſcience you had ſaid, [infallibly foreſees,] there will then be no ground of truth in that propoſition, no ſhew of proof of it from the goodneſs and φιλανθρωπία of God to all, or to any particular, as thoſe texts or any other expreſs it, for from none of thoſe it is rendred probable in any degree, that they which are baptized, and have ſufficient grace given them, and promiſe of abundance, if they make uſe of it, ſhall have violent reſtraints, or be taken out of the World, rather than they ſhall fall into wilfull ſin. Conſult the places again and you will ſoon find there is no propriety in them for the proof of this. God's love to mankind engages him not to prevent them by death, whoſe fall he foreſees.

Sect. 66. And yet if even this alſo were true, it would no way incommodate our pretenſions, for in that caſe of God's taking away ſuch a man, in his infancy, it would follow by our doctrine, that God foreſaw that from all eternity, and ſo that he foreſaw not A. B. a final impenitent, which is the deſtroying and voiding your whole ſuppoſition. If it did, it is nothing to the caſe of preſcience here.

Sect. 67. How then this ſeeming advantage could reaſonably incline you, to profeſs it your thought, that the doctrine of preſcience is very much inconſiſtent with the omnipotence and goodneſs of God, &c. and that 'tis ſwallowed without examination, I now leave you candidly to conſider, by your reflexions on the ſtrength of that reed you laid this weight on. Judge I pray, might not God, if he would, have created a world of men, taken them up into Heaven, and crowned them, (if crowning it could be called,) with everlaſting bliſs, and ſo left none of them in the hazards of this World? Yet did not (it is evident by the fact,) his love of mankind oblige him to this, but men are left to vaſt dangers, and multitudes fall under them. Muſt all this now be imputed to God's ignorance how all things would frame in the world in this other courſe, which yet it appears he hath choſen? The conſequences are too horrid to inſiſt on.

Let

Adam's ſin foreſeen by God, yet not prevented.

Let us inſtance once for all in Adam, 'tis certain he fell, and in him all his poſterity, did not God foreſee and know this, till the effect told it him? Then how was Chriſt given in decreto divino, before the creation of the World? I hope you will not ſay he was not ſo given, when the Scripture is in many places ſo expreſs for it, eſpecially, Epheſ. 1. 4. and when God's decrees are ab æterno, and ſo eſpecially this, the foundation of all the reſt, of thoſe that concern our ſalvation. Yet can I as little imagine what elſe you can ſay, unleſs you will forſake your hypotheſis.

Evidence that it was foreſeen. The ſame of all other ſins.

Sect. 68. For if he decreed Chriſt before the creation, then he foreſaw there would be need of him, if ſo, then he foreſaw Adam's fall, and then why may he not have foreſeen all other mens ſins, all contingent future events, of which he is no more the authour, and of which there is no more neceſſity that the free agents ſhould act them, than there was that Adam ſhould ſin before he was created. I pray conſider this, and it will doe your whole buſineſs.

That preſcience derogates not from omnipotence.

Sect. 69. But let us examine your reaſons, by which you will approve your affirmation, that preſcience ab æterno derogates from omnipotence. You inſtance in King Charles's death, and you might have done the like in the death of Chriſt, whereof the ſacred writ teſtifies, that it was by the determinate counſel and foreknowledge of God. Now preſcience being admitted, ſay you, it was as certain that King Charles ſhould die, Jan. 30. as now it is that he did die that day, and to that it is conſequent, that it could not have been prevented by omnipotence it ſelf.] Your conſequence I deny, ſub hâc formâ, becauſe he that ſaw it would be that day, equally ſaw, both that he might, and that he would not prevent it. By his omnipotence it is certain, he might, by his will and wiſedom, (now revealed,) that he would not prevent it, by his omniſcience, that from all eternity he knew he would not, by his very mercy to him, and for other moſt wiſe ends, that he would actually deliver him up to the wills of the malicious, able to deſtroy the body, but no more, which again is founded in his foreſight of their malice, and muſt ſuppoſe it. All which makes it as infallible, that God might have prevented it, as that he would not, did not, therefore this is far from derogating from his omnipotence, in this of his not being able to prevent it, the contrary to which is by this our Scheme expreſly eſtabliſhed.

Sect. 70. This περὶ ὑποτων, for my poſitive anſwer, you cannot but know already, all the neceſſity conſequent to preſcience is the neceſſity ex hypotheſi, it is neceſſary to be while it is, and becauſe it will be, therefore God foreſees it will be, and if men would have done otherwiſe, God would have foreſeen otherwiſe.

Sect. 71. When you take it for mine acknowledgment then, that God cannot change that which is future, ſo as to make it not future, I anſwer, that ſenſu diviſo it is moſt falſe, for whatſoever is future, God can change, and make it not future, and then foreſee it not future. But if you meant Conjunctim, that remaining future, he could not make it not future, 1. That is a great impropriety of ſpeech, and moſt unreaſonable, that he that ſpeaks of changing, ſhould mean keeping it ſtill as it is, unchanged, and 2. You ſee the fallacy, that moſt palpable one, of à benè diviſis ad malè conjuncta, which I hope will no longer impoſe upon you. The ill conſequences you fear and exaggerate, ſhould God be thought not to have been able to have prevented it, I ſhall not need inſiſt on, deteſting the thought, as much as is poſſible, and having ſo far ſecured our Scheme from it, that if God foreſees not that he could prevent any future whatſoever, I ſhall not think he foreſees any thing.

God's preſcience derogates not from his goodneſs.

Sect. 72. So likewiſe for his goodneſs, you cannot doubt but I acknowledge that as fully as you, in relation to our ſalvation: Let us ſee then how I am obliged to deny this again by admitting his preſcience. Why, ſay you, if God willingly ſuffer ſo many to be damned, whom he might have ſaved, where is his φιλανθρωπια? &c. I anſwer, juſt where you your ſelf will, and muſt place it, unleſs you believe many ſhall not be damned finally. For 'tis moſt certain, God by his abſolute power might have ſaved all them, that yet are now damned, and the ſhew of inconvenience is exactly the ſame, whether God be believed to foreſee all things ab æterno, or no. For ſuppoſe we, that God foreſaw not, but ſaw in time as we do every thing that happens in our preſence, and ſuppoſe we a wicked man filling up the meaſure of his iniquities, or ready to die in his ſins, I demand might not God, if he would, reſcue him out of that ſtate, convert him into a Saint, and aſſume him, as he did Elias in the ſanctified ſtate? Queſtionleſs he might, yet without all controverſie he doth not thus to every wicked man, for if he did, none ſhould be damned; Do you now reconcile this with God's φιλανθρωπια, his words and many vehement aſſeverations, (as I doubt not but you are well able to doe,) and then review your own Queſtion, [if God willingly ſuffer ſo many to be damned whom he might have ſaved, where is his φιλανθρωπια?] 'Tis not poſſible you ſhould need more words to diſintangle this ſnarle, and in my former papers I ſhew'd you in this place to what God's φιλανθρωπια belongs, giving ſufficient grace, &c. to which you reply nothing, and therefore I ſuppoſe conſent to the truth of it, though 'tis ſure both that God by his abſolute power might doe more than he doeth, (and therefore I like not your expreſſion, that he does what omnipotence could perform, citing, Iſa. ver. 4. In place of it, I ſhould have ſaid, what his Covenant promiſe, mercy, juſtice, equity, wiſedom, obliged him to doe, or what was reconcileable with all theſe, without intereſting his abſolute power, or omnipotence in it,) and that obſtinate ſinners do actually reſiſt, and fruſtrate all the methods that are uſed by him.

Saint Auguſtine and Lud. Vives their ſenſe of preſcience.

Sect. 73. Of the manner of Saint Auſtine's aſſerting preſcience I need not farther inſiſt, than that by the expreſs words of that period I produced, he will have it reconciled with the free will of man, which if all would doe, there were little more to be required of them. Yet becauſe you have endeavoured to take off the force of Saint Auſtine's words, and from Ludov. Vives's words on Chapter IX. Quod ſi indignum, &c. Dicamus à providentia voluntatèque Dei cognitionem ejus proficiſci, voluntatem ſtatuere quod futurum ſit, ſcientiam quod voluntas ſtatuerit, noſſe,) to draw him to Calvin's ſenſe, I ſhall reade over that IX. Chapter, both Text, and Comment, and give you ſome paſſages out of it; In the Text, 1. That they are much more tolerable that bring in Syderea Fata, a fatality depending on the ſtars, than they which take away præſcientiam futurorum, foreknowledge of futures: and that it is a moſt open madneſs, confiteri Deum & negare præſcium futurorum, to confeſs God, and to deny his preſcience. 2. Nos ut confitemur ſummum & verum Deum, ita voluntatem ſummámque poteſtatem & præſcientiam ejus confitemur, nec timemus ne ideò voluntate non faciamus quod voluntate luntate facimus, quia id nos facturos eſſe præſcivit cujus præſcientia falli non poteſt, As we confeſs the ſupreme and true God, ſo we confeſs his will, and ſupreme power and preſcience, neither do we fear leſt we ſhould not doe voluntarily, what we doe voluntarily, becauſe he foreſaw it, whoſe preſcience cannot be deceived, making it the heathen fear of Cicero, which now is yours, leſt the infallibility of the preſcience ſhould impoſe neceſſity, and fruſtrate Laws, exhortations, &c. 3. Nos adverſus ſacrilegos auſus & Deum dicimus omnia ſcire, antequam fiant (mark omnia) & voluntate nos facere, &c. Contrary to the darings of ſacrilegious men, we both affirm that God knows all things before they are done, and that we doe them voluntarily. 4. Novit incommutabiliter omnia quæ futura ſunt, & quæ ipſe facturus eſt, he knows unchangeably all things which are to come, and which he will doe, not onely the latter, but the former, and all of one as well as the other. 5. He that foreknew all the cauſes of things, among them could not be ignorant of our wills, quas noſtrorum operum cauſas eſſe præſcivit, which he foreſaw to be the cauſes of our works. 6. Qui non eſt præſcius omnium futurorum non eſt utique Deus, he that foreſees not things to come, is not God. 7. Of our liberty, Voluntates noſtræ tantum valent, quantum Deus eas valere voluit, & præſcivit, & ideo quicquid valent, certiſſimè valent, & quod facturæ ſunt ipſæ, omnino facturæ ſunt, quia valituras atque facturas eſſe præſcivit cujus præſcientia falli non poteſt, Our wills can doe as much as God will'd and foreknew they were able, and therefore whatſoever they can doe, they moſt certainly can doe, and what they will doe, they altogether will doe, becauſe he foreſaw they could and would doe it, whoſe preſcience cannot be deceived. Next in Vives's Comments you have, Non res futuræ ex ſcientia Dei manant, ſed ſcientia potius Dei ex illis, quæ tamen futuræ non ſunt Deo, ut eſt error multorum, ſed præſentes. Quocirca non rectè dicitur præſcire, niſi relatione ad actiones noſtras, dicendus eſt ſcire, videre, cernere. Quod ſi indignum videtur, &c. Things future do not flow from God's ſcience, but rather God's ſcience from them, which yet are not future to God as the errour of many is, but preſent, wherefore he is not rightly ſaid to foreſee, unleſs it be in relation to our actions, he muſt be ſaid to know, to ſee, to perceive, which if it appear unworthy, &c. There come in the words by you recited, of God's ſcience coming from his will, which you ſay is Calviniſm, but is not ſet by Vives to interpret Saint Auguſtine's ſenſe that way, no nor to aſſert it as his own, but to recite another opinion, that hath leſs impiety in it, than the denying of preſcience would have. Thus you ſee what that Chapter in the Father, or his Commentatour gains you. Mean while I take you at your word that you grant with S. Auguſtine the preſcience of God, and if you grant it with him, you muſt grant it not onely in things which come to paſs neceſſarily, (as all that God decrees do,) but ſimply in all things, and particularly in thoſe, wherein voluntatis arbitrium retentum, freedom of will retained is concerned, for to thoſe you ſee he thoroughout the IX. and X. Chapters applies it, and if you grant preſcience in them, you grant as much as I deſire, if not, you deny it (which yet you again ſay you do not,) more than Saint Auguſtine.

Sect. 74. What you here add as your concluſion from Saint Auguſtine in his confeſſions, lib. 2. c. 18. videri non poſſunt ſed prædici poſſunt ex præſentibus quæ jam ſunt & videntur, they cannot be ſeen but they may be foretold from thoſe things that are preſent, and are now ſeen; and from Origen, ἐκ τῶν νῦν τῶν ὄντων, viz. That God's knowledge of future contingents is merely hypothetical, this being ſuppoſed, that will follow, &c.] I ſhall now proceed to examine, 1. By a view of your two Teſtimonies, then of your concluſion from them. And firſt for Saint Auguſtine's words, they are not ſpoken of God's preſcience or predictions, but of ours, and that of things coming from natural cauſes, Intueor auroram, ſaith he, orturum ſolem pronuncio, &c. I behold the morning, I pronounce the Sun will riſe. Look, and you will ſee it manifeſtly; ſo then it is nothing to God's preſcience of future contingents, and you can conclude nothing from it. Philocal. c. 23.

Sect. 75. And for the Chapter in Origen's Philocalia, it cannot be, but you muſt have noted in it, the weight that he lays on the prediction of Judas's treaſon, the general reſolution, that ἕκαστον τῶν ἐσομένων περὶ πολλοῦ οἶδεν ὁ Θεὸς γινησόμενον, every thing that is future, God ſees it will come to paſs, (and yet, ὁ προγνὺς πάντων αἴτιος προεγνωσμένων, the foreknower is not cauſe of all that are foreknown,) citing from Suſanna, 42, 43. That God is κρυπτῶν γνώστης, ὁ εἰδὼς τὰ πάντα πρὶν γενέσεως αὐτῶν, the knower of ſecrets, that knows all things before they are, then he propoſes the queſtion, Πῶς προγνωστὸν ὄντος ἐξ αἰῶνος τοῦ θεοῦ περὶ τῶν ὑφ' ἑκάστου προαιρέσει νομιζομένων, τὸ ἐφ' ἡμῖν σώζεσθαι, how God from all eternity foreknowing thoſe things that are thought to be done by every man, our free will may be retained. Which he treats againſt the heathen that ſay God's foreknowledge takes away all praiſe and diſpraiſe, &c. and maintain it juſt as you do, as you will ſee, if you compare your, and their arguing. Now to theſe his anſwer is, that God from the beginning of the creation of the World, nothing being without a cauſe, ἐπιπορεύεται τῷ νῷ ἕκαστον τῶν ἐσομένων ὁρῶν, by the progreſs of his mind thorough all things that are future, ſees them, that if this be, that will follow, &c. and ſo μέχρι τέλους πραγμάτων, proceeding to the end of things, he knows what ſhall be. Which he doth expreſs, to ſhew that he ſees the dependence of all things, not from his own will, who by knowing them, as it follows, cauſes them not, but in a concatenation of humane acts and choices, as when by temerity one walks inconſiderately, and meeting with a ſlippery place falls, which he that ſees, is no way the cauſe of his fall, ſaith he, adding that God foreſeeing ὁποῖος ἕκαστος, how qualified every one will be, ſees alſo the cauſes that he will be ſo, mean while his foreſeeing is not the cauſe of their being what they are, but though ſtrange, ſaith he, yet 'tis true, τὸ ἐσόμενον αἴτιον τῷ ταῦτά πῃ * περὶ αὐτῶν προγνῶναι, the thing future is the cauſe that ſuch a foreknowledge is had of it, for it doth not becauſe it was known come to paſs, but becauſe, (ἐπειδὴ ἔσται δηλ.) it was to come to paſs, it was known. Then he comes to a diſtinction in what ſenſe it is true, that what is foreſeen πάντως ἔσται ſhall altogether be, and ſtates it juſt as we do all along. From all which, (that I may now follow you to your inferences,) you can with no reaſon conclude, that it was his and the reſt of the Fathers doctrine, that God's foreknowledge of future contingents is merely hypothetical. You ſee moſt evidently from their ſayings, every where ſcattered, (competently by thoſe which I have now ſet down,) that this was not their doctrine. And this one paſſage, if it were favourable to your conceit, (as it is not,) yet could in no reaſon evacuate all others. Origen's teſtimony. c. 21. p. 72. p. 73. Ibid. Ibid. Ibid.

Sect. 76. In your concluſion that which I miſlike is not the word [hypothetical] but [merely] for that ſignifies God to have no other foreknowledge but that. I doubt not but of all things that are, God foreſees, as Origen's words were, that if this be, that will follow, and ſo I deny not hypothetical foreknowledge. But I cannot confine God's foreknowledge to this one head, for why may he not alſo ſee, (and as eaſily,) that this, and that will both be? The principal uſe of hypothetical foreknowledge, is in things Hypothetical foreknowledge.

merely poſſible, which come not to paſs, (as before I applied the example of Keilah, which you now mention.) But what can that have to doe with thoſe things, which do actually come to paſs, and that merely by the free will of man, and by no neceſſity of conſequences? Though, (as I ſaid,) even in thoſe, God that ſees them as they are, both in their cauſes, and moſt caſual, or voluntary mutations, and progreſſion, and all circumſtances concomitant, ſees one thing following (though but freely, not neceſſarily,) out of another, firſt this, and then that, and becauſe this, or upon this motive, therefore that; Which as it is far from aſſerting any neceſſary chain of cauſes, contrary to the freedom of man's will, which in that very place Origen largely eſtabliſhes, ſo it is far from a knowledge merely hypothetical, for that is not the knowledge of what is, but what will be, if ſomewhat elſe make way for it, which being uncertain, whether it will be or not, there can be no determinate knowledge, that the other will be, which is quite contrary to his inſtances of Judas's betraying Chriſt, &c. Which were as really and determinately foreſeen and foretold, as they were really acted. And therefore I muſt deſire you not to think this favourable to the Socinians opinion of God's foreknowledge of future contingents being onely or merely hypothetical, (though God foreſee hypothetically, yet not onely ſo,) or that this key will fit all places of Scripture, which foretell things to come, becauſe it fits the caſe of Keilah, and Jer. 38. 17. and ſome few others.

Sect. 77. I have the more largely inſiſted on this, becauſe it ſeemed ſo likely to miſlead you, there being ſome examples of foreknowledge merely hypothetical, from whence yet to infer that God's foreknowledge indefinitely, is merely ſuch, i. e. that he hath no other, is the ſame errour as from particular premiſſes, or from one or two examples to make an univerſal concluſion.

The fourth.

Sect. 78. On view of your fourth objected inconvenience, you grant all I ſaid in anſwer to it, onely, ſay you, the former difficulty ſeems to recurr, how A. B. may be truly ſalvable, when if abſolute preſcience be granted, his damnation was as certain before he was born, as it will be when he is in Hell.] I anſwer, 1. That in anſwer to objected inconveniences all that can be required of any man is, to ſhew that that inconvenience doth not follow, not to eſtabliſh the principal doctrine again, (which before had been done by the no implicancy of contradiction, which left it poſſible for God to foreſee future contingents, and then by conſideration of his omniſcience, which qualifies him to know every thing which is ſcibile, or the knowing of which implies no contradiction, and then by the teſtimonies of the Prophets, who from God's preſcience foretold ſuch futures,) having therefore done all that was incumbent on me, I had hoped the difficulty would not ſtill have remained, when all I ſaid was granted. But ſeeing it doth, I anſwer, 2. That ſuppoſing God's eternal preſcience, it cannot but as clearly appear, that A. B. not onely may be, but is truly ſalvable, whilſt he is in via, as that he is damned, or no longer ſalvable, when he is in Hell. For ſuppoſing A. B. in via, to be one, for whom in God's decree Chriſt died, and ſuppoſing God's eternal preſcience of all that is, (unqueſtionably of all that he himſelf will doe, as he ſure will all that is under his decree,) It muſt thence neceſſarily follow, that God foreſees him ſalvable, and ſuppoſing that at length he is damned, it doth but follow, that God foreſees him damned; Theſe two things then by force of preſcience are equally clear, that he is one while ſalvable, another while damned, and ſo they are equally certain, and if his having been ſalvable do not hinder his being damned, then neither will his being damned hinder his having been ſalvable. He is truly ſalvable who God foreſees will not be ſaved. How ſo? becauſe God truly beſtows upon him all means neceſſary to ſalvation, and that being all that is required to make him ſalvable, this is as truly done, when the effect follows not, as when the means are moſt ſucceſsfull. And God's preſcience of the ſucceſsleſneſs, makes no change, hath no influence either on the means, or the man, any more than my ſeeing a thing done hath cauſality in the doing it. Now if he be ſalvable, (though in event he never be ſaved, but damned,) and God's preſcience that he is ſalvable, be as efficacious to conclude him ſalvable, as his preſcience that he is damned, to infer him damned, what a palpable partiality is it to infer from preſcience, that his damnation is certain before he is born, and yet not to infer from the ſame principle, that his ſalvability was certain before he was born? Nothing can more irrefragably prove the weakneſs of your inference, than that it is ſo obvious to retort it.

Salvability of Judas as concluſible from preſcience, as damnation.

Sect. 79. The ſhort is, that which is future onely contingently, it is certain that it is foreſeen by God, yet till it is, it may be otherwiſe, and if it be otherwiſe, God ſees it to be otherwiſe, and what may be otherwiſe, is not certain to be ſo, and therefore his damnation is not certain before he is born, which is the direct contradictory to your inference; and that method which will equally infer contradictories, of what force it is to eſtabliſh truth, I leave you to judge who propounded the difficulty.

Sect. 80. Here then is the errour, becauſe God cannot err in his foreſight, therefore you conclude from ſuppoſition of his preſcience, that the thing, which you ſpeak of, is certain, when yet it no way appears to you or me, that God ever foreſaw it, but by our ſuppoſing that it comes to paſs. Hence then comes all the ſuppoſed certainty, from ſuppoſing it to come to paſs, which is the certitudo ex hypotheſi, a certainty that it is, as long as it is ſuppoſed to be, and then God's preſcience hath nothing to doe with it, but it would be as certain without ſuppoſing God's preſcience, as now it is by ſuppoſing it. And now would you have me ſhew you how A. B. is truly ſalvable whilſt you retain your ſuppoſition that he is damned? This, if you mark, is your difficulty, for you have no other ground to ſuppoſe that God foreſees him damned, but becauſe you ſuppoſe him damned, and ſeeing it is, you ſee what a task you have ſet me, even to make two members of a contradiction true together. This I confeſs I cannot doe, and I grant God cannot, yet thus much I will doe for you, I will mind you, that even when A. B. is in Hell, the propoſition is ſtill true, that A. B. when he was on earth was ſalvable, and if it be true when he is in Hell, I appeal to you whether it be not true, when God foreſees he will be in Hell; doth God's foreſeeing him in Hell impede more than his actual being in it? If not, then notwithſtanding God's preſcience, A. B. is ſalvable, and ſo now I hope you ſee both that, and how he is ſo.

The fifth. God's ſerious call to thoſe who he ſees will die.

Sect. 81. In your fifth inconvenience, you ſtill adhere that you think it ſcarcely reconcileable with that determinate preſcience which I hold, for God ſeriouſly to call thoſe whom he foreſees ab æterno that they will not repent. But you take no heed to the place of Scripture, which I demonſtrated it by, turn you, turn you, why will will you die? and, as I live, I delight not in the death of him that dies, where it is evident, God ſeriouſly, (if an oath be a note of ſeriouſneſs,) calls thoſe who die and will die. Why do you not lay this to heart, when it is ſo clear, and (you yet give me your leave to ſay,) unanſwerable?

Sect. 82. I ſaid, when God calls to a man not to fall, he is not fallen, and, you ſay true, but he is fallen in God's preſcience.] I now ask you, how you know he is? Your onely poſſible anſwer is, that if he be fallen, then by the doctrine of preſcience, God muſt foreſee him fallen, and you now by way of ſuppoſition, (which 'tis lawfull for diſputations ſake to make,) take it for granted, i. e. ſuppoſe he is fallen. And then, (as even now I ſaid,) to your voluntary ſuppoſition all is due, and with that I cannot reconcile the contradictory, and ſo ſtill what is this to preſcience?

Sect. 83. Again you conclude, that God ſees A. B. will never riſe again, how do you know, or imagine God ſees it, but becauſe you ſuppoſe it true, that he will never riſe again? and if it be true, then it is alſo infallibly true, whether God ſee it or no. And ſo ſtill what have you gained, your ſuppoſing it true is it to which adheres the ſuppoſition of God's foreſeeing, and infallibility conſequent to that, but that adds no weight to that which was before ſuppoſed infallible.

Sect. 84. Again you ask, can God ſeriouſly call him, who [he ſees] will never repent, ſeriouſly doe that he ſees uſeleſs, and abſolutely ineffectual?] I have oft told you, and proved to you, that he may, 'tis certain he called Pharaoh, when he had predicted he would not hearken, and he moſt ſeriouſly doeth things to ſalvifick ends, which do not eventually attain thoſe ends, and he foreſees they do not.

Sect. 85. I ſaid that what God doeth thus in time, he ab æterno decreed to doe, this (as it is apparent by the antecedent, to which the relative [thus] belongs,) I ſpake of God's calling men, ſome not to fall, others to riſe again, and you reply, that it ſeems to you utterly improbable that God ſhould doe whatſoever he doeth, by an antecedent decree.] I have no temptation to leave our preſent task, which is ſufficient for the day, to diſpute that queſtion with you in the latitude, as your, [whatſoever he doeth,] importeth. It will ſuffice, if God doeth any thing by an antecedent decree, or decree any thing before he doe it, for if any thing, then ſure his calls and warnings, which are parts of his covenant of grace, and that is ſub decreto, decreed by him. And then what I ſaid before, is ſtill of full force, God's foreſeeing mens diſobedience to his calls, was in order of nature poſteriour and ſubſequent to his decree of calling and giving them grace, and being ſo, cannot move him to change what went before, or preſently to diſannull it, and till it be diſannulled, 'tis certain, and exacted by veracity, that he act according to it, i. e. that he call thoſe ſeriouſly, who yet he foreſees reſiſt him. Why you ſhould here farther inlarge, of the greater improbability, that God ſhould without conſideration decree what afterward he perceives would be uſeleſs, I gueſs not, being ſure no words of mine gave you temptation to think that I affixt inconſiderate decrees to our God of all wiſedom, or counted thoſe calls uſeleſs, which through our obſtinacy, (onely,) fail of their deſigned good effect.

Sect. 86. No more did I give you cauſe for that harſh-ſounding phraſe of God's neceſſarily purſuing it, becauſe it was decreed.] I ſhould rather have ſuggeſted to you theſe words, inſtead of them, that God is faithfull, and juſt, and veracious, and ſo performs his part of the covenant of grace with men, howſoever they are, (and he foreſees them,) wanting to their own part.

Sect. 87. What you ſay you underſtand not in my laſt papers, I thus explain; thoſe calls of God which the obdurate reject, are moſt ſeriouſly meant by God to their reformation, elſe he would not puniſh them for rejecting them, as he doth by withdrawing them, &c. This God decrees to doe ab æterno, which he could not, unleſs he foreſaw their rejection of them, and yet neither could he foreſee their ſo criminal rejecting them, unleſs he foreſaw the ſeriouſneſs of them, and if he foreſaw that, then it is as certain as any thing, that God foreſees that they are ſerious, and although God do not actually inflict puniſhment upon bare foreſight of ſin, yet ſure he may decree to puniſh thoſe whom he foreſees to deſerve it, and that is all that is neceſſary to my arguing. Elſe I might tell you that God that accepts not a temporary faith, will never accept ſuch a man as is anſwerable to the ſtony, or thorny ground, (who in time of trial would fall away,) though he ſhould be taken away before temptations approach.

God's foreſight of man's rejecting his calls and the criminouſneſs thereof, a proof of the ſeriouſneſs of them.

Sect. 88. In that of Judas, you grant that the prophecy, as terminated in him, could not have been fulfilled, had he never been born, but then your Quære remains, ſay you, whether it might not have been fulfilled in another?] I anſwer, 1. it could not have been fulfilled in another, without ſome other diſciples doing what he did, and 'tis certain no other did ſo, and therefore what was foretold muſt have been fulfilled in him, or elſe, (which may not be believed of a divine Oracle,) had not been fulfilled. But then, 2. Chriſt's words to John pointing out Judas for the Traitour, he that dippeth, &c. was a prediction of God perfectly terminated in Judas's perſon, and could not be fulfilled in any other, and ſo your new Quære is anſwered alſo. And that gives you a farther reaſon, (if what was ſaid before to your ſecond Quære were not ſufficient,) that our Saviour's prediction was not conditional, but categorically enunciative, verily I ſay unto you that one of you ſhall or will betray me, and he that dippeth, at that time when Chriſt ſpake it, deictically, i. e. Judas, is that perſon.

The predictions of Judas could not be fulfilled in another.

Not conditional.

Sect. 89. In your view of what I ſaid to your ſecond queſtion, you firſt inſiſt on my anſwer, that the event proved the denunciation againſt Judas was not like that againſt Niniveh conditional, but I foreſaw the ſmall force of that, which I uſed onely εἰς ἴσως, and therefore added a ſecond, that the prediction of Judas was of his ſin, as well as puniſhment, and the prediction of his ſin could not be conditional, nor the prediction of the Ninivites puniſhment any way be applicable to it, leaving therefore the weaker, I adhered onely to this, which when you labour alſo to evacuate, by interpreting, [one of you will betray me,] by [unleſs he repent, &c. he will betray me,] You conſider not, 1. that Chriſt's death, as it was from all eternity decreed by God, ſo it was oft predicted by Chriſt, and his reſurrection, and many other things depending on it, and among theſe ſtill the treachery of one of his diſciples is one, and that is not reconcileable with this interpretation. 2. That foreſeeing that he would be ſo diſpoſed, as unleſs he repented he would betray him, is the foretelling of a future contingent. 3. That one particular prediction, wherein Judas was deictically ſignified, was private to S. John, that lay in Jeſus his boſome, as appears, John 13. 24, 25, 26. And though the words to Judas himſelf, Matth. 26. 15. may better bear that ſenſe you aſſign, yet the words to John, which Judas heard not, could be no ſuch admonition to Judas, and therefore were without queſtion abſolute, and ſo thoſe other to Peter, Verily I ſay to thee, before the Cock crow twice, thou ſhalt deny me thwice, when he had profeſſed he would rather die, than deny him, are not eaſily healed with this ϑάϱϱιμον, [unleſs thou repent thou wilt deny me,] for aſſuredly Peter meant not now to deny Chriſt, but reſolved the contrary, and therefore had nothing to repent of in this behalf. And when you ſeem to demonſtrate it could not be abſolute, becauſe Judas might confeſſedly have repented, and if he had, then it muſt have been interpreted conditionally, I anſwer according to my hypotheſis, that if Judas had repented, Chriſt had never foreſeen, or declared of him, as he doth, i. e. that he ſhould betray him.

So that of Peter's denial.

Prediction of ſin cannot be conditional.

Sect. 90. But, ſay you, you ſee not why a conditional prediction may not be appliable as well to the prevention of ſin, as of puniſhment.] I ſhall ſhew you why it may not, becauſe the puniſhment is God's work, and for the averting of that there is force in the Ninivites repentance, which is the condition required on their part, on the performance of which God hath generally promiſed to ſuſpend his puniſhments, and therefore the threats are conditional, which in equity will not be inflicted, if the condition be performed. But the ſin is Man's work, and to the commiſſion of that no other party contributes but himſelf, and ſo neither is the prediction of it a threat, but a down-right enunciation, neither is there any condition imaginable to be performed on the other party, anſwerable to the other caſe, unleſs God ſhould forcibly interpoſe to avert it, (and that cannot be imagined to be the meaning, [except I reſtrain Judas he will betray me] or if it were, it were ſtill an act of God's abſolute foreknowledge, that he will doe ſo, if not violently reſtrained) all probable means to his amendment, and particularly the admitting him to the Sacrament, being, ſaith S. Chryſoſtome, already uſed to him, and yet, ſaith Chriſt, he will betray me.

The iſſue of the whole queſtion whether preſcience of contingents imply a contradiction.

Sect. 91. Now for defence of your Poſtſcript, and the contradiction which that charged on our hypotheſis, I pray mark the Iſſue of it. If you can prove that it implies a contradiction for God to foreſee future contingents, then you certainly prevail; as on the other ſide if you ſucceed not in this attempt, you muſt reſolve your opinion erroneous, becauſe nothing being impoſſible to God but to lie, and ſo to make good both parts of a contradiction, if preſcience bring not this conſequence, it muſt be poſſible to God, how inexplicable or unintelligible ſoever it be to me, who for want of facultatem analogam, cannot judge of the actions of an eternal God, and if it be yielded poſſible, then the predictions of Scripture will be proofs beyond queſtion of the truth of it. To this one teſt then let us come. The contradiction you aſſigned was, our ſaying, that things future are or may be preſent to God. I ſhewed you the definition of contradictories was not competible to theſe, of which eſt and non eſt is the known example, and preſent and future are neither preſent and not preſent, nor future and not future. And again in contradictions both parts muſt be conſidered in the ſame reſpects, whereas future being enunciated in reſpect of us, and our finite ſight, preſent is expreſt to be in reſpect of God, whoſe ſcience is immenſe, and infinite.

The laws of contradictions.

Sect. 92. Now to this you reply, 1. That preſent and future, though they are not formal contradictions, yet really and in ſenſe they are, for future is that that is not preſent, but to come, and preſent and not preſent are formally contradictory. 2. That my conceſſion that no finite thing can both be preſent and future is enough for you, for God cannot be preſent to that which is not preſent to him.] I now anſwer to your firſt, that there is nothing ſo falſe, that I cannot make good by this your arguing. In particular, by this the doctrine of the Trinity and Unity were equally confuted, for Trinitas in the wonted notion is not one but three, and one, and not one, are formally contradictory. This is the direct image and tranſcript of your arguing, mutatis mutandis, yet I know you deny not the Tri-unus Deus, how then can you on no better proof deny preſcience? The Socinians conformably deny both, but you are partial, and deny but one of them. It is never ſafe to deſpiſe the ordinary rules of art, but ſeldom more dangerous than in this, whereas if Logick were duly revered in its dictates, and nothing thought contradictory in ſenſe, but what is an affirmation, and negation of the ſame thing, this intricacy would be unfolded, and that which is future to me, be preſent to God, without the incumbrance or dread of a contradiction.

The argument holds equally againſt the Trinity, and Unity.

Sect. 93. To the ſecond I anſwer, that it cannot ſuffice to your pretenſions, that no finite thing is both preſent and future, meaning, (as it is plain I did,) in the ſame reſpect, preſent and future to me: When yet what is future to me, may be preſent to one that lives a year hence, and ſo much more to God who liveth for ever. When therefore in your proof you ſeem to ſuppoſe me to hold, that what is future to me, is not preſent to God, you did miſtake me, for as I ſaid, that God being immenſe may and muſt be preſent to that which is future, or elſe he is bounded and limited, and ſo not immenſe, infinite, ſo I deemed that, which God is thus preſent to, to be objectively preſent to him, and ſo it was from all eternity, though to us it be not yet preſent, but future. So that the other part of the definition of contradictories, if it had been adverted to, had ſuperſeded this part of your anſwer alſo, viz. that it is the affirmation and negation of the ſame thing in the ſame reſpects, as here you ſee it was not, and ſo was not uſefull to you.

What is preſent to God, is not eternal.

Sect. 94. But ſay you, if all future contingents are and ab æterno were all preſent to God, then they are all eternal.] I deny that conſequence; what is finite, and in it ſelf yet future, by its objective preſence to God, is not changed into eternal, nay even that which really is, and ſo is really (and not onely objectively,) preſent to him, is yet as far from eternal, as Chriſt's body, by being united to his infinite divinity, is from becoming infinite. This then was but a Sophiſm that you will ſoon ſee thorough.

Sect. 95. And ſo your other part of the ſame paſſage of S. Auguſtine Confeſs. l. 2. c. 18. that again you reſort to, was in effect formerly anſwered, by ſhewing that it belonged onely to what is future, and preſent to us, and ſo to our ſight, not to God's. I have now gone thorough your papers and wearied you, and almoſt my ſelf, yet if what is written prove uſefull to you, to the depoſiting that which I cannot but deem an Errour, although I lay no Epithets upon it, it will be far from burthenous to Your very affectionate friend and ſervant.

H. HAMMOND.

POSTSCRIPT.

Sect. 96. TO extricate you finally out of this difficulty, I ſhall deſire you by way of recapitulation, to conſider apart theſe two propoſitions, the firſt that God's ſcience being as immenſe and infinite, as himſelf, is not limited to things paſt or preſent, or futures, by him decreed, but extends to all that ever ſhall be, or may be; to what may be, ſo as to ſee it may be, though it be not, to what ſhall be, ſo as to ſee it come to paſs, as in time it doth come to paſs, contingent things, contingently, &c. Of which propoſition if there can be any doubt to any man, who ſtedfaſtly believes God's immenſity, let the predictions recorded in the Scripture be conſidered, thoſe eſpecially which are of ſins, which it is as impoſſible for God to decree or predetermine, as to cauſe, and yet he foreſees and foretells them, witneſs Chriſt's foretelling Peter, that he ſhould deny him thrice, when Peter himſelf was ſo far from foreſeeing, or purpoſing it, that he reſolved the contrary. The ſecond propoſition, that there are future contingents, that all the ſins (at leaſt) of men are not decreed, and predetermined by God, or cauſed by any neceſſity. Of which no man can doubt, which believes the Scripture, and therein the procedure of the judgment to come, the difference in reſpect of guilt and puniſhment betwixt voluntary and involuntary actions, (the motions of men and of ſtones,) and again the exhortations and menaces of God in Scripture, and the great ſerioufneſs expreſt, and proteſtations prefixt to them.

Two propoſitions.
The firſt of God's immenſe ſcience.
The proof of it.
The ſecond of contingency and liberty.
The proof of it.

Sect. 97. If taking theſe propoſitions apart, any Chriſtian can doubt of the truth of either of them, he ſees the ſhelves he ſplits upon, and the ſhipwreck of a great part of the Faith, whether on this, or that ſide. But if he cannot but aſſent to theſe truths ſeverally, and onely wants the skill of reconciling the ſeeming difficulties which they beget, when he attempts to put them together, (of which ſort are all the inconveniences, or objections, produced in this matter,) let him on that occaſion conſider, how (more than) credible it is, that he doth not underſtand all things that are, having but finite faculties, and finite meaſures, which are not proportioned to infinite powers, or objects; Which makes it moſt ſeaſonable to ſuperſede all farther enquiries, and to acquieſce in an aſſurance, that God can reconcile his own contradictions, ſuch I mean, as though by the known rules of Logick they appear to be really no contradictions, yet by us are conceived to approach near to ſuch, through prejudice, or thinking (not too little, but rather) too much upon them. In which caſe to reſtrain our farther ſearches is the ſame neceſſary mortification, which it is to reſtrain inordinate appetites, and is a principal piece of duty owing to the Apoſtles precept of φρονεῖν εἰς τὸ σωφρονεῖν, being wiſe to ſobriety: God give the world of Chriſtian profeſſours more of it, than is yet diſcernible among them.

Judgment worthy of God:

Or, an ASSERTION of the

EXISTENCE and DURATION

OF

IN TWO

OCCASIONAL LETTERS.

The PREFACE.

So ſervilely diſ-ingenuous is our Nature, and altogether brutiſh in the purſuit of ſenſual enjoyments, that the propoſal of rewards does in no proportion lead us ſo forcibly to our intereſts and duties, as do the threats and menaces of puniſhment. Inſomuch that it may be ſaid with perfect truth, that God is far more gracious in ſeverity than in mercy; far more obliging and indulgent in creating of a Hell, than in furniſhing a Heaven. Whilſt the flaming ſword and dreadfull Cherubim, ſet at the Entrances of Paradiſe, though they ſeem'd meant to hinder the return of our firſt Parents, prove really both theirs and our beſt Convoy thither. We being ſuch, whom vengeance onely can reclaim, terrours allure, and even damnation it ſelf preſerve from ruine and damnation.

Accordingly, it is an Obſervation verifi'd by full experience, that our fears of Hell are balanc'd with our hopes of Heaven; and our beliefs concerning each, anſwer our Expectations of either. The Apoſtle's aſſertion of mens heaping to themſelves Teachers according to their luſts, being as true of their choice of doctrines: and however in other things we live not anſwerably to our Principles, in this Inſtance we rarely deviate, and by the ſame degrees grow confident in doing ill at preſent, and disbelieving of our future ſufferings for it: ſo that it proves a Contemplation of great variety to recollect what ſhifts men put themſelves upon, to gain a truce and correſpondence with their vices; how they ſweat and labour, as to acquire the real puniſhments, ſo to elude the anticipated dreads and frightfull Expectations attending their miſdoings.

1. And firſt of all; how being engag'd in vitious practice, they ſtrive to palliate its deformity with the beauteous appearances of neighbouring vertue; calling their angers juſtice, their luſts friendſhips, their rapines zeal, and ſo of the reſt. But when this umbrage proves too thin, and the hypocrite has the ill fate never long to impoſe on others, and therefore much leſs upon himſelf.

2. The next attempt is made to leſſen the regard of Vertue and ſhame of Vice, by ſuggeſting that both are the production of opinion: That Nature knew no Ethicks, but founding all things in Community made no proprieties excepting thoſe of enjoyment and poſſeſſion, whilſt Law and Right are the mere iſſues of preceding Wrong, the uſurping on that freedom, which was the native birthright of mankind; and honeſty is nothing but a bondage unto common fame, the being a Fool to eſcape the ſtyle of Knave. But when this gourd is wither'd in the day of its appearance (diſhoneſt practice; however faſhionable and recommended by Example; being of ill mark and ſeeking Covert: never ſecure by any ſtrengths, nor ſhelter'd by Concealment: Nay more than this, the partial ſinner condemning ſtill in others, the very guilts he flatters in himſelf, which makes it evident that naughty practice has an horrour in it which in deſpight of intereſt or prepoſſeſſion confeſſes it deteſtible.)

3. A freſh expedient is ſought, and men are taught to argue, that howſoever Wickedneſs be ſhamefull in its nature, it will not much import if it at leaſt be innocent in its effects; and followed by impunity. Which hope is countenanc'd by the indifferent and ſeeming caſual diſpenſation of ſucceſſes in the World; where one event happens to the good and bad, the clean and unclean; him that ſacrifices, and him that ſacrifices not; whilſt Providence is ſo far from puniſhing offenders, as to allow to them the moſt ſignal liberalities; and good men in the interim rarely ſhare in any thing but miſery. Yet notwithſtanding this; ſince conſcious guilt by ſad miſgiving controlls its moſt aſſur'd enjoyments; and reaſon adds her more concluding ſuffrage, retorting back the argument, and from the impunity of wicked men at preſent demonſtrates that inſtead of peace and ſafety a ſure arrear of judgment muſt be look'd for; it being moſt conſequent, that if there be a God, he muſt be juſt: and if he be ſo, will puniſh in a future world the injuſtices which eſcape and thrive in this.

4. Hence it grows needfull for the vicious perſon to look out farther for ſecurity; and beaten from the former ſhelters, his next addreſs is to Religion, and with the troops of other Criminals he ſeeks for refuge at the Altar, which to all purpoſes beſides he ſcorns and deſecrates. And here he boldly claims the privilege of Saintſhip, of Faith, Predeſtination, and thouſands of texts of Scripture, which promiſe mercy and forgiveneſs unto ſinners. But when theſe flattering expectations are ſilenc'd by the voice of the ſame Scripture, which plainly ſays that no Whoremonger, Adulterer, unclean perſon, or the like, ſhall have any inheritance in the Kingdom of Chriſt and of God: and on the contrary, that tribulation and anguiſh is on the Soul of every man that doeth evil whatſoever his opinion be: and as to advantages from outward profeſſion, they are but this; he that knows the Will of God and does not practiſe, has right unto this one prerogative alone, to be beaten with more ſtripes than others.

5. After these frequently repeated misadventures, the sinner encourages himself to try a yet unthought of Artifice; and since that in all addresses whether to Nature or Religion he meets with sad abodes of future punishments; he would fain please himself with putting far off from him the evil day: suggesting that these punishments both are and likewise will be future still; at least are so remote, as not to merit our regards, or stand in competition with a present satisfaction. But when the hourly possibilities of death and a succeeding state of torment, revenging with severe inflictions the broken minutes of reprieve, intrude upon the mind; then this fair dream of Comfort likewise vanishes as faithless and as empty as the rest. And now it were to be expected, that the sensual Man driven so often from his fastnesses and places of retreat, should yield and be content at last to part with ruine.

6. But the industry of vice is not so wanting to it self: for though it be made evident that vertue is a real being, and the demure pretension to it will no way satisfie our interest or duty: also that it appear Religion has no Gospel for the wilfull sinner; and no impunity can be expected to transgression, nor advantage in delay of suffering: One more, and indeed the onely unattempted refuge is laid hold of: to try if that these punishments are really so formidable as is pretended; or such indeed as a generous and valiant sinner may meet and grapple with. The which is put in practice by framing easie Characters of the inflictions apportion'd to transgression, and likewise shortning the date of their duration.

And indeed this method of procedure seems to be the last effort of resolute Impiety: when men determin'd not to leave their sin, rifle the regions of darkness for their shelter, and seek a refuge in perdition: fulfilling the prophetick strain and high Hyperbole of making a Covenant with Death and being at an agreement with Hell. A method, which though not perfectly unknown unto precedent generations, was rarely ventur'd on; but seems left like to the barbarous Western World to be invaded and possest by this our Age. Even that, which having attempted Mischiefs beyond all common practice, was in reason to look out for salvo's and excuses no less peculiar. And as if these would not be authentick if onely whisper'd in discourse, we have liv'd to see them made the Argument of Books, and magisterially disputed as sober truths and maximes of Divinity. For besides the preparatory Doctrine of the Socinians, (who teaching men to disbelieve that Resurrection which God asserts, leave it an easie task to overthrow that which themselves contriv'd) We have in our own language been solemnly instructed that the pains of Hell are nothing but the luxuries of Earth; the drudgery of getting Children, and living o'er again that age which sensual men would live for ever. We have been likewise taught those pains dwell onely in the fancy, nay in the Wishes and importunate desires of them that are tormented: as if the flames of the infernal Tophet had been the painted Fires of Purgatory, and every criminal were his own Hell and pain and Devil too.

The Socinians opinion of the future state of Souls.

Mr. Hobbs.

Mr. White.

Lastly, we have been taught that the severity of the day of judgment shall pass upon it self' when death shall learn to die, damnation be condemn'd, and perdition be destroy'd, Whilst men have brought again from the infernal pit that monstrous Heresie, which should have justifi'd its doctrine, by having been it self consum'd there, and lost unto Eternity.

Resolution concerning Origen.

Alas! who will from henceforth be afraid of sin, if it onely punish by inflicting pleasure, torment by hating us with keen desire, or end in painless deperdition? We can dwell with consuming fire, and peacefully cohabit with everlasting burning, if the flames be onely those of lust, or of desire; or be they real ones, if they utterly consume, and are so great as to be withall most friendly, and calcine us in a moment.

Which severals being thus nakedly premis'd, there will not need a farther Preface to manifest, how very seasonable the subjects of the ensuing discourses are: nor more to justifie the Edition of them, unless it may be usefull to declare, that these considerations were so weighty, as to perswade thereto the Right Reverend Father in God, the Lord Bishop of London, (who was entrusted with these Venerable Remains) though he otherwise is very jealous without much caution to commit (and will not suffer any other person to bring) the posthumous labours (especially the occasional private Letters) of his friend to publick light: lest, though every thing which fell from that excellent Pen, merits its Readers full reception, yet wanting the advantage of a review, it may not altogether merit and deserve its Authour; that is; be not so exactly absolute, as whatsoever past his second view was sure to be.

May the Charity of the one in writing, and the other in publishing these discourses be answered in the advantage of the Reader; who can onely, by being convinc'd there is a Hell, escape the knowing what it is, and will happily confute these Papers by being a Proselyte unto them.

ἈΞΙΑ ΘΕΟΥ ΚΡΙΣΙΣ,

Judgment worthy of God:

Or, an ASSERTION of the EXISTENCE and DURATION OF HELL TORMENTS.

SIR,

AS ſoon as I had made my laſt diſpatch to you, it pleaſed God to faſten me to my Bed for ſome days, by the return of a fit, which hath been my frequent exerciſe; from whence being now after five days remov'd to my Chair, I have ſome liberty to review your queſtion; and think it beſt with my pen in my hand to offer to you (in the ſame order which you have us'd) my thoughts of every period.

And firſt for the terms of the Queſtion, they want ſomewhat of Expreſneſs: For ſuppoſing as you do, that the Wicked riſe, and are judged, and adding from hence that their ſentence ſhall be that they ſhall utterly be deſtroyed, yet it is uncertain, whether that ſentence ſhall be immediately executed, or after ſome ſpace; or if immediately, whether by a ſwift or lingring deſtruction. For he that ſhould affirm the wicked to be at the laſt judgment committed to a fire, which ſhould torment for many hundred or thouſand years, and at laſt conſume and annihilate them, would affirm the affirmative of this queſtion; and ſo he, that advanc'd from thouſands to millions of years and ages of ſufferings, concluded (at any the longeſt laſt) with abolition. And then the arguings that are after us'd from God's Juſtice, &c. would be of little force, if no more but this were deſign'd to be gain'd by them. For it were ſure as much Juſtice to puniſh eternally, as to puniſh millions of years, and then annihilate, when the ſuppoſed ground of Injuſtice is the lightneſs, or ſhortneſs of the Acts ſo puniſhed, which would in the Eye of Law, and Equity, bear as little, i. e. no proportion with many millions of Ages, as with duration abſolutely infinite. I ſhall therefore take it for granted by him that propoſeth the queſtion, that he means deſtruction immediately following the doomſday ſentence, and that no lingring but ſwift deſtruction.

Next then p. 1. for Origen's opinion, granting it right ſtated (as I think it is) I demand for what reaſon that is mention'd? Is it not for this, becauſe Origen's Doctrine was deem'd an Hereſie in the Church, and that of ſome ill and dangerous conſequence to be believ'd? If ſo, then it muſt be conſidered, whether they that deem'd Origen's Heretical, can appear to have been more favourable to this, (which will not be found) or whether the ill conſequences of this be not as dangerous, as Origen's, i. e. whether the belief of no future puniſhment to the wickedeſt Hypocrites in the world, ſave onely of ſwift annihilations, will not be as forcible a means of ſecuring wicked men (that have no taſte of ſpiritual joys) in the admitting of any gainfull evil, as the belief that after a long ſpace of horrible torments proportionably increas'd to their number of Sins, and the aggravations thereof, they ſhall one day, no body knows when, when the Devils have been puniſh'd enough for their higheſt rebellions and continued hating and oppoſing of God, be delivered out of their flames, and made partakers of viſion of God, and Society of Saints, and Angels, which they ever hated, and never deſire to ſee, or be in their company, and have ſuffer'd all thoſe torments, rather than they would entertain or admit Communion (of deſire and practices) with them. 'Tis poſſible it may be ſaid that the reaſon of the difference is, becauſe Origen's opinion was contrary to Scripture, and that this other is not. To this I ſhall make no farther reply, than in the words of Vincentius Lirin. Imo planè nemo unquam Magiſtrorum fuit, qui pluribus divinæ legis uteretur exemplis. His onely fault then muſt be, that he urged divine Teſtimonies in uncatholick Interpretations: (And whether that have not place here alſo, I leave it to every one to conſider.) And ſo ſaith Lirinenſis again, Dum parvipendit antiquam religionis Chriſtianæ ſimplicitatem, dum ſe plus cunctis ſapere præſumit, dum Eccleſiaſticas traditiones & veterum Magiſteria contemnens quædam ſcripturarum capitula novo more interpretatur, meruit ut de ſe quoque Eccleſiæ Dei diceretur, Si ſurrexit in medio Tui Propheta—

Thirdly then, to come to your Teſtimonies from Scripture, of the N.T. eſpecially, for proof of the affirmative. And 1. for the uſe of θάνατος, ἀποθνήσκειν and ἀποθνήσκειν; It is acknowledged that theſe words properly ſignifie the ſame that in Engliſh death or dying doth. But that this ſhould be limited to utter deſtruction and annihilation, is moſt unreaſonable. For, in the uſing of this argument it is foreſeen and granted, that death is taken ſometimes for death in and unto Sin: Onely 'tis ſuggeſted that thoſe are myſtical and metaphorical ſenſes. Hereupon I infer, that if the words be taken ſometimes myſtically and metaphorically, and yet no assurance that they are so, but because they are us'd in a matter whereto death, as it signifies a separation of Soul and Body, is unappliable; then may they by the same reason be taken so elsewhere, and not bound to that one which is thought to be the sole literal and proper signification. If Death appear to signifie in Scripture somewhat beside utter destruction, then how can the wickeds utter destruction be concluded from the mentions of their death, &c. Against this it avails not to say, that the one is the proper, but the other onely metaphorical notion of it: for it being granted that the Scripture useth Metaphors in one instance, why may it not in another as probably? This is sufficient to the force of that argument. But then ex abundanti, I add, that the notion of Death for utter destruction, i. e. Annihilation, being onely usefull to the disputer, it will be hard for him to produce any one place, either in Old or new Testament, (I might add, or in any other Author) where θάνατος, &c. signifies Annihilation. It signifies indeed the separation of Soul from Body very frequently; but that is not founded on supposition that in that separation either of the parts, much less both, utterly perish. Nay the doctrine, for which the proposer of the questions disputes, supposes him not to mean death in that notion; for then eternal death, the wickeds portion, must be eternal separation of soul and body, which is exclusive of all reunion or resurrection at the day of Judgment: which the Disputer averts as heretical. Nay 'tis to be observ'd that when our Saviour came neerest the expressing this matter of annihilation, he chuseth two other Phrases, (not this of death, or any thing that way inclining) having never been born, and having a milstone hanged about the Neck and being cast into the midst of the Sea, which by an imperfect resemblance seemeth meant on purpose to signifie annihilation: And yet it is also observable to the main question, that either of these states (and so annihilation) is better and more desirable, than the Lot which in God's decree awaits a betrayer of Christ, a wicked man, for that one fact. Thus far by way of evacuating all force in that Argument; To this I shall add somewhat Positive toward the laying foundation for the evincing the contrary, viz. That death in Scripture use, is (as 'tis granted in the objection) oppos'd to Life. Life then, ordinarily signifies that which results from the union of Soul and Body: but it also signifies the result of another union (Unio Virtutis) betwixt God and the Soul, or betwixt God and both. In the former of these it signifies spiritual life, both as that signifies living well, whereby the passages of spiritual vertue betwixt God and us, are kept open and free; and as it signifies pardon of sin, the contrary whereto is expressed by separating and hiding his face, and turning himself from us. In the latter (viz. betwixt God and the soul and body, i. e. Person of man) it signifies God's favour and protection, of which under the style of God's presence the Psalmist saith, that in it is life. And then as all felicity is the certain effect or consequent of this kind of union, so life oft signifies felicity, even that of the highest Magnitude. And all this not Mystically or Metaphorically, that I know of, (or if it did, that exception is of no force as hath already been shew'd) but as literally, and with as full propriety as the union of soul and body is call'd Life, God being (as the School saith out of Saint Augustine) intimior cuicunque rei creatæ, than the Soul is to the Body: and so the several parts of that union more necessary to the several sorts of life signified thereby. Mean while it is evident that ζωὴ life belongs not to being simply; for all Ents have not life: or to miserable being; non est vivere sed valere vita; but to greater or lesser degrees of happy and joyfull being, the utmost of which is so naturally expressed by ζωὴ, that it wants not the addition of αἰώνιος (oft times) to doe it: If thou wilt enter into life, Mat. 19. 17. and 7. 14. and 18. 8. i. e. the happy being in Heaven: Which is so properly that which is call'd life, that this we live here scarce deserves the appellation in comparison with it. Now in proportion to these acceptions of life must the Notion of θάνατος, &c. be calculated. Had life signified most properly [being] simply taken, there might have been some pretence, that the contrary θάνατος should denote the contrary to being, viz. Annihilation: But when it signifies those so many other things, and not simple entity, 'tis most rational that θάνατος should both technically, and properly signifie the opposites to those severals, wicked life, the displeasure of God, a miserable being here, separation of Soul from Body, of both from God, and above all, endless torments in another world, Joh. 8. 51, 52. (and that as somewhat to be seen and tasted, which were not so well appliable to annihilation) and in many other places; I instance in one or two more, first Heb. 2. 14. because there it seems to me to have a mark distinguishing it both from death, the separation of Soul and Body, and from annihilation. For of neither of those I suppose the Devil can be said κράτος ἔχειν, to have power, especially not of the latter; which is a work of the same Omnipotency that creation is: Whereas of eternal torments of the wicked 'tis certain that the inflicting of them is intrusted to the Devil; and so he hath power over them.

Secondly, 1 Joh. 3. 14. Where he that loveth not his brother is said μένειν ἐν θανάτῳ to abide in that which is there call'd death, which is some prejudice to the opinion of redactio in nihilum: for in that there is no abiding. So that I suppose it clear that there hath been little gain'd to the establishing the affirmative of the question, from this first objection, the use of θάνατος, &c. for the punishment of the Wicked.

Proceed we then to the second sort of words ἀπώλεια and ὄλεθρος and ἀπολέσαι there rendred destruction or perishing or perdition. For all these will be ruled by the former θάνατος, &c. none of them having any propriety to the sense of annihilation, but onely oppos'd to σώζεσθαι and σωτηρία in the notions wherein they are visibly us'd for rescues or deliverances; sometime from greater, sometime from lesser dangers; sometime for forsaking of Sin, repentance, Act. 2. 40. coincident with spiritual life: sometime for pardon of Sin, sometime for temporal cures; and sometime for that state of endless rest from pain, Sin, Frailties, Infirmities, together with addition of all positive bliss in the vision of God. And in proportion ἀπώλεια is fitly us'd not onely for the privations, but contraries to every one of those, the evils extremely opposite to these good things. And nothing hinders but that ἀπολέσαι be taken, Mat. 10. 28. not for annihilating but tormenting in Hell, that being the known place for the inflicting of torments, and to that end the fire eternal prepared for the Devil and his Angels, and Men also adjudged to have their parts of it, Mat. 25. 41. and the office of the Devils, there to be Lictors, and tormentours, and gaolors, which suppose space of detention and cruciating, but are irreconcileable with instant annihilation: see Mat. 5. 25, 26. And against this sense of ἀπολέσαι, nothing farther said hath force. For, first, thus 'tis certain, God both can and will punish, i. e. cruciate those that fear him not. Secondly, 'tis denied that ἀπώλεια most properly signifies the destruction of the being of the subject, or annihilation, and whereas 'tis affirm'd ſo to ſignifie *Mat.*10.39. it is certain it doth not. For there as it is once oppos'd to the loſing this preſent life, (as our Saviour foretells the complying Jews, and Gnoſticks ſhould in event do by thoſe very means by which they intended to preſerve them) ſo it is a ſecond time appli'd to godly Martyrs who loſe their lives for Chriſt's ſake, of whom it will not be imagined that they are annihilated, when they ſo die. Thirdly, the Conceſſion that when applied to a perſon, it ſignifies generally death in the proper ſenſe, is a manifeſt prejudice to its ſignifying annihilation; for if the death of a perſon were the annihilating that perſon, all reſurrection were ſuperſeded. And this is farther evident by the ſeveral proofs farther produced, as Mat. 26. 52. where they that take the Sword againſt the lawfull Magiſtrate, ſhall i. e. are worthy to periſh by the Sword of the Magiſtrate, which yet I hope can annihilate no men, but onely kill the body, Mat. 10. 28. And beyond that have no more that they can doe: ſo Mat. 27. 20. I hope Jeſus was onely crucified, not annihilated. And ſo in all other places, ſave onely that of 1 Cor. 15. 18. where upon a falſe aſſumption it would follow that (not the wicked, which alone were pertinent, but) good Chriſtians ſhould utterly loſe all being, at leaſt of the body, or be never rais'd again, ſo that it is far from being by that Cumulus of Teſtimonies concluded that the deſtruction or periſhing of the wicked ſignifies utter deſtruction.

If theſe teſtimonies may be believed (ſome of which belong to Chriſt, ſome more to the godly, and no one to the annihilation of the wicked) the direct contrary will be concluded.

Fourthly, the places that are produced to prove this to be the expectation of the Devils, prove it not. Not Mar. 1. 24. for there to deſtroy them] is to retrench their great power over the men of the World, to deſtroy their Dominion, to caſt them out of the bodies ver. 25. yea and out of the Temples and minds of men, which they poſſeſt. The other of Luke 4. 34. is to the ſame purpoſe, and ſo concludes no more, than that concluded. And indeed it cannot be with any ſhew of reaſon imagined, that the Devils ſhould know ſo little of their own doom, as to think it poſſible they ſhould at Chriſt's coming be annihilated. Nay if they had, their preſent condition being ſo far from the leaſt degree of happineſs, they could have no reaſon to deprecate it, or beg Chriſt to let them alone, and diſclaim having any thing to doe with him. Their annihilation (if that had been the ſignification of deſtroying them) the ſpeedier it were, it were certainly the more deſirable; eſpecially when it would alſo have ſecured them from the fear of a yet worſe condition, which we know was decreed them, and of which they cannot be doubted to have received preſages, by being finally ſentenc'd to it. If this argument be conſidered, it will certainly warrant my affirmation, that 'twas not annihilation that the devils with ſuch horrour expected from Chriſt, but as appears by comparing with Mat. 8. 29. amandation to torments.

Fifthly, the uſes of the word ὄλεθρος for eternal deſtruction, exemplified by the Objector by many texts, Jo. 3,15. &c. if prov'd as manifeſtly, as freely granted by me, are ſtill of no force to induce the deſired concluſion, becauſe it was ſaid ἀπώλεια ſignifies not annihilation. And yet it falls out, that ſeveral of the teſtimonies are impertinent to that to which they were deſign'd; as 1 *Cor.*1.18. 2 Cor. 2. 15. where they that periſh are impenitent ſinners (abſtracted from the doom that expects them) as oppos'd to σωζόμενοι in the notion of penitents, and the next 2 Theſ. 2. 10. is of the ſame importance.

Sixthly, the uſes of the nouns ἀπώλεια and ὄλεθρος muſt be concluded by what hath been already ſaid of the verbs and nouns together, and indeed infer as little toward the undertaken concluſion. For to that two premiſſes being requiſite, 1. That the puniſhment of the wicked is expreſt by ἀπώλεια and ὄλεθρος; That thoſe words ſignifie annihilation; onely the former of theſe is pretended to be prov'd from the uſe of the words in the quoted places: the latter, on which all the weight lies, being not pretended or endeavoured to be prov'd but rather taken for granted, which is the great fallacy of petitio principii, not to be tolerated in the preſſing any Argument.

Seventhly, For φθορὰ it avails nothing: for allowing it to be all one with ὄλεθρος (a word which by the way I muſt now add, having formerly omitted to inſert it, ſignifies bodily ſmart inflicted by the devil, 1 Cor. 5.5. all one with κολαφίζεσθαι 2 Cor. 12. 7. buffeting) yet ſtill it ſignifies not annihilation, but ſometimes an effect of ſpiritual death, or ſeparation of God from the ſoul: viz. abominable uncleanneſs, which in a Chriſtian is the defiling of God's Temple 1 Cor. 3. 1. and that is granted by the Objector to be uſeleſs to him (and is not rendred more ſerviceable by pretending 'tis Metaphorical, for though to call a man a Temple may be deem'd a Metaphor, yet to pollute, whether Temple or Man, is propriety of ſpeech, and that the onely importance of φθείρειν in all places of the New Teſtament, 1 Cor. 15. 33. 2 Cor. 7. 2. and 11. 3. Eph. 4. 22. Jud. 10. Rev. 19. 2. and ſo very often φθορὰ Rom. 8. 21. vid. Annotat. 2 Pet. 1. 4. and 2. 12. twice, and 19.) Sometimes the corruption of the body in the grave, 1 Cor. 15. 42. and 50. ſometimes for hurt to the man, Col. 2. 22. and ſometimes for the puniſhments that await the wicked, Gal. 6. 8. and oppoſed to an happy everlaſting ſtate called ζωὴν αἰώνιον, and by that oppoſition not prejudiced but rather concluded to be an everlaſting miſerable ſtate. For whereas the contrary is ſuggeſted without offer of proof, viz. that deſtruction being oppos'd to eternal life, doth therefore ſeem to ſignifie that which is moſt oppoſite thereto, viz. real and eternal deſtruction, this is indeed ſcarce ſo much as a ſeeming or probability, very far from a demonſtration. For ſure eternal miſerable being is moſt properly contrary and ſo oppoſite to eternal happy being. And though in Metaphyſical conſideration abſolute no being be moſt oppoſite to being, and ſo to eternal being; yet in moral ſpeaking it is not ſo; For ſure eternal ill being, eternal torments, are much worſe than no being at all: the bare Bonitas Entis, which Dr. Twiſs, and ſome Predeſtinarians fly to, being, when joyn'd with infinite miſeries, very far from being valuable to him that hath it; If we believe Chriſt, having never been born, is more deſirable than it. What is ſaid on this word φθορὰ to the interpreting of 2 Pet. 2. 12. is in my opinion not to be adhered to: Ἄλωσις and φθορὰ, are, I think, to be actively taken, and ſo γεγεννημένοι εἰς ἅλωσιν καὶ φθορὰν will ſignifie thoſe that take, and corrupt others, the filthy Gnoſticks; (ſee Annot.) and in that ſenſe, of which onely the words are capable, the phraſe hath no ſhew of uſefulneſs to the Objectour. For then ἐν τῇ φθορᾷ αὐτῶν καταφθαρήσονται readily ſignifies in their corrupting or debauching others, they ſhall be deſtroyed, i. e. puniſhed ſeverely (I ſuppoſe eternally, though that word enforce it not.)

Eighthly,

Eighthly, For καταδαξαι, Luke 19.27. the full importance of it is to denote a ſignal execution of puniſhment on malefactors, brought forth and ſlain before the provoked King, but no more implies annihilation than any of the former. Nor is it at all diſcernable by that place whether the puniſhment executed were to be ſwift or lingring, it onely ſignifies ſharp, and not to be averted; and ſolemn, and exemplary, as for a great and provoking crime: and indeed the paſſage wherein we find that phraſe being a Parable, the Notion of it muſt be accorded thereunto; and ſo cannot be other than ſuch as a Prince executes on his rebel ſubjects, neither annihilation on one ſide, nor eternal puniſhments on the other; and ſo that phraſe will be argumentative on neither part.

Ninthly, For καταναλίσκειν, and the other words of the ſame nature with that, καταναλίσκειν and ἐσθίειν, the utmoſt that can be pretended of them is, that thoſe things that are thus burnt, conſum'd, and devour'd, are utterly changed from their former ſtate, not that they are annihilated. For what is utterly burnt is turn'd to aſhes, but then aſhes and not nothing are the term of that corruption. So likewiſe that which is eaten and maſticated never ſo ſmall and converted into Chyle, then bloud, then fleſh, the reſt going out into the draught, is ſtill but thus chang'd not annihilated. 'Tis not indeed what it was, but thereby it onely the more fitly repreſents thoſe infernal torments, and ſtate, which is as wide a moral mutation and departure from all good or deſirable to any appetite, as can be imagined. And certainly this is all that can pretend to be deduc'd from common interpretation (which is referr'd to) of thoſe Phraſes. For if the wicked were granted to be deſtroy'd exactly after the manner of Chaff, &c. yet as chaff is not annihilated, ſo would it not follow that the wicked are annihilated. But then withall it will be juſt to remember, that Similitudes and Parables muſt not be bound to ſuch accurate ἀναπόδοσις, as that every circumſtance in the parable be accounted for ſtrictly in the application, but onely the main lineaments, wherein the deſign'd reſemblance conſiſted, preſerv'd, viz. that as after the threſhing and winnowing the good corn, and laying it up carefully in the granary, the manner is to ſet fire to the chaff, which licks it all up, and never ceaſeth till it have conſum'd all, and in that reſpect is call'd ἄσβεστον πῦρ: (the wind conſpiring with the fire, as in their open threſhing floors on the tops of mountains the Jewiſh husbandry directed) ſo after the trying and purging and at length rewarding the godly with eternal Heaven, 'tis to be expected that God ſhall proceed to deal ſeverely with the wicked, and then that ſeverity be ſuch as they ſhall not poſſibly avert nor be able to undergo without the utmoſt moral damage to them. As for the uſe of καταιρω, Heb. 13. 11. of ſacrifices burnt to aſhes, Act. 19. 19. of Books burnt alſo, and Rev. 8.7. of trees, and green graſs burnt up, it is no more than hath been yielded to the force of the former places. For ſtill none of theſe were annihilated, they were burnt to aſhes, not to nothing. Nay when the very phraſe ἀσβέστῳ πυρὶ is ſometimes joyn'd with the burning of the wicked, as of chaff, it is not obvious to render any reaſon for the choice of this phraſe, but what will be founded in the eternity of their torments and being, for fire we know goes out it ſelf when the fewel is exhauſted, and ſo the Unextinguiſhableneſs of the one muſt be anſwered with the durableneſs of the other.

Tenthly, For the ſame and like Phraſes in the Old Teſtament, granting (according to the mind of the Objectour) that they include the ſecond death after the general judgment: yet ſtill this avails nothing to the deſir'd concluſion, unleſs it be farther prov'd that thoſe Words and Phraſes do ſignifie abſolute utter deſtruction, or annihilation, for upon that onely the affirmative of the queſtion depends, and for that there is no leaſt pretence of proof offer'd here.

Eleventhly, For the Phraſe θανάτῳ θανατοῦσθαι, it will never be uſefull to the diſputer: for if the firſt death be the Act of ſeparation of Soul and Body, and ᾅδης not the torments of Hell, but the ſtate or continuance of that ſeparation (as it will be found to ſignifie in all the places of the Bible, and in the moſt and beſt heathen Authours) then the ſecond death being the taking away them, muſt by conſequence be founded in the reunion of the Soul and Body, that reunion being in propriety the diſſolving of ſeparation, Act and State both.

Granting therefore that the caſting of death and Hades (I muſt ſet that word inſtead of Hell, which in uſe ſignifies another thing, even that whereinto it is ſaid there to be caſt) into the Lake of fire, Rev. 20. 14. is the ſecond death: and the converting thoſe (Act and State) into a State of ſenſitive and real miſery: what can follow thence to the diſputers advantage, That according to the Rabbinical notion, it ſignifies final and utter deſtruction? Why, let it do ſo; and the reſult is, that then death being finally and utterly deſtroy'd, a never ceaſing State of being (though that moſt miſerable) now takes place, and that is Eternity of torments, far remov'd from annihilation: for though utter deſtruction of poſitive Entities may be deem'd to ſignifie annihilation, yet when attributed onely to privative Entities, death and Hades, it can in no reaſon ſignifie annihilation, but the contrary reſtauration to being, i.e. to union of Soul and Body. But then ſecondly, that the Rabbins or Chaldee Paraphraſt, Deut. 33. 6. or Iſ. 22. 14. meant by ſecond death to denote abſolute negation of all being, muſt not be allowed: for Deut. 33. 6. the Hebrew reading let Reuben live and not die, and the Chaldee Paraphraſt uſing the Phraſe of the ſecond death, that can infer no more, than by that Phraſe they explain'd what they deem'd already meant by the Hebrew word duly rendred dying: and there is no reaſon or colour for ſaying that that ſignified annihilation; die he might, yet not be annihilated. And the like is apparent of the other place, Iſ. 22. 14. ſo much therefore for that.

To proceed then, will it be for the Objectours advantage that the ſecond death is expreſs'd by the lake of Fire and Brimſtone, and that evidently referring to the utter deſtruction of Sodom and Gomorrah? To this I reply firſt, that 'twas a tempeſtuous Rain of Fire and Brimſtone that conſumed Sodom, and not a Lake; and ſo the reference doth not farther hold than the Fire and Brimſtone, i. e. the terrible ſtinking, and furiouſly burning Fire, and that gains nothing to the diſputer; The Fire of Hell may be as ſearching, and noiſome, as is poſſible, without being finite, utterly conſuming, or annihilating. Nay, ſecondly, when the Men of Sodom and Gomorrah, the inhabitants as well as the Walls, were burnt to aſhes by that Fire and Brimſtone, to which that lake bears ſome reſemblance, what probability is there, that either thoſe Walls that were burnt to aſhes were annihilated, or elſe that all that people were then annihilated ſo as to be uncapable of being rais'd, and judged at the day of doom?

Or

Or if they were, wherein did their puniſhment appear to be greater than the portion of any other more moderate wicked man, which in the diſputer's ſenſe ſhall be ſo finally annihilated, and ſure reap no advantage by the ſtate that expects him in the interval? Laſtly, will his advantage be, that as death by being caſt into the Lake is ſuppos'd to be utterly deſtroyed, ſo whoſoever elſe is caſt into the Lake, ſhall be utterly annihilated? That I ſuppoſe the ſpecially deſign'd advantage: but as it was ſaid, it will prove none, becauſe death being a privative thing, the deſtroying of that neceſſarily infers, not onely poſitive Reſurrection, but conſequent to it, an undying ſtate, and that is contrary to the diſputer's pretenſions. And then though thoſe privations be deſtroy'd by being caſt into the Lake, yet it no way follows, that men by being caſt in thither, ſhall be deſtroyed alſo. The concluding thus were, as if, putting off the Prophetical expreſſion, one ſhould ſay in plain words, After the death of Adam and all his poſterity, and their continuing in the ſtate of ſeparation ſome thouſands of years, they ſhall be rais'd again, and their Souls eternally united to their Bodies, and of thoſe ſo rais'd, many ſhould be caſt into as eternal flames, (the former of theſe is parallel to the caſting of Hell and Hades into the Lake; the latter of the perſons into the ſame Lake) Ergo as there ſhall be no more ſeparation of Souls from Bodies, ſo there ſhall be no more puniſhing of wicked men; whereas indeed the very contrary follows: The deſtroying of death is the commencing of this endleſs miſerable life, therefore prov'd to be endleſs becauſe death is deſtroyed, and ſo life comes univerſally; and ſo to continue eternally inſtead of it: for elſe death and Hades (or that which is more than death, annihilation) ſhould return to have their being again, which it was decreed they ſhould not, and therefore they are ſaid to be caſt into the Lake. 'Tis true indeed, if Hades ſignified the place of Hell or ſtate of torments, then the caſting this into the Lake would be the finiſhing thoſe torments, whether after Origen's way, or any other, it matters not; but this, as hath been ſaid, is not the importance of Hades, but the State of death, as θάνατος is the Act of it.

To what hath laſt been ſaid, that which follows in the bottom of p. 3. will be found no competent anſwer. The firſt Anſwer is, that the deſtruction of death and Hades is ſpoken properly in reference to them whoſe Names are in the Book of Life.

But firſt, if this were true, then one of my former concluſions muſt needs be granted, that Hades ſignifies not Hell torments (for that being deſtroyed to thoſe that were under it, the Godly were never under theſe) but the ſtate of the dead in univerſum. Yet ſecondly, it is not true; for v. 12. I ſaw the dead, ſmall and great, ſtand before God, and the Books were opened, The Books of Regiſter of all mens deeds (from which the Book of Life, following, is different) and the Dead were judged—the Dead indefinitely, i. e. ſure all the Dead, and yet more deictically by enumeration of all particulars concern'd in it: The Sea gave up its Dead, and Death and Hades delivered up the Dead which were in them, and they were judged every Man according to their Works. Here 'tis evident that Death and Hades are properly ſpoken in reference to all that were to be judged according to works, and not onely to them whoſe names were written in the Book of Life. And ſo that evacuates the firſt Anſwer. The ſecond Anſwer is, that they that are not written in that Book, ſhall never ſuffer ſuch a Death as brings to Hades, but ſhall fall into a worſe, the ſecond Death. But to this I reply, that this diſtinction hath no ground in the Text, but contrariwiſe both Death and Hades are equally there ſaid to be deſtroy'd to all that were under them, both whoſe names are, and are not written in the Book of Life. As therefore to the Godly, that Death that leads to Hades is deſtroy'd, ſo equally to the Wicked; and then they are both rendred eternal; and then the Wickeds being caſt into this Lake, is not, cannot be to be deſtroy'd there; but being a lake of fire, to be tormented there eternally, as is moſt apparent, ver. 10. where the Devil was caſt into this lake, and the beaſt and the falſe prophet ſaid to be there already, yet were not annihilated by being caſt thither, but as it follows, ſhall be tormented day and night for ever and ever. That they fall into a worſe death, I willingly grant, and think it uſefull to the cauſe I defend: for ſuppoſe a Wicked Man, whoſe impiety coſts him dear here, (one of the Devil's ſaddeſt Martyrs) cruciated with the Diſeaſes his Sins have brought on him in an exquiſite manner many years, and at laſt either ſeiz'd on by the hand of Juſtice, and delivered to a wittily tormenting Death, or exerciſed many years with the rack of Stone and Strangury, or the like, and at laſt by theſe horrid miſeries his Soul rent from his Body, and he continue in Hades many Hundred years, and certainly partake of no good in that eſtate, at the utmoſt, but reſt from the labours of his former life. Can it in this caſe be ſaid that the ſecond Death is worſe than this, and yet this ſecond Death defin'd by a ſwift Annihilation? Certainly it cannot. Nothing but long continued if not endleſs Torments can be ſaid worſe than thoſe ſo long continued Torments. But whereas it is added that the ſecond Death is abſolute and eternal deſtruction, as the Scripture elſewhere ſpeaks, I reply, that the Scripture no where ſpeaks ſo; never uſes ſecond Death of any ſuch thing as Annihilation, nor ever ſeems in any other words to ſay of any wicked man, that he ſhall be annihilated. As for γέεννα, I grant it parallel to πῦρ τὸ αἰώνιον, but can ſee no Argument producible thence that either of them denotes annihilation, being both ſo much more proper to denote Torments, and thoſe eternal. For the valley of Hinnom, 'tis known that Children were not burnt to Aſhes there, but put into hollow brazen Veſſels, and there fryed and ſcorched (a moſt lingring pain,) and therefore call'd Tophet from the Timbrels that there us'd to ſound to drown the noiſe of their diſmal cries. And for the lake the Text is expreſs, they that be tormented (without intermiſſion) day and night (and without ceſſation) for ever and ever. And though the valley of Hinnom being on Earth was not a ſtate of Eternal but temporary puniſhments; yet that is no prejudice: for being to take a reſemblance from Earth and humane puniſhments where nothing was Eternal, the moſt that could be was to take the ſharpeſt and moſt lingring Torments thereby to expreſs thoſe which, being moſt ſharp, were Eternal alſo. Thus much for the Texts of Scripture and phraſes therein, which ſeem favourable to the affirmation, but duly weighed have not ſo prov'd.

Now for the Conſideration taken from God's Attributes of Juſtice, and eſpecially of Mercy, p. 4. There ſeem to me to be three weak parts in the arguing. Firſt, that to thoſe ſins which are committed under temptations and infirmities of ours, not generally reliev'd by a ſufficiency of auxiliary grace, God's Eternal puniſhments are ſuppos'd to be affix'd by them, that maintain ſuch puniſhments of Eternal torments. Certainly they that thus doe, doe amiſs; and by ſo doing give great occaſion to thoſe that believe them to find to find other measures for justice in God than those which he hath prescribed to men: (whereas in matters of this nature God is content to be judg'd by our Tribunal and measures, Judge I pray you betwixt me and my Vineyard, and Are not my ways equal?) But they that maintain God's requirings, Mic. 6. to be proportion'd to his shewings, and the sufficiency of the Divine grace, ready for all that will make use of it, and therein found the justice of punishing those that do despise or neglect those means so liberally and abundantly provided for them by God, have given no cause for that exception. It is by them (on the contrary) marked out as an act of superabundant mercy, that God forsakes not upon the first refusals and not making use of his grace; he is long-suffering, and most willing, and most ardently labours that all should come to repentance, even such as have long resisted his Evangelical methods of rich grace. '2. That weight is laid upon the temporalness of the sins committed in this world, intimating I suppose the unproportionableness of Temporal to Eternal, and therein founding an objection against the Justice of those punishments. This I suppose is believ'd to have force against those that are wont to answer it by compensating the want of weight in the temporarineſs of the sin and sinner, partly by the eternity of God against whom the sin is committed, partly by the preparedness and inclination of the man to sin eternally, in case he should live eternally. And I shall confess that I have always look'd on those as σοφὰ φάρμακα, (such as the Schools have many) not able fully to satisfie humane understanding, and have therefore been carefull in several writings to offer surer grounds of satisfaction in this matter; by laying the weight on the option, which is by God given us, of eternal bliss on one side, as the reward of our Evangelical obedience, as on the other of eternal woe on our wilfull denying, and this finally and obstinately persever'd in: which makes it most just, that they that resolutely and inexorably make this choice of never so much ill to themselves, should have none but themselves to blame for the unhappiness of their portion. Thirdly, that God in inflicting punishment is compar'd with Man in respect of the compassion supposable in him to see any the worst man thus afflicted: Whereas I conceive God is to be look'd on here onely as Rector of the Universe, whose office it is to proceed in the work of Judicature without passion on either side. You may see it in a Judge on Earth, which if he be a well-natur'd man never willingly pronounces sentence, dolet quoties cogitur esse ferox: but yet must utterly disclaim his office, if he do not secundum allegata & probata pronounce that sentence, which the Law prescribes against such or such a fact, and resist all temptations of his compassion in so doing. Such a severity is that of God's, which the office which belongs to him in the World exacts of him, even when he swears that he is far from delighting in the death of him that dies, and most passionately exhorts to repent and live, and imputes it to absolute wilfulness, for which no reasonable account can be given by any man, that he will thus suffer.

Should he never make such Laws to repress Sin by assur'd expectation of eternal punishment, we might easily judge what a World or rather Wilderness of savage Creatures this Universe would be, by what it now is, even after all this severity of menace and interdict. 'Twas therefore most just and most necessary, that he should thus have ordain'd and enacted these sad Laws; And therefore in great Justice and Wisedom, and without any resistence from his infinite goodness and mercy, He thus enacted. And having done so, should he as oft as any one came to suffer according to those Laws, retract or dispense with; set his Compassion to evacuate the process, and frustrate all the wise designs of this his Justice? Certainly no man would ever expect this of an allwise Lawgiver; or (after he hath set his Seal to this grand Indenture, so solemnly as by his Son's promulgating and signing it with his bloud) imagine that his Compassion should thus tempore non suo interpose, when there are so many more proper seasons, wherein he hath effectually demonstrated himself to have as much of that to every the wickedest man that perisheth, as any the tendrest father, even David ever own'd to the most desperate rebel Son Absolon, that finally refuseth all returning to mercy, till at length he perisheth in the midst of his Sin to the wounding his Father's heart. These are three competent exceptions to that part of the arguing taken from God's attributes. And therefore to the additional considerations for the strengthening thereof the reply will be easie, that if they are the greatest part of the World that falls under this severity: this is but necessarily consequent to that greatest part, being such as that sentence most justly and indispensably belongs to, and consequently not such whose guilts are truly suggested to be thus more venial, and of an ordinary degree; but onely such as proceed from malice and obstinacy, gross negligence or groundless presumption. For, for all other sins of infirmity, ignorance, and even wilfull, timely retracted by repentance, there is remedy prepar'd under the Gospel. Onely whereas to the two heads of infirmity and ignorance, as proofs of the more ordinary degree of guilt, the Objectour adds negligence, strength of temptation, corruption of nature, affection, evil education and example; and then in gross farther adds many other circumstances, both positive and privative, abating the hainousness of the guilt; This will deserve to be better consider'd, both because the most of these (as the case truly stands) yield no matter of just excuse to any, (for so 'tis sure of examples of men, when in evident opposition to the commands and intermination of God: so of affection or sensitive passion, when in contradiction to reason and humane nature, the upper soul which ought to exercise its dominion given it by God over those θεῖα ἢ ἀνθρώπων, the bestial part of the man, and not be corrupted and led captive and blindfold by it: so again evil education, when contrary to the light of natural conscience, corruption of nature, when repair'd by grace; temptations of the flesh or world or Devil, when infinitely out-weigh'd by contrary motives to obedience and good living) and because some of them have much of malignity in them, which may well enhance not lessen the guilt. Of this sort I chiefly instance in negligence, such as it may be supine and wretchless, which in a creature and servant contains all degrees of enhancing any sin: 'tis wilfull, for he might be more carefull: 'tis obstinate, for he is oft warn'd of it by the noxious effects (which he cannot but discern) of it, and the Master's continual precepts to the contrary: 'tis presumptuous, still imagining he shall find mercy, when God assures him he shall not in this way, and upon that groundless confidence still presuming to offend: 'tis most ungratefull, scorning and contemning to make any use of the greatest treasures of grace, all ready for him that would use tolerable diligence: 'tis an act of horrible pride, in despising God himself, his precepts, threats, promises; of infidelity both active and passive, not believing God, not being faithfull to his ſervice; And it ſelf being nothing in effect but height of Idleneſs, and that doing or admitting much more ill, omitting much more good (merely to gratifie that one ſwiniſh vile pleaſure of ſloth) than any covetous voluptuous man doth for his greateſt treaſures, or taſtfulleſt ſenſualities, it hath as it were all the aggravations of all other ſins collected into one ſink or kennel. In this place the deſcription aſſign'd the worſt of men, [viz. men of flagitious and contumacious lives] may perhaps deſerve ſome animadverſion. For if this be the one meaſure, to which eternal puniſhments are thought commenſurable, 'tis poſſible there may be great and dangerous miſtake in it.

For 1. There are many principles of godleſs living all meeting in the effect, caſting off the yoke of God's obedience, and ſo equally deſerving to fall under the ſeverity of thoſe Laws by which the world was created and manag'd. Θυμὸς and ἐπιθυμία are the two comprehenſive names of them, but there are ſeveral under each. Under the firſt pride and rage and revenge, &c. under the ſecond voluptuouſneſs of all ſorts, Covetouſneſs, deſire of praiſe, &c. And every of theſe have a foundation in our corrupt nature, and temptations from without alſo. And as one ſoil is more unhappily qualified for the one; ſo another is for another. And if all the reſtraints, commands, preventions, excitations, invitations, engagements, mercies, puniſhments of God; all his methods of armature and fortifying each man againſt theſe domeſtick enemies and traitours of his, may not be permitted to have any force toward his reſcue out of this ſlavery to any of theſe ſins, there is little reaſon of excuſe that will hold the pleading for any of theſe. The contumacy is in effect the ſame in each; in him that asks God forgiveneſs for his intemperance every day, and every night wallows in it; as to him that goes on ſullenly and demurely, and hath no regret to it. The aggravations are ſeveral; but the difference of the degrees of malignity hardly diſcernible: Or if the diſadvantage be on the ſide of the ſtout flagitious offender, this is no more than is neceſſary to be ſuppos'd to the defining ſeveral degrees of torments in Hell, that the mighty ſinners might be mightily puniſhed; it doth not at all concern the juſtice of that ſentence, that decrees every unreform'd impenitent to thoſe flames. For repentance, as it ſignifies ſome degree of ſincere renovation, being the minimum quod ſic, without which all ſhall periſh even under the Goſpel, (that utmoſt diſpenſation of ſtrict Law that God will permit any to hope for, that doth not give the lie to his meſſage in the mouth of his Son) they that come ſhort of this have no more to plead from any other circumſtance imaginable, becauſe that God which gave ſpace for repentance, hath alſo provided ſuch counterbalances either of aids or pardons to ſuch circumſtances, as ſhall utterly fruſtrate and prevent all plea that can from thence be drawn either againſt his juſtice or his mercy. 2. It muſt be remembred that there be other ſtates, to which thoſe titles of flagitious and contumacious lives are not competible, which yet have no leſs of malignity in them by that conſideration; ſuch are that of the intricate diſguis'd painted hypocrite, that hath God always in his mouth, and his glory the deſign of his fouleſt actions, and yet his damnation as juſt as any man's: that of the wicked Chriſtian, carnal Goſpeller, that under the vow of baptiſm, i. e. Chriſt's banner, equals the ſins of Jew, Turk, or Heathen Worſhipper: that of recidivation into forſaken ſins, Apoſtaſie, Temporary adherence to Chriſt, (but in time of temptation preſently they are offended, the δειλοὶ or cowardly Gnoſticks, that Chriſt in the Revelation ranks with ἄπιστοι, unbelievers) each of theſe upon other as juſt accounts, as thoſe under which the flagitious and contumacious is acknowledged to fall, and periſh, may as reaſonably be reſolv'd to have their portion: the richeſt talents being rather more than leſs accountable for, than the meaneſt; and the utter darkneſs, where there is weeping and gnaſhing of teeth, peculiarly aſſign'd to the unprofitable ſervant, that being apt to object ſeverity and auſterity againſt God, did not yet endeavour by improving his Talent to approve himſelf unto him. By the way, that parable forewarns us how poſſible it is for a man negligently to loſe all his opportunities of graces and advantages toward heaven, and engulf himſelf in endleſs woe, whilſt his heart is ſecretly objecting againſt the reconcileableneſs of God's judgments with thoſe Attributes which he thinks fit to be vindicated in all his inflictions. In this Section (after the middle of the fourth page) it is reſolv'd, that the opinion of eternal torments, properly ſo call'd, is not to be accepted upon leſs terms than of plain demonſtration from Scripture: But what that ſignifies, I cannot gueſs; God's affirmation when once reveal'd, as there is no juſt cauſe to doubt the teſtimony to be divine, will bear down all difficulties, which any improbability of the matter will ſuggeſt to us. Reaſon it ſelf thus judgeth, that God is to be believed rather than any humane reaſoning. If therefore Chriſt (who ſufficiently teſtify'd himſelf to come from God, and to have the ſignature of his Authority on all his affirmations) did teach eternity of torments properly ſo call'd, and expreſs that doctrine in ſuch plain words, as all that heard him and his Commiſſioners preach, were firmly reſolv'd to ſignifie the real everlaſtingneſs of thoſe torments, then I ſuppoſe here is as plain demonſtration, as the weightineſs of the matter or the Objectour's exceptions can exact. And that thus it is, it may not be amiſs briefly to ſhew in this place. Beſides thoſe teſtimonies which are by the Objectour produc'd (and as they are enervated by him, have and ſhall be vindicated and clear'd to have force in them, and ſo are not to be mention'd here) I inſiſt on theſe three. 1. The parable of Dives and Lazarus, which being yielded to be but a parable, hath yet from Chriſt's uſing it theſe grounds of aſſuring our faith, that there is as certainly after this life a ſtate of torments as of bliſs, and thoſe torments executed by ſcorching, but not devouring and conſuming, much leſs annihilating flames. He that is in them hath nothing to beg but a preſent cooling of his tongue, and that may not be had, becauſe Dives hath had all his portion of good things in this life, and ſo muſt have no more ſuch, though it be but the leaſt allay of his pains for one minute, which ſure excludes annihilation, which is the perfect ſuperſeding of them. Again, there is a gulf fixed, which interſcinds all intercourſe between Heaven and Hell, whereby any aid or relief ſhould come to them. Theſe circumſtances put together muſt conclude, that the fire being not ſuch as of it ſelf conſum'd thoſe that were tormented in it, and Abraham, that was now a Comprehenſor, knowing that there was now no place left for the leaſt degree of releaſe to the ſufferer, and no relief being to be hop'd for from Heaven, from whence onely it was poſſible to come, the fire and ſo the continuance in the torments muſt be eternal. I foreſee but one objection to this, viz. that this was before the day of Judgment, and then, this non obſtante, the fire after the day of Doom may annihilate. To this I anſwer, that the Parable is not bound to refer to the time wherein it was delivered. Other Parables of the King and the Bridegroom referr'd to after times, and this here by the ſeeing Dives bodily in Hell, and the ſcorching of the tongue and the mention of dipping the finger, &c. muſt refer to the ſtate of conjunction of ſouls and bodies in Heaven and Hell, and that muſt be after the Reſurrection; and ſo that ſuperſedes that one objection, and I foreſee no other.

Secondly, I mention Chriſt's words of Judas, that it were better for him never to have been born, and of him that ſhould offend a tender diſciple, and avert him from Chriſt, that it were better a milſtone were hanged about his neck, and he caſt into the midſt of the ſea. Here I ſhall ſuppoſe annihilation as fully expreſs'd by theſe two phraſes, as by any it could be, and yet that ſomewhat worſe than that expects wicked men, which muſt needs be founded in eternal miſerable being: for eternal Being, if not miſerable, is much better; and miſerable Being, if not eternal, but immediately determin'd by a ſwift deſtruction, as Chriſt ſuppoſeth, is not certainly and unqueſtionably worſe than never having had a Being.

Thirdly, I reſume again (though I now perceive they are after mentioned) the expreſs words of Chriſt, Revel. 20. 10. that the Beaſt and the falſe Prophets, i. e. ſome wicked men βασανισθήσονται ſhall be tormented in a lake of fire and brimſtone day and night for ever and ever. Nothing could have been more expreſs: And to theſe I add, that there is no one ſeeming diſſent of contrary teſtimony producible from the whole Scripture, but innumerable that bear full conſent with theſe, which conſequently have eſtabliſht the faith of this Article, that it was by the Apoſtles of Chriſt entred into that depoſitum which they left in every Church where they preached, as appears by the laſt words of the Apoſtles Creed, the life everlaſting; which as it is expreſly contrary to annihilation, which is exciſion and determination of life in reſpect of duration or laſting, ſo being ſubjoyn'd to the reſurrection of the body, muſt be indefinitely coextended to that, and ſo belong to all bodies that are raiſed. And that it is thus comprehenſive, appears more manifeſtly by the Athanaſian Creed, which to the riſing and coming again of all men with their bodies, and giving an account for their own works, which is parallel to the Reſurrection of the body, ſubjoyns as the Explication of Everlaſting life this expreſs Dogma, And they that have done good ſhall go into life everlaſting, and they that have done evil into everlaſting fire. And this was no doubt the concordant ſenſe of the Churches, that had this depoſitum of Chriſtian faith, both from the Scriptures and the preaching of the Apoſtles, and their Succeſſours, committed to them. And ſo there remains no cauſe of doubt of the validity or plainneſs of demonſtration, as far as any matter of doctrine is capable of it from the teſtimony of Chriſt and of God. What follows of the incredibility of this doctrine, making ſome men deſperately doubt of the truth of the whole body of Religion, can have no force againſt the truth of it. All Chriſt's duri ſermones had that effect of his teaching them, they were offended at him; and the meaning of that is, They forſook the whole Religion.

Having gone thus far in particular Reply to all that have been propoſed in favour of the Affirmative of the queſtion, I need not accommodate any Anſwer to the remaining (fifth) page of the firſt part. The three Poſtulata's, if all granted, (as they may in ſome limited ſenſe) will gain him nothing. Not the firſt, for the letter of Scripture favours not him, as hath been ſhew'd; death and deſtruction no way ſignifie or conclude annihilation. Not the ſecond, for there is no one Text clear in phraſe and ſignification yet produced for the affirmative, nor any that by any age or orthodox Father hath been ſo interpreted. Not the third, becauſe in our doctrine, ſet upon its due baſis, there is nothing ſo much as of a ſeeming diſagreeableneſs to piety, or the nature or Attributes of God, as hath been ſhew'd alſo. Then for the ſcandal of thoſe diſputes about Predeſtination, &c. which is thought to be allay'd by the opinion of Annihilation, I anſwer, that they which deny all reſpective decrees of Reprobation or Preterition againſt Supralapſarians and Sublapſarians, that affirm univerſality of Redemption, and of the gift of ſufficient grace (all which are maintained by Biſhop Overal, to whom the diſputer profeſſeth to incline, and are known to have been maintained by concordant votes of all the Fathers of the Greek and Latin Church before Saint Auguſtine, and ſince him by a conſiderable part of the Church through all Ages, and the contrary never univerſally received as a Doctrine, and ſo remains to have been but a diſputable queſtion at the moſt) cannot be imagined to be under any part of this ſcandal, or conſequently to receive benefit by the Allay that is ſpoken of. And if the Doctrine of Reprobation, &c. have need of this Antidote, to avert the ill and dangerous conſequences of it, and to reconcile their dictates with piety and reverence to God Almighty, then it is more than time that the favourers of that Doctrine ſhould rather change their poiſons for wholſome diet, than like the Mountebank on the Stage preſume to ſwallow the poiſon in confidence of this onely Antidote, which I have not yet heard that he believes to have any force in it. In a word, let us all renounce the irreſpective decree of Reprobation, as I profeſs to doe, and there is no more pretence for the denying of eternal torments of the Reprobates upon that account. As for the puniſhment of perſonal ſins, and their circumſtantial abatements, that hath been accounted for already.

The Second Part.

IN the Second Part the view of the places producible for Eternal Pains, begins with a prejudice, viz. that it is no where plainly and directly denied that the Reprobates ſhall be deſtroy'd. But that negative Argument as it is ſimply invalid, ſo it is moſt unſeaſonably prefixt to the ſetting down of Teſtimonies for the perpetuity of their Torments: For if one ſuch Text be produc'd that ſhall really conclude their torments perpetual, (as certainly do the words of Chriſt, Revel. 20. 10. of their being tormented Day and Night for ever and ever) it is then moſt certainly conſequent that the Reprobate ſhall not be deſtroy'd immediately after the day of judgment: and what is that but the plain and direct denial of it? And to add that it is no where ſaid that they ſhall live for ever, but that incorruption ſeems to be the privilege of the Elect, is ſure but another branch of the ſame paralogiſm; for they that are tormented for ever, have ſenſe and life for ever, but that being a life of miſery eternal, hath no ſemblance of the privilege of the Elect, whoſe Crown it is to live and reign, not to live and be puniſht for ever. And ſo this yields not the leaſt mite of advantage to the former opinion. Now for the phraſes πῦρ αἰώνιον, Matt. 18. 8. & 25. 41, 48. Κόλασις αἰώνιος, Matth. 25. 46. Ἁμαρτήματος κρίσις, Mark 3. 29. τὸ πῦρ τὸ ἄσβεστον, Mark 9. 43, 44. and ὅπου ὁ σκώληξ αὐτῶν ὁ τελευτᾷ, καὶ τὸ πῦρ οὐ σβέννυται, ver. 45, 46, 48. ὁ ζόφος τοῦ σκότους εἰς αἰῶνα, 2 Pet. 2. 17. Jud. 13. ὁ κρίνος τοῦ βαπτισμοῦ αὐτῶν εἰς αἰῶνα, Revel. 14. 11. and the lake of fire and brimſtone, where the beaſt and the prophet ſhall be tormented day and night for ever and ever, Rev. 20. 10. All theſe are endeavour'd to be evacuated firſt by a general Anſwer; then by particulars accommodated to each particular phraſe. The general is, that phraſes [αἰώνιος, εἰς αἰῶνα & εἰς τοὺς αἰῶνας τῶν αἰώνων] do not always ſignifie an abſolute eternity, but either a long time, or an irreparable ſtate of things, or during unto the ceſſation of the ſubject. And without diſputing the truth of this anſwer, it will be ſufficient to my turn, if either ſome of theſe phraſes do ſometimes ſignifie an abſolute eternity; for then I ſhall have no reaſon to except againſt the Interpretation of the univerſal Church of God for ſo many Centuries, which thus underſtand all, unqueſtionably moſt, of theſe places, or if they here denote an irreparable ſtate of thoſe things that are ſpoken of; for then the wicked being caſt into fire, are in that ſtate irreparably, Matth. 18. 8. 25. 41. being in eternal puniſhment, Matth. 25. 41. are irreparably there, and ſo in the reſt; which notion of eternal would never mind any man of the annihilation of thoſe that are enter'd on ſuch eternal flames or puniſhments. As for the teſtimonies from Deut. 15. 17. Pſal. 37. 29. and 14. 6. they are all neceſſarily interpreted by the matter of them to refer to certain finite periods, either of the man's life, and capacity, either of ſerving, or enjoying the earthly Canaan in the two former places, or to the end of this World, as the laſt of them, but no way prejudices the proper uſe of the words for abſolute eternity, when the matter ſo requires, as I ſuppoſe it doth, whenſoever it ſpeaketh of a duration which is to commence at the end of this life or world of ours, as when eternal life is mentioned, the diſputer will acknowledge; and yet with no more reaſon than I can render for interpreting eternal puniſhment to this ſenſe. But becauſe the Objectour depends not on this his general Anſwer, let us deſcend to the particulars: And firſt that of everlaſting fire, Matth. 18. 8. and 25. 41. 48. Jud. 7. Here Jud. 7. is added over and above thoſe which were even now produced for this phraſe, and on purpoſe, it ſeems, as a decoy to draw all the reſt into the net. For herein is the anſwer founded, that the laſt of thoſe, Jud. 7. is by moſt Divines not underſtood to ſpeak of the fire of Hell, but of that fire whereby their Cities were deſtroy'd, which was onely a deigma of Hell-fire, and ſo αἰώνιον πῦρ ſhall not ſignifie eternal burning, but utter deſtruction, to which is added the conſideration of a queſtion, which may be made from Matth. 8. 29. whether the Devils themſelves, for whom eternal fire was prepar'd, be yet caſt into it, who are ſaid, Jude 6. and 2 Pet. 2. 4. to be but priſoners, and ſo not yet under the execution of their doom.

To all this I anſwer, Firſt, that if the ſuggeſtion be true, that ſuch is the judgment of moſt Divines (which I acknowledge to have been mine own formerly, but have changed it ſince) concerning that place, Jude 7. and their authority deem'd by him that urgeth it worth the heeding, then is the more united conſent of all Catholick interpreters, none excepted, for the notion of the ſame phraſe in all other places, of far greater authority for the admitting the eternity of that fire which is aſſerted in them: and if by thoſe other places the Article be eſtabliſh'd, I ſhall not need contend for (nor ſhould ever have produc'd) that one place of Jude, becauſe ſome Interpreters, and even mine own former doubting of that one, can be no prejudice to their conſent with me for the many other, any one of which if it truly conclude the eternity of Hell fire, is as good as a thouſand. But then, Secondly, as I do not conſent this to have been the judgment of moſt Divines, which is ſaid to be; ſo I now upon better conſideration of the Context, ſee no reaſon that could induce me or any to make that, ſo as to reject the more literal interpretation. That Sodom and Gomorrah, and the Cities about them ſignifie the inhabitants of thoſe Cities, is apparent there by their being affirm'd to have given themſelves over to fornication, which ſure not the walls but the inhabitants did: and then ſure thoſe that ſuffer'd the vengeance of eternal fire, and therein are ſet forth for an example or eſſay, what we Chriſtians following the like ſins are to expect, are not the Walls, but the Inhabitants alſo. By the way, it is not the pretertenſe or ſenſe, or in the aoriſt, (as when of the Angels ver. 6. it is ſaid, they kept not but left, and of theſe ἐκπορνεύσασαι having given themſelves over to fornication) but in the preſent ὑπέχουσαι ſuffering, either as not at all looking back in this part of the period to their deſtruction on earth by fire and brimſtone, or elſe as to a laſting judgment then begun, but ſtill continuing upon them without any releaſe; they ſtill ſuffer that vengeance of fire which withall is αἰωνίου alſo, never likely to have an end. So no good firm ground is there in this Interpretation, which I remember I had long ſince out of Socinus, but is not, that I know of, the reſolution of moſt Divines. As for the queſtion whether the Devils are yet caſt into eternal Hell, there will be no need of diſcuſſing it here, becauſe if for God's wiſe and juſt ends they are not ſo confin'd thither, as after the judgment, when there is no farther place for thoſe ends, they ſhall be; yet ſtill the ſouls of the men of Sodom may now ſuffer in that fire, and the Devils that are tied to their dark priſon (which appears not to be any other place but that Hell, where the ſpirits of wicked men are) be ready at hand to torment them. Having clear'd this place, it follows, that as yet no leaſt probability is produc'd how αἰώνιον πῦρ in other places ſhould ſignifie any thing elſe but eternal torments of them that are caſt into it, and the Section that follows at the top of p. 8. hath nothing in it that exacts return, for if the fire of Hell be αἰώνιον, then it burns everlaſtingly, and if they that are in it ſuffer the judgment of eternal fire, then they muſt be eternal alſo, and that is here affirm'd and Rev. 20. 10. As for the four conſiderations that next follow to evacuate the belief of eternal torments being ſignifi'd by eternal Fire, 'tis certain they have no ſhew of force in them ſeverally; and then jointly they will have as little. For, 1. If the word Fire (in that phraſe αἰώνιον πῦρ) be a Metaphor, as indeed it is not deem'd to be the ſame with our culinary fire, and it differs from it in that it enlightens not, but leaves the place dark where 'tis, yet ſtill it may be really fire to all other the punitive effects, and no doubt it is ſo in reſpect of burning and ſcorching and tormenting, or elſe the Scripture would not ſo oft affirm it of it. 2. If the word αἰώνιος do not primarily or perpetually ſignifie everlaſting, yet tis not once found in the New Teſtament to ſignifie otherwiſe: the place Jude 7. is the onely place pretended, and that hath been competently vindicated. 3. Though fire be a deſtructive thing, yet it is not able to annihilate by any its natural force, and beſides it is a cruciating thing, and thus was it in the valley of Hinnom, from which the Fire of Hell takes its denomination, and thus the beaſt and the falſe prophet are ſaid to be tormented day and night for ever and ever in it, and then ſure 'tis neither Expreſſion nor Inſtrument of annihilating deſtruction. 4. If everlaſting fire be oppos'd to life, Matth. 18. 8. yet this engages it not, no nor inclines it to ſignifie utter deſtruction but the moſt unhappy cruciating ſtate which is more contrary to happy life than abſolute annihilation would be, as hath formerly been ſhew'd; And therefore though everlaſting Fire ſhould be granted to ſignifie everlaſting deſtruction, (as with any propriety it cannot, Fire being the Inſtrument of deſtruction, not deſtruction it ſelf) yet in that caſe everlaſting deſtruction would reaſonably ſignifie as ὄλεθρος αἰώνιος eternal perdition doth, 2 Theſ. 1. 9. and of that we have already given account, that it ſignifies notorious judgments here concluding in the flames of Hell, and that it no way ſignifies or infers annihilation, but the contrary to the joys of a bliſsfull life, i. e. the pains of Hell.

For the rendring this phraſe more applicable to the deſir'd notion, 'tis thought fit to compare it with another like phraſe πῦρ ἄσβεστον, Mark 9. 43, 44, 45. as that is rendred, that ſhall not nor never ſhall be quenched; of which 'tis ſuggeſted, that it neceſſarily ſignifies no more, than that that Fire ſhall not go out, till the matter or fewel of it be conſumed or deſtroyed, and thus 'tis uſed, Iſay. 66. 24. and that this appears to be the importance of our Saviour's meaning, from other places, Matth. 3. 12. Luke 3. 17. where 'tis applied to the chaff and Tares which admit no everlaſting duration in the Fire, but are very capable of utter deſtruction. To all this I anſwer. 1. That there is no ſuch affinity between ἄσβεστον & αἰώνιον, that one ſhould regulate the notion of the other; when they are applied to divers matters, one to the burning of chaff, tother to the puniſhing of wicked men. Or if there be, it may as reaſonably hold, that ἄσβεστον ſhould be interpreted by αἰώνιον; and in order to that, the chaff and tares interpreted of wicked men, which are known to be figuratively expreſſed by them, as that αἰώνιον ſhould be regulated by ἄσβεστον, and ſo wicked men thought in the ſame manner to be conſumed by the fire, as the chaff and tares are. 2. That for πῦρ ἄσβεστον if it be granted that it neceſſarily ſignifies no more than that the Fire ſhall not go out, till the fewel of it be deſtroyed, yet 1. it as fairly follows, then it may (when the context requires) very conveniently ſignifie more; and that 2. There will be no ground of doubt, whether when 'tis applied to thoſe who are affirm'd to be tormented in a Lake of Fire day and night for ever and ever, i. e. to wicked men, it ſhall not ſignifie this more, viz. eternal burning. 3. For the place of Iſaiah, I ſhall appeal to ancient interpreters; not onely whether it may, but whether it do not, ſignifie eternal fire, or that which is not extinguiſhed for ever. Procopius, I ſuppoſe, hath on this prophecy as great a reputation among learned men as any, I ſhall give you his ſenſe, that the Prophet in the concluſion of the Prophecy ſpeaks of the Saints of God διαβαίνοντας ὅτι τὴν ἐξαίρετον οὐρανόπολιν, τὴν τοῦ θεοῦ βασιλείᾳ ἀφορισθεῖσαν μόνην, &c. ſhall paſs into the moſt eminent heavenly City, the manſion ſet apart for the kingdom of God, where they ſhall be for ever ſerving God, placed under the great high Prieſt, and they ſhall all ſee the deſtruction of the wicked, and think what good things they have loſt by deſpiſing God. Is 1. Whom they ſhall behold, μακρὰν ἑαυτῶν ὄντας placed far off from them, σκώληκα δὲ φησιν ἀτελεύτητον τὸν ἐν τῇ μετανοεῖν τῶν ἰδίων ἁμαρτημάτων συνειδήσιν, ἐν τῷ τυφθῆναι ἀγαθῶν ἐστερῆσθαι διαπαντὸς ἀεὶ τὸν ψυχὴν, καὶ κατηρεφῆ ἑαυτῶν ὄντα τῇ ἐδαπάσῃ κακίᾳ, πῦρ δὲ ἄσβεστον τὸ ῥηθὲν ὑπὸ τοῦ σωτῆρος αἰώνιον, ὑπομασθόρον τοῦ διαβόλου. You ſee his ſenſe of the words, which undoubtedly they will bear, as the deſcription of the final reward of the pious believing Jews and Heathens on one ſide, and of the impious obdurate on the other. And if, as he tells us, ſome will have it underſtood as a prediction of the Jews deſtruction by the Romans, which were διαπαὶ ἐν τῇ σαρκὶ, καὶ μόνον ἀλλὰ δίκην ἀτελεύτητον πάσχοντι, yet ſtill this interpretation is founded in the ſuppoſition, that the worm that dieth not, and the fire that is not quenched, ſignified an undying puniſhment, and as ſuch is us'd to ſignifie in prophetick ſtyle that which is next degree to abſolute eternal; purſuing the Jews whereſoever they are to be met with, without any the leaſt mitigation, or mercy. 4. For the uſe of the ſame words, Matth. 3. and Luke 3. of the chaff and tares, 'tis ſufficient to ſay, that, thoſe parabolical expreſſions being undoubtedly ſet to denote the wicked, the word ἄσβεστον, which properly ſignifies that which never is or ſhall be quenched, being applied to the tares in the parable, but to the wicked in the application of the parable, muſt be allotted ſuch a notion in either, as the matter requires; and ſo though ſpoken of Tares, it be not taken in its full amplitude of ſignification, but in that inferiour degree which is competible to the burning of Tares or chaff to aſhes, yet being applied to the wicked, the thing ſignified by thoſe tares, it may ſtill abide in its full amplitude, and ſignifie the tormenting and not conſuming, and ſo the everlaſtingneſs of that Fire. And indeed if it be argumentative in the diſputer, the chaff admits no everlaſting duration in the Fire, from which it may be deem'd concluſible that πῦρ ἄσβεστον applied to that, is not unquenchable fire, then it will be as well worth obſerving that wicked men are capable of everlasting duration in Fire, and therefore πῦρ ἄσβεστον applied to them (as it is, Mark 9. 43, 44, 45.) signifies everlasting Fire.

Next for αἰώνιος κόλασις, that that may be reconciled with the Objectour's notion. He notes first, The opposition of it to everlasting life, Matth. 25. 45. which may incline it to signifie everlasting death. 2. That αἰώνιος doth not by absolute necessity signifie everlasting. 3. That κόλασις doth not necessarily signifie tormenting punishment but may be understood of a privative punishment, and then death being a punishment, everlasting death may be truly call'd everlasting punishment. To these I answer, to the first, that the opposition to everlasting avails nothing, everlasting life being undoubtedly everlasting bliss, and then everlasting misery is most directly opposite to that. To the Second, That αἰώνιος spoken of that which begins after the day of judgment must denote such a duration as is proportionable to the αἰών following that, as αἰώνιος spoken in relation to any other age, whether to the year of Jubilee, or the age of the Jewish state, or the age of this world simply or the Christian age, must be commensurate to that age to which it refers, and therefore αἰώνιος κόλασις there, being consequent to the judgment of the great day described in that Chapter, must in all reason be of the same duration as αἰώνιος ζωὴ in the same place. To the third that κόλασις generally signifies positive punishment, not mulct, as ζημία and perhaps τιμωρία doth; however the reason cannot hold, that if death be a punishment then eternal death may be truly call'd everlasting punishment, because though death should infer annihilation wherein there is nothing, ergò no punishment, yet Death it self is something, and is joyned with real pains as well as privations: but of those or any other reality the state of annihilation is not capable; and then to say everlasting punishment, though that were supposed to signifie no more than everlasting pœna damni, yet must it be founded in everlasting being, for no man can be punished everlastingly by deprivation of bliss that hath not a being at all, to be thus capable of devesting or deprivation: for non entis nulla est affectio, But to this it is replied, that the Text saith not the wicked shall be everlastingly punished, but they shall go into a punishment, and that punishment shall be everlasting; and such is everlasting death. To this I answer; that there is no ground of this distinction in the Text, which saith together, they shall depart into everlasting punishment, which is certainly the very form that would be used, if the κόλασις were designed to be never so positively punitive, if it were into the furnace of fire, where there is weeping and gnashing of teeth, Secondly, 'tis replied, that a man may suffer or be punished by that which he doth not actually feel, and many attempts are made for the proof of this. But it is sufficient in a word to say, that none of the proofs come home to the state of annihilation, whereof onely our question is. A mad man or fool may suffer though they discern it not; a dead man, who is not annihilated but lives in his better part, may suffer in his memory, children, friends here, much more while he lives may he without folly desire to avert such sufferings; but he that is not, is not capable of any of these: and if I were sure, that to morrow I should be nothing, no real consideration of my self (but either present care of others good, or perhaps irrational fancy) would incite me to make any provision for after that morrow. So again privation of possible felicity is to any one that hath being a real punishment, because he is a loser, though not sensible of what he hath lost; but to him that is not, 'tis an absolute nullity, and were a man sure to be annihilate, the fear of this were unreasonable, for that time when he should be nothing, and the onely thing that renders it reasonable now is because he hath a being, and hopes to continue it, or (whatsoever he is seduced to believe to the contrary) yet still he desires it, and as long as he hath life, may well desire, and cannot chuse but wish all the accomplishments and even images of it: and at once fear the loss of life, and all felicities which either do or may accompany life. But still this man's being subject to this fear, because capable of the causes of it, is no proof of his being punished, who is supposed not to be he that hath a being, and desires the continuance of it, suffers when he loseth it; but he that hath no being, is not to be esteemed by these measures, any more than he that hath never yet been, is this day punished by not being created, or conceived till to morrow. Nor to this is it any way consequent, as is objected, that the desire of everlasting life should not be a reasonable desire. For though it be reasonable to fear the privation of a reasonable desire, yet this fear is onely incident to him that hath a being, and he that hath no being cannot have desire, how reasonable soever it is for him, that hath a being, to have it.

The Sadducees had a being when they desired praise, and though they believed no immortality of Souls, yet they believed durability of memory, and memory was a kind of image of life, and they that despaired of the body might take some content in the shadow; but even that a mere shadow and fancy too, which also would be at an end, whensoever their being were supposed to be so. So again the same Sadducee whilst he lived might fear death, because he enjoyed somewhat which he was unwilling to lose, and because death it self though it were thought to enter him on a state of nothingness, yet was it self something, both respectu sensus & damni. And beside the Sadducee could hardly be Sadducee enough in the point, so as not to have some fear of the contrary: however he still had a being, and was to be unwilling to lose it. But that having no being should be real punishment to him that is not, is above my comprehension. As to what is said in the Objectour's person p. 10. at the beginning, that if he believed annihilation, he would yet as much fear the punishment, as he desires everlasting life, I shall grant it on this presumption; that he now believes he shall enjoy everlasting life: but then he that thus desires and fears, is supposed to exist, and to him 'tis granted that deprivations are penal; and again, though he would fear that, yet sure he would never fear κόλασιν αἰώνιον in the notion of eternal sensible punishments and scorchings of fire. I know not whether all that I have said of the nature of the privative punishments be maturely said or no, as non entis non est affectio, so I have always found it hard to satisfie my self concerning any thing of that which is not. Onely I rest my self in this, that my mistake, if it be such, is sure of so nice a making, that I cannot my self discern it, and therefore it is not to be imagined that the truth of Christ's speech should hang on so weak a string as it must, if by κόλασις αἰώνιος Christ meant no more than eternal deprivation of being. For if that which is not, cannot be eternally punished, how can the wicked be said to depart to eternal punishment when they are annihilated?

For everlasting judgment I acknowledge it signifies no more than the former imported; and so is to be concluded by the discourse on that. 'Tis the adjudging to a state which shall last to all eternity, or a sentence, wherein the eternity of him that is judged, is concerned.

Next

Next for their worm never dying, I have three things to add, Firſt, that the worm in dead bodies devoureth very ſlowly and leaſurely, and ſo is as fit as any thing could have been to expreſs lingring torments. Secondly, that the worm devoureth not the whole body, the bones and firmer parts are not liable to her malice; and ſo 'tis moſt unfit to expreſs utter annihilation of the whole. Thirdly, that the worm being peculiar to dead and putrified bodies, is a moſt lively repreſentation of gnawing and miſeries after death; and then when inſtead of mortal worms, which are the onely inſtruments of gnawing on dead bodies, there is ſomewhat elſe threatned by Chriſt, which is fit to be expreſſed by the ſtyle of an immortal worm, nothing could have been more adequate for the expreſſing the eternity of torments in hell; thoſe eſpecially of a gnawing tormenting conſcience, which, if it be but the conjecture of Divines, is, as appears, a very probable conjecture. Of the meaning of the place in the Prophet, Iſa. 66. 24. I have formerly ſpoken, and acknowledged it the fountain from which our Saviour, Mark 9. derived it, but have ſhewed how little is gain'd from thence toward proving it a preſent, becauſe a viſible, deſtruction. Abraham is ſuppoſed to behold Dives in hell, but that proves not that Dives his puniſhments were preſent of this World. Procopius hath ſhewed, how the pious in heaven might behold the puniſhments of the wicked in another World, and in what ſenſe to be ſaid to come forth to worſhip before the Lord, and go forth, and look, &c. And indeed if it be unqueſtionable, that in Chriſt's ſpeech the future miſeries of the wicked are thus expreſs'd (as the diſputer himſelf yields) there can be no difficulty to underſtand the words ſo in Iſaiah alſo. If therefore the place in Iſaiah, ſo referred to the future torments of the wicked after the day of judgment; if the expreſſion of future puniſhment by fire and worms, proportionable to the ſeveral cuſtomes of diſpoſing dead bodies by interring and burning, was frequent among the Jews (as the diſputer grants to the force of the other Texts which Grotius quotes) if the addition of the never quench'd fire take away all ambiguities imaginable in the worm, and incline it more ſtrongly to thoſe puniſhments which are elſewhere expreſs'd by eternal fire; and if they, to whom Chriſt ſpake, the Jews which generally agreed to the Phariſees opinion of the eternity of another life, ſo underſtood the phraſe, and Chriſt ſpeaking agreeable to their opinion and interpretations of Iſaiah, gave no leaſt cauſe of conjecture or imagination, that he meant the words in any other ſenſe, than it was ſure they would underſtand him; what cauſe of doubting can remain in this matter? None certainly from the ſubſequent words, ver. 49. for adhering to that interpretation of πυρὶ ἀλισθήσεται for conſumption of the ſacrifice, as in the Holocauſts, to which the wicked are fitly compared, there follows no more, than that the whole of the wicked, bodies and ſouls ſhall like the Holocauſts be caſt into the Fire, and burnt, or deſtroyed there; but in what ſenſe of deſtruction, whether in that of annihilation, (which is not competible to the holocauſts, and wherein 'tis never found to be taken in the Sacred dialect when the Heavens are ſaid to vaniſh or melt, as Salt, Iſa. 51. 6. this is not for the Heavens to be annihilated, and the מלח׳ם uſed for veſtimenta detrita ſeu evanida, Jer. 38. 11. were not annihilated) or in the other, having loſt all the advantageous parts and effects of life, and being engaged in a moſt ſad eſtate far worſe than not being, is not ſo much as intimated in the phraſe, any farther than by the conjunction thereof with the Eternal never dying Worms and Fire, it is reaſonably to be interpreted; and that is quite contrary to the diſputer's intereſts.

Next then for ὁ ζόφος τοῦ σκότους εἰς αἰῶνα, Jud. 13. 2 Pet. 2. 17. there is no pretence that it ſhould in theſe places be meant for death any more than ζόφος is, 2 Pet. 4. It ſignifies the ſad uncomfortableneſs of that ſtate, which, being in reſpect of the torments expreſs'd by Fire in other places, hath not yet the one comfort of ordinary Fire belonging to it, viz. lightſomeneſs, but contrariwiſe ζόφος τοῦ σκότους, as durable as the flames. The Texts produced, Job 10. 21, 22. 1 Sam. 2. 9. Eccl. 11. 8. Pſal. 88. 7, 11, 12. Job 17. 13. Eccl. 6. 14. are pertinent to prove what they deſigned, that darkneſs denotes the ſtate after this life: but that no way prejudices the uſe of it for a poſitive ſtate and not that of annihilation: for that 'tis not uſed in any of thoſe places. Yet that it ſhall not here be taken in that ſenſe which in thoſe places belongs to it, there are theſe reaſons, 1. Becauſe the New Teſtament moſt explicitely affirming a reſurrection from that Old Teſtament's darkneſs, doth yet threaten this ζόφος τοῦ σκότους εἰς αἰῶνα, which therefore muſt commence after the reſurrection, and ſo cannot be that death from whence men riſe in the reſurrection, of which thoſe Old Teſtament places were underſtood. Secondly, becauſe in the ſame Chapter, 2 Pet. 2. 4. 'tis ſaid of Angels σειραῖς ζόφου ταρταρώσας, where ζόφος being applied to Angels, it cannot ſignifie that death, as if 'twere applied to living men, it might. 2. Being joyn'd with chains, it thereby ſeems to ſignifie ſome poſitive ſtate; but eſpecially, 3. Being joyn'd with ταρταρώσας it muſt denote that ſtate, which all ſorts of men, Heathens, as well as Jews and Chriſtians, underſtood by Tartarus, that ſure is a place of ſuffering after death. Thirdly, Becauſe though there be no farther mention than of the privative part of Hell, in the ζόφος τοῦ σκότους, yet in the other places of the New Teſtament, where the ſame is mentioned under the name of ἐξώτερον σκότος, the utter or utmoſt darkneſs, the fartheſt receſſion from lightſome or bliſsfull life imaginable, there is joyned with it weeping and gnaſhing of Teeth, Matth. 8. 12. and 22. 13. and 25. 30. which ſufficiently differenceth it from the notion for death.

As for the places in the Revelation, it is granted to be reaſonable to interpret them according to prophetick ſtyle, and not exact them to ſtrict literal interpretation; accordingly as Jer. 7. 20. and Iſa. 34. 4, 10. ſignifie utter final vaſtations, (as appears by their ſmoke going up for ever and ever, lying waſte and none paſſing through it, from generation to generation, for ever and ever, and the not quenching of God's wrath, but burning upon man and upon beaſt) ſo where the like circumſtances either inforce, or but incline, the interpretation of paſſages in the Revelation, I ſhall make no ſcruple to yield, as Revel. 18. 18. ſpeaking there of the ruine of Babylon 'tis moſt reaſonable to interpret to that ſenſe the ſmoke of her burning, by her meaning that great City in the end of the verſe, and ſo again chap. 19. 3. her ſmoke roſe up for ever and ever, Heathen Rome was deſtroyed, ſo as never to be rebuilt again; there is nothing in the contexts that inclines to any more than this. But then for Revel. 14. 9, 10, 11. I cannot thus yield. There, to deterr all from yielding to Idolatry in the leaſt degree, worſhipping the beaſt and his image, &c. the intermination goes out thus, if any man ſhall doe thus, verſ. 9. the ſame ſhall drink, &c. verſ. 10. where the bitter wine of God mixt, unmixt in the cup of his wrath, is properly ſuch a vengeance as hath, 1. No mixture or allay of mercy, 2. All the embittering ſpices added to it, and ſo fitly ſignifies deprivation of life and all that that is pretious here, and very much more of bitterneſs after it. And this is farther inforced by their being (not conſumed, but) tormented with Fire and Brimſtone (not here as Sodom was in the preſence of men, but) in the preſence of the Holy Angels, and in the preſence of the Lamb, i. e. by the ſentence of Chriſt with his aſſembly of Angels in judgment, and ſo verſ. 11. the ſmoke (not ſimply as Rev. 19. 3. nor of their burning or conſuming, as in Iſay it was, but) of their torment aſcendeth up for ever and ever; and they have no reſt day nor night (quite contrary to death whereby men reſt from their labours, and to annihilation much more, which is a perfect ceſſation and that eternal, as oppoſite as was poſſible to having no reſt day nor night) ſo chap. 19. 20. where 'tis ſaid of the beaſt and the falſe prophet, the Roman Idolatry and Magick, &c. (i. e.) the eminent ſupporters of the former by Magick and Auguries, the principal factours for the holding up the Heathen Worſhip, Apollonius Tyanæus, &c. (See note on Rev. 13. g. h. i. k.) that they were caſt alive into a Lake burning with Fire and Brimſtone, the meaning in all reaſon muſt be, that they were from this life ſentenced to be caſt into exquiſite torments, not that they were utterly deſtroy'd or conſumed, but as infallibly removed to that place of torments, as if they had gone down quick Bodies and Souls together into Hell.

Here indeed is nothing ſaid of the perpetuity of thoſe torments but that is expreſly ſet down, chap. 20. 10. not onely as far as concerns the Devil that was to bear them company, and was caſt into the Lake where they are, which by the way muſt either infer that the Devils who are not deemed to enter on their full puniſhment till the day of Doom, ſhall then alſo be annihilated, or that the wicked who are then in the ſame condition with the Devils ſhall not be conſumed or annihilated) but particularly as to them βασανισθήσονται the Beaſt and the Prophet ſhall be tormented for ever and ever. And if you ſhall demand, why I ſaid not this thus particularly in the Paraphraſe and Annotations on the places of the Revelation? I anſwer, that it was not agreeable to my deſign on that Book, which was onely to ſet down the grand lines and branches of that obſcure Prophetick Writing, and not more nicely to deſcend to every minute expreſſion in it.

Where it is ſaid, page 12. l. 8. That to apply any paſſages in the Revelation to that which is to follow after the laſt judgment, is not ſo Prophetical and therefore not ſo probable a ſenſe; I anſwer that all that is future (as ſurely all that follows the laſt judgment is) may well be ingredient in a Prophecy; and ſo in this probably enough, if either ſpeaking of vengeance on wicked men this be added over and above their viſible portion (for that ſure is very fit in a Chriſtian Prophecy, when wicked men oft thrive very proſperouſly here, till the day of full iniquity and their accounts comes, and then they die oft but as other men, and would not deterr any man from following their ſteps, if we were not admoniſht that after death they muſt meet with a diſmal Portion) or ſpeaking of the end of the World and the day of doom, the ſeveral allotments of men be there ſeaſonably mention'd alſo, as we ſee it is in Revel. 20. 12, 13, 14, 15.

As for the laſt reſerve, that if the puniſhment here deſcribed be to be underſtood of that which follows the laſt Judgment, yet no expreſſion uſed in any of thoſe Texts doth neceſſarily ſignifie an abſolute eternity of poſitive Torments; I anſwer that undoubtedly ſome do. I inſtance in Revel. 20. 10. as it hath been formerly inlarged on, (day and night for ever and ever expreſſeth an abſolute eternity, as much as any words of man can do) βασανισθήσονται doth plainly denote poſitive torments, and referring peculiarly to a rack, doth thereby denote the kind of poſitive torments to be ſuch, as are not deſigned to ending the life, but to continuing it in great pains, for ſo we know the Rack is among men.

Now for the exceptions to Revel. 20. 10. I muſt add ſomewhat. 1. 'Tis ſuggeſted that that ſeems not to be ſpoken of the laſt final judgment. I grant it is not, but of the hour of death, whereon I ſuppoſe thoſe wicked mens Souls caſt into the fire of Hell, and never reſcued from thence, till Body and Soul together at the day of doom being joyned in thoſe torments, they are ſhut up thither to all eternity. Secondly, 'tis ſuggeſted that it ſeems not to be meant of Hell (i. e.) Gehenna, into which none were ever caſt alive, i. e. before the firſt death. To this I anſwer, that to be caſt alive into Hell is a phraſe like to that of going down quick into Hell, uſed of them whom the earth ſwallowed up. Wherein 'tis more than poſſible that ſuch notorious ſinners might go, bodies and ſouls together, to Hell, without any previous ſeparation by death; by the ſame analogy whereby we believe that Enoch and Elias went up, bodies and ſouls, into Heaven, without ſeeing death; and whereby we believe the ſame of thoſe that ſhall be found alive at Chriſt's coming, both wicked and Godly. But then, ſecondly, if this be not certain enough to be adhered to, then the phraſe will ſignifie as ſuddenly and really to be caſt into thoſe Flames, and there to be tormented, as they could be imagin'd to be, if bodies and ſouls together they ſhould be caſt alive thither; and ſo this is a direct prejudice to the ſleeping of their ſouls, or receiving any interval of reſt from their paſſing out of this life, and their entring into the torments of Hell.

Of the places in the Apocalypſe ſome things are added, to the taking off from their force, Firſt, a deſperation of any certain underſtanding of that book. To which I anſwer, that 'tis but a panick and popular fear, which is the authour of that deſperation, and keeping men from the ſtudy of it, makes it neceſſarily unintelligible; whereas Firſt, there be many repeated paſſages of Chriſt in it, deſigned on purpoſe to excite men to the ſtudying of it. Secondly, there are evident characters, which ſerve as keys to the underſtanding of it, and nothing but the ſeeking and fanſying depths and myſteries in it, hath made it ſo myſterious: the meaning neareſt to literal, and ſuch, as by comparing it with other prophecies, appears to be the one prophetical ſignification of each paſſage, will be found to be the trueſt; and they that ſtrain higher, and ſeek farther off, to find what was never intended by the Inſpirer, or the Amanuenſis, are the men that have made this Prophecy obſcure, which would otherwiſe be as perſpicuous as any one of the greater Prophets of the Old Teſtament. Secondly, when 'tis ſuggeſted, that the places for interminable pains are but two or three, and thoſe oppoſed to as many hundreds, which are to be alledged againſt this ſenſe. I anſwer, that as few or as many as they are, (it matters not for number, one affirmation of God's will eſtabliſh a truth) Firſt, they accord with many others in writings not obſcure or prophetick. Secondly, there is no one (much leſs many hundreds) producible to the contrary ſenſe, as hath hitherto appeared by examining all ſuch as were pretended to be oppoſite, but were found very reconcilable with the ſenſe. Thirdly, when the obſcurity of the Writer is again mentioned, that hath been already ſpoken to on the firſt place.

Concerning

Concerning the reaſons which are uſed to ſecure the places for eternal life for to ſignifie that, though eternal torments be not allowed to be properly eternal, I have little to ſay, becauſe I fully acknowledge that importance of the word eternal, whether to bliſs or woe. And I think it hath already appeared, that there are not theſe reaſons of difference between them as now are mentioned. For, firſt, as there are no texts in the Goſpel which ſeem to oppoſe the abſolute ſenſe of eternity in the promiſes, ſo thoſe that were thought to ſeem to oppoſe the abſolute eternity of the threats, having been brought to trial have been found very light; and, ſecondly, the doctrine of eternal torments truly ſtated and vindicated from the miſtakes by men introduced into the doctrine, hath appeared moſt credible alſo to thoſe that believe the Goſpel; and as neceſſary to God's juſtice as he is Rector of the Univerſe, and as agreeable to his goodneſs, who earneſtly averts their dying that will needs die, as the eternal promiſes are reconcilable to all the Attributes of God. Thirdly, that as there are negatives that irrefragably confirm the truth of the article concerning Eternal life, ſo there are affirmatives and negatives both (each is therefore not quenched) that as irrefragably eſtabliſh the truth of the doctrine of eternal torments. As for the Philoſophical doctrine of the immortality of the ſoul, I yield it can import no more, than either its not being corruptible from any outward principles, nor deſtructible from any created power; I yield it (for all that) deſtructible by God, but have formerly anſwered how that place, Mat. 10. 28. hath nothing to doe with his will or purpoſe to annihilate it.

Laſtly, As for tradition, as that ſignifies the ſuffrages of all the men in the World. Heathens of all ſorts, Jews of all ſects, Mahometans, Chriſtians heretical as well as orthodox, it matters not though this doctrine be not deduced by ſuch abſolutely univerſal tradition. I yield that many Heathens there were that believed it, that the Sadducees denied it, that the Jews now adays care for none but themſelves, and ſo make no proviſion for other men, that there have been Origeniſt Hereticks, and ſome ſuch as Auguſtine mentions, Enchir. c. 122. de civit. Dei l. 21. cap. 17, 18. ('tis no news that there ſhould have been falſe teachers and believers in the World:) But that Auguſtine, who is confeſt frequently to aſſert the doctrine and frequently to defend it againſt adverſaries, ſhould yet be believed to doubt, lib. de ſerm. Dom. in mont. tom. 4. ſuper Matth. 5. 25, 26. I am not apt to give heed to it. Becauſe, firſt, if the ſame Auguſtine ſhould be ſo uncertain and unconſtant, he were little worth heeding on either ſide. Secondly, there would be reaſon to reſolve, that the place, where the doubting is found, was either not written by him, who wrote elſewhere ſo contrarily, or were written by him before he had competently conſidered the grounds, whereon afterwards he eſtabliſheth his acknowledgements of the truth. But the truth is, I diſcern not how thoſe words [neque ita hoc dixerim, ut diligentiorem tractationem videar ademiſſe, de pœnis peccatorum quomodo in Sacris dicantur æternæ] ſhould be interpreted, ſo as to expreſs him a doubter in this matter. In other circumſtances he might well give men liberty of expreſſion, yet himſelf never have the leaſt ſuſpicion or doubt of the truth of the main Article. It remains therefore that the Scripture, as that hath been found conſonant and agreeable to all other places of it ſelf, and as it hath been interpreted by all learned Orthodox men of all ages, and as from the Apoſtles time to this day their doctrine hath been delivered down in the Creed of the Apoſtles, and other occaſional explications thereof, doth as evidently affirm the eternity of the torments of the wicked on the one ſide, as the eternity of the joys and bliſs of the godly on the other ſide; and that as far as the Catholick Church in all ages hath extended, in oppoſition to the heterodox and heretical, ſo far the tradition of this Article for eternal pains is univerſal, and therefore in no reaſon to be doubted of by a meek Son of this perſecuted Church, which profeſſeth readily and uniformly to receive all Catholick Tradition, truly ſo called, as that includes the writings and preachings of the Apoſtles. Having gone thus far, and at laſt arrived to the concluſion, in the ſame poſture (with ſome intermiſſions) of the Chair, wherein the Gout had faſtned me; I now find the uſe of my foot return'd again, and ſo take my leave of this paper and my chair together, and by the length of it ſuppoſe I have your full leave ſo to do. When you have ſurvey'd it as deliberately as you deſire, I deſire that you will return mine own to me, not weighing too ſeverely what was written thus haſtily. But remember, if any one text of Scripture, or teſtification of the Churches ſenſe of all times (including the Apoſtles) be producible, it is ſufficient for the eſtabliſhing this truth, though many paſſages produced, or defences made for the farther confirming of it, ſhould not be found rigorouſly Concludent or Demonſtrative. The God of Heaven, Authour of all Grace and Truth be now and ever with you.

SIR,

IN your account of the eternity of infernal puniſhments you make them conſiſt in the perſevering appetition and averſation of thoſe things (then impoſſible to be obtained or avoided) which formerly in via men have deſired and averted. To this ſtating of this matter muchwhat the like with Sir Ken. Digby's and Mr. White's, I have more to object than is fit for a Letter. Some few heads of Exceptions I ſhall briefly note to you. Firſt, I ſee not how this agrees with the nature of the judgment to come; the giving and executing a ſentence upon wicked men. This we are every where taught in Scripture and our Creed. But your ſtating, which onely leaves men with thoſe deſires and averſions wherein they lived here, and ſo die, without ſentencing them to any other puniſhment but what they thus bring with them, and ſo is already inflicted on them, and needs no Devils to execute it, ſeems not reconcilable herewith. Secondly, the Matter of this ſentence is expreſſed in Scripture to be a lake of Fire and Brimſtone, into which they are caſt, which muſt be a very ſtrange figurative expreſſion, if it ſignifie no more than their own voluntary acts, appetitions and averſations. Thirdly, it is manifeſt, that thoſe diſeaſes which precede many Mens deaths, do change their appetitions and averſations. The luxurious Man on his ſick Bed hath not thoſe vehement deſires of Women, delicate meats, &c. which he had in his health: Why then ſhould I think think that after Death his appetites of what he desired in via, viz. in his life and health, should continue to him? Nay, 4. When Souls are devested of those Bodies which were the necessary Instruments, and also the fomenters of those carnal sins, and again when the body before its reunion is so changed as not to be sustained, as in via it is, by eating and drinking, 'tis not imaginable it should retain those natural desires which in via it had: And when they no more marry in Hell than Heaven, and are as equal to evil Angels, as the Saints in Heaven are to good ones, and the natural end of all carnal desires ceasing, it is not imaginable God should continue those desires to them for ever. Or if any should so conceive, many strange wild consequences unfit to name, would be equally probable and equally unimaginable. 5. By this stating, the loss of Heaven will from hence onely be penal, that Men desired Heaven in via, or judged it fit to be desired. And if so, it will be no punishment to them that never thought of it at all, as infidels, or despised it (as they did all spiritual joys, and thought it not worth desiring) as they that placed all their appetites on carnal and material pleasures; which are the worst sort of men, who in consequence hereunto must be least punisht in Hell pœna damni.

Having said thus much against your Scheme, I owe my self the pains of adding a word or two for the defence of the way that I have used in the Practical Catechism, viz. by considering the option given to us by God, wherein you seem to me not to have observed that, on which the chief weight of my account was designed to lie.

That God propos'd to Men life and death, blessing and cursing, eternal joys and eternal pains, as the Rector of the Universe, I take for granted; and so do you, as an Article of our Faith: So that of the an sit the question is not, but considering the transitory short pleasures of sin, the onely question is, How eternal pains are with any justice proportion'd to them: and to that the answer is, Not that they are proportion'd to them, but that there is no need they should be, because God having propos'd the joys of Heaven, and (much more) immunity from these pains upon terms put absolutely in our power, it is merely our own fault, not imputable to the decree of God, if we fall under those hardest pains. The extremity of which was primarily design'd, as by all prudent Lawgivers punishments are, to deter men from those sins which are fenced with so thorny an hedge; not that they may be inflicted on any, but that all may be kept innocent: and in this sense 'tis ordinarily observ'd, that the everlasting Fire which is threatned men, was prepar'd for the Devil and his Angels. Yet when such threats are entred into those Laws, whereby the Universe is governed; it is just and reasonable that they should be also actually perform'd on the disobedient: else it were as good, nay better to all political ends, that they had never been made or promulgate. And if still, when they come to be inflicted, they appear to be hard, or above the proportion of the offence, there are yet other ways of superseding that exception beside the evacuating the decree: viz. The several branches of the ἐπείκεια all which the Gospel hath provided in this matter.

First, That those which we could not (either by Physical or moral possibility) avoid, should not be charg'd upon us to this condemnation, as Original sin; sins of Weakness, Ignorance, sudden surprise, Indeliberation, &c.

Secondly, That known deliberate voluntary sins, if timely retracted by repentance, humiliation, confession, change of mind, shall not fall under it.

Thirdly, That God gives sufficient grace to avoid all wilfull sin, and again sufficient grace to repent, when it hath been committed; and inflicts it not till he sees men go on obstinately, and that they will not repent.

Fourthly, That he calls, and warns and importunes them to consult their own safety, to make use of his grace timely, and not obstinately to harden their hearts against their own mercy, and so to perish in despight of mercy.

Fifthly, That he offers not onely deliverance from these torments, but over and above, eternal joys upon so easie terms of so moderate nay desirable performances, that they which will neglect so great Salvation propos'd to them, with so many advantages and concurrence of all rational motives; and finally make so mad a choice as to take Hell as it were by violence, cannot but be thought worthy to take their portion in that Lake be it never so punitive and endless: Because though in respect of that one sin (the short pleasure that comes in to them by sin compar'd with intensive endless flames) there is no proportion, yet 1. In respect of their obstinacy and unexcusableness; 2. In respect of God's tenderness, using all wise means of moderating the rigour of his Law by the Gospel (though not by utter abrogating his Laws, which becomes not either a just or wise Lawgiver, or Rectour of the Universe) all shew of Injustice is remov'd: particularly by the second taken alone, (much more in union with the first and third) the rule being owned by all rational men volenti non fit injuria, be the evil never so great, 'tis just they should have it, that finally make it their choice, (so doth the persevering Impenitent) and that not onely an hasty passionate choice as Nero's Mother's, Occidat modò imperet, (which yet Historians observe to have brought her death justly upon her) but a deliberate, stanch, obstinate, constant choice, when their Creatour, and Redeemer, and Sanctifier have us'd all prudent probable means to gain them to better counsels and choices, but all in vain, they die because they will die: When yet they are oft warn'd (and expostulated with) of the irrationalness of that will or choice. 'Tis true, when they come to suffer their own choices, they are far from liking them (as Xiphilin observ'd of Nero's Mother in the forementiond case) and then 'tis likely would fly from them, call to the mountains to cover them from the wrath of the Lamb: But their choices being primarily terminated in the pleasant sins, but consequentially in the pains annexed to them by God's Law, 'twill be as unreasonable that they which have chosen the former should be freed from the latter, as that he that hath bought a Commodity at a price, and bound himself to a day of payment, should, after he hath enjoy'd and spent the Commodity, be excus'd from paying the price of it by pretending it was not really worth so much, when it appears by his bargain that he himself thus valued it, and willingly took it at this price, and hath now chang'd his mind on no other consideration, but because the enjoyment, for which alone he valued it, is past, and none but the payment behind, which consider'd by it self, every man acknowledges to be the ungratefull part; and so he did when yet on intuition of the more pleasant he made choice of it.

I have thus far enlarged to give you a clearer view of the force of the opion in this matter, than I can discern you to have had of it; and consequently to shew you the insufficiency of the reason on which you reject it; when you say, that upon this Hypothesis it should seem to be concluded, that eternal life is owing to Piety ex justitia. But to this I reply: 1. That it were no news from S. Paul's words [That God the righteous Judge shall give the Crown of righteousness to all that keep the Faith, &c.] to conclude that that Crown is some way due to Piety ex justitia. But then secondly, My Argument from the opion hath no least need of so affirming, but becomes much the stronger the less that be affirm'd; For the less rewardable in it self our Piety is, the more mercy and superabundant goodness it is in God thus to decree the rewarding it; and the more undeserv'd that Mercy, and the easier the condition of it, the more Criminous is the guilt of those that despise and contemn it, and prefer sin, and impenitence, and eternal death before it.

A N

AN ACCORDANCE OF Saint PAUL with Saint JAMES, In the great Point of FAITH and WORKS.

HE that ſaith with Saint Paul, a man is juſtified by Faith and not by Works, and to reconcile Saint James with Saint Paul, affirms, that good Works are the effect of true Faith, means either that true faith where e'er it is, is able to produce good works, though it do not always actually produce them; or elſe, that it actually and neceſſarily produceth them. If the former be his meaning, then I conceive it true in ſome degree, but not pertinent to his purpoſe of reconciling Saint James with Saint Paul, becauſe faith may be able to produce them, and yet never actually produce them; and ſo the man that is ſuppoſed to be juſtified by faith never be able to ſhew his works, which Saint James requires of him, and conſequently his faith be a dead faith, i. e. not able to juſtifie. But if the latter be his meaning; that true faith, whereſoever it is, actually and neceſſarily produceth good works, I conceive it falſe; yet can I not diſpute againſt him in thoſe terms, by inſtancing in any particular to the contrary. Becauſe he hath a guard or hold for himſelf to fortifie him againſt any aſſault, by affirming to any ſuch inſtance of mine, where good works were not produced, that that faith was not true faith; which yet if he ſhould be put to prove, he would have no other reaſon to confirm it, but onely becauſe it produceth not good works; being ready, if it did produce good works to acknowledge it true faith; which how guilty it is of thoſe two faults in diſputing, circulus and petitio principii, I think is manifeſt to any. Yet being by this Sophiſm of his interdicted this way of proceeding, I have but one way of arguing left me; firſt, to demand his definition of true faith, and whatſoever definition he gives, to prove that faith, in that notion of his, is the cauſe of good works at the moſt, but as a man is the cauſe of a child, a true perfect, univocal cauſe of the effect, when the effect is produced; but yet ſuch a one, as might have ſuſpended that action, by which it was produced, and ſo might have been as truly a man without the actual producing of that effect, as he is now, he hath produced it: that is, that faith is a rational or moral, not natural agent, working freely, not neceſſarily.

To bring this operation to practice, I will ſuppoſe this definition of faith to be given me (which by them that affirm good works to be an effect of faith is ordinarily given) that it is a fiducial aſſent to the promiſes of Chriſt. Where that I may not miſtake him, I muſt firſt demand, whether he conceives theſe promiſes, which are the object of his faith, to be abſolute, or conditional. If he affirm them abſolute, made to mens perſons, or individual Entities, without reſpect of their qualifications or demeanours, then ſurely that faith, which ſuppoſeth all kind of qualifications of the ſubject ſo unneceſſary, will never ſo much as move me to produce good works, becauſe I may as well be ſaved without them, the promiſes being ſuppoſed without condition; and therefore he that affirms good works to avail nothing in the buſineſs of attaining to ſalvation, cannot, without contradicting himſelf, ſay, that his faith muſt neceſſarily produce good works, if it be a ſaving faith: for ſure all that neceſſity proceeds from a believing, that without good works there is no ſalvation to be had; which if it be not believed, that neceſſity ceaſeth. But if he affirm the promiſes, which are the object of his faith, to be conditional, then I muſt ask, what he takes this condition to be, either faith alone, or good works alone, or faith and good works together: if faith alone, then (beſide the ridiculouſneſs of that, in making the believing that I ſhall be ſaved, the onely ground of my believing I ſhall be ſaved) the former inconvenience recurs again, that that faith which ſuppoſeth faith onely to be a condition of the promiſes, will find good works as unneceſſary, as that faith which ſuppos'd the promiſes to be abſolute, and ſo will never incline me to them neither. If he affirm the condition of the promiſes to be good works alone (I mean by good works all other graces beſides faith, contrition, amendment of life, charity, holineſs, &c.) then he acknowledgeth, that theſe good works are of themſelves ſimply requir'd of a man that is, or will be a believer; and ſo that they are no neceſſary effect of faith, for if they were, it would be enough to require faith alone, and they would undoubtedly follow without requiring. For I conceive it ridiculous to make the condition of an Indenture ſomething that is neceſſarily annext to the poſſeſſion of the demiſe. If he affirm faith and good works neither ſingle, but both together to be the adequate condition of the promiſes, which Saint Paul calls faith conſummate by charity, Saint James, faith made perfect by works, Saint Paul again νόμῳ & νόμου (which certainly is the truth) then firſt I muſt admoniſh him, that his fiducial aſſent, by which he defines faith, muſt not ſignifie a believing with reliance, that he is one of them that ſhall be partakers of what is promiſed, which they are wont to call ſpecial faith, or particular application; for that muſt either ſuppoſe them to have performed the condition, and ſo good works in them (yea and faith) muſt be before faith; or elſe it is the believing confidently of a lye, it being abſolutely falſe, that the thing promiſed belongs to any that hath not performed the condition.

But his fiducial aſſent, if it be a tolerable definition of faith, muſt be (anſwerable to the promiſes) onely this, a believing and relying conditional; that he ſhall be partaker of what is promiſed, that is, a believing (and depending on it) that God will not fail him, if he fail not God: that God will give him heaven, if he perform ſincere obedience, and rely upon the gift of Chriſt, not on any merit of his obedience for the attaining of it. Now to ſay the truth, this fiducial aſſent thus expreſs'd (and none but this) may truly be affirm'd to be a moſt powerfull motive to me to produce good works; but then it is as true, that it is as powerfull a motive to me to rely on the gift of Chriſt, and ſo in that reſpect faith may be ſaid to produce good works, faith may alſo be ſaid to produce that which they call faith, i. e. the believing, that if I obey and rely, I ſhall be ſaved, is a motive thus to produce actual relying; and in this ſenſe I will acknowledge both (if he, with whom I diſpute, will thank me for it.) But then, ſecondly, it follows not that that which is a powerfull motive, is a cauſe neceſſarily producing, becauſe that motive is but a moral motive, perſwading not enforcing, and man by corruption, or by ſome prevailing temptation may reſiſt that motive, and I think 'twould be no Paradox to ſay, that ſome men have made no doubt of the truth of God's conditional promiſes, i. e. have verily perſwaded themſelves, that if they ſerved God ſincerely, they ſhall be ſaved, and yet quite neglected God's ſervice: and if it be objected, that they want the fiducial, though they have the aſſent, and that if they had the affiance, they would aſſuredly produce good works; I anſwer, that by that affiance they mean either abſolute aſſurance that they ſhall be ſaved, (and that, if it be not an errour, ſuppoſeth good works; if it be, produceth them not) or elſe a conditional affiance, and then again I affirm of that, that it is no more than what I expreſt by making no manner of doubt, but if they ſerve God ſincerely, they ſhall be ſaved; which though I believe to be a moſt powerfull motive to obedience, yet I conceive not a neceſſary irreſiſtible cauſe, (becauſe 'tis onely a moral motive) nay nor that that always produceth the effect. Firſt, becauſe the fooliſh Virgins had as much of this as the wiſe, for ought we ſee; and after the door is ſhut come as confidently, Lord, Lord, open to us, and yet it ſeems did not watch and make ready their Lamps, which was the act of obedience requir'd of them; and the want of it forfeited their hopes. 2. Becauſe the unprofitable ſervant that profeſſeth he knew that God reaped where he ſowed not, yet hid the Talent in a Napkin, put it not out to the exchangers. 3. Becauſe the exhortations of Chriſt and the Apoſtles are generally to good works, as well as to faith, nay much more frequently, which argues to me that faith doth not neceſſarily produce good works, and they that are ſuppoſed to have faith are exhorted to add to their faith vertue, 2 Pet. 1. 5. which (if Faith were a neceſſary cauſe of Works) were all one as to exhort the Fire to burn, the Water to moiſten, &c. 4. Becauſe there is a difference obſerved in Scripture between a working and a non-working Faith, and the privileges are beſtowed onely on the firſt, by which it is plain, that it is poſſible for it not to work. 5. Becauſe faith is ſaid to be made perfect by works, Jam. 2. 22. which ſure an agent cannot be ſaid to be by producing an effect, which it cannot but produce; as the act of Humectation adds no degree of perfection to the water. Nay 'tis a general rule, that the producing of what effect ſoever adds no perfection to the cauſe, ſave onely relative; as the begetting of a Son adds onely the relation of a Father, but nothing elſe more than he was before; it rather ſuppoſeth him perfect before, which is the importance of the Logick axiome, effectus eſt extra naturam cauſæ. All that can truly and in propriety of ſpeech be ſaid of Faith in this matter, is this; that Faith is ſo ſtrong a motive to obedience, that if it be drawn as a Weapon to the purpoſe, and uſed as it ſhould, it would in reaſon out-balance all the contrary temptations to diſobedience: and if the will, which hath the caſting voice, give its ſuffrage, as in reaſon it ought, it ſhall then infallibly produce obedience; but yet not irreſiſtibly, becauſe that will being ſtill a free faculty at leaſt to evil, may after all the propoſal of motives either ſuſpend its Action, or elſe doe that which it ſhould not. For ſure it is an errour of Socinus to affirm cognitionem rerum pulchrarum aut turpium, quales præter alias ſunt res honeſtæ & vitioſæ; harum odium, illarum amorem neceſſariò gignere; and that Socrates's ſpeech (præſente ſcientia fieri non poſſe ut quis incontinens ſit) was true with this Caution, ut quis ſciat res honeſtas, eas facienti magnum commodum allaturas, def. diſp. de loco c. 7. ad Rom. and in 1 Joh. 4. 8. If by amor and odium he mean proſecutio and averſatio, as 'tis plain he doth by that which follows. For ſure Medea was not deceived in her ſelf when ſhe ſaid, video meliora probóque, deteriora ſequor. And ſo many, who make no doubt of an Heaven to belong to all penitent reformed Servants of Chriſt, and that that Heaven contains joys above all that the World can afford, do yet chuſe the pleaſures of ſin for the preſent ſeaſon; like Ephraim that is likened to an Heifer that loved to tread out the corn, betook her ſelf to that courſe which for the preſent yielded ſome profit (as the Heifer being by the Law then unmuſled, might eat as ſhe trod it out) that had its reward at that minute, that ſhe did the work. Whence is all this? but from hence, that the carnal pleaſures of ſin for the preſent obtain the conſent of the will againſt all the future pleaſures and joys of Heaven, joyn'd with the ſowreneſs of preſent obedience; which could never be, if believing the promiſes always either neceſſarily, or infallibly produced good works.

THE

BEING

Two PRAYERS for the Peacefull re-ſettlement of this CHURCH and STATE.

Prayer I.

O Bleſſed Lord, who in thine infinite mercy didſt vouchſafe to plant a glorious Church among us, and now in thy juſt judgment haſt permitted our ſins and follies to root it up, be pleaſed at laſt to reſume thoughts of peace towards us, that we may do the like to one another. Lord, look down from heaven, the habitation of thy holineſs, and behold the ruines of a deſolated Church, and compaſſionate to ſee her in the duſt. Behold her, O Lord, not onely broken, but crumbled, divided into ſo many ſects and factions, that ſhe no longer repreſents the Ark of the God of Iſrael, where the Covenant and the Manna were conſerved, but the Ark of Noah, filled with all various ſorts of unclean beaſts; and to complete our miſery and guilt, the ſpirit of diviſion hath inſinuated it ſelf as well into our affections as our judgments; that badge of Diſcipleſhip which thou recommendedſt to us, is caſt off, and all the contrary wrath and bitterneſs, anger and clamour, called in to maintain and widen our breaches. O Lord, how long ſhall we thus violate and defame that Goſpel of peace that we profeſs? how long ſhall we thus madly defeat our ſelves, loſe that Chriſtianity which we pretend to ſtrive for? O thou which makeſt men to be of one mind in an houſe, be pleaſed ſo to unite us, that we may be perfectly joyned together in the ſame mind, and in the ſame judgment. And now that in Civil affairs there ſeems ſome aptneſs to a compoſure, O let not our Spiritual differences be more unreconcilable. Lord, let not the rougheſt winds blow out of the Sanctuary; let not thoſe which ſhould be thy Embaſſadours for peace ſtill ſound a Trumpet for War: but do thou reveal thy ſelf to all our Elijah's in that ſtill ſmall voice, which may teach them to echo thee in the like meek treating with others. Lord, let no unſeaſonable ſtiffneſs of thoſe that are in the right, no perverſe obſtinacy of thoſe that are in the wrong, hinder the cloſing of our wounds; but let the one inſtruct in meekneſs, and be thou pleaſed to give the other repentance to the acknowledgment of the truth. To this end do thou, O Lord, mollifie all exaſperated minds, take off all animoſities and prejudices, contempt and heart-burnings, and by uniting their hearts prepare for the reconciling their opinions: and that nothing may intercept the clear ſight of thy truth, Lord, let all private and ſecular deſigns be totally depoſited, that gain may no longer be the meaſure of our Godlineſs, but that the one great and common concernment of truth and peace may be unanimouſly and vigorouſly purſued. Lord, the hearts of all men are in thy hands, O be thou pleaſed to let thy Spirit of peace overſhadow the minds of all contending parties; and, if it be thy will, reſtore this Church to her priſtine ſtate, renew her days as of old; let her eſcape out of Egypt be ſo entire, that not an hoof may be left behind: But if thy wiſedom ſee it not yet a ſeaſon for ſo full a deliverance, Lord, defer not, we beſeech thee, ſuch a degree of it, as may at leaſt ſecure her a being; if ſhe cannot recover her beauty, yet, O Lord, grant her health, ſuch a ſoundneſs of conſtitution as may preſerve her from diſſolution. Let thy providence find out ſome good Samaritans to cure her preſent wounds: and to whomſoever thou ſhalt commit that important work, Lord, give them skilfull hands and compaſſionate hearts; direct them to ſuch applications as may moſt ſpeedily, and yet moſt ſoundly, heal the hurt of the daughter of Sion; and make them ſo advert to the intereſts both of truth and peace, that no lawfull condeſcenſion may be omitted, nor any unlawfull made. And do thou, who art both the wonderfull Counſellour and Prince of peace, ſo guide and proſper all pacifick endeavours, that all our diſtractions may be compoſed, and our Jeruſalem may again become a City at unity in it ſelf; that thoſe happy primitive days may at length revert, wherein Vice was the onely hereſie; that all our inteſtine contentions may be converted into a vigorous oppoſition of our common enemy, our unbrotherly feuds into a Chriſtian zeal againſt all that exalts it ſelf againſt the obedience of Chriſt. Lord, hear us, and ordain peace for us, even for his ſake whom thou haſt ordained our Peace-maker, Jeſus Chriſt our Lord.

Prayer

Prayer II.

O Moſt gracious Lord, who doſt not afflict willingly, nor grieve the children of men, who ſmiteſt not till the importunity of our ſins enforce thee, and then correcteſt in meaſure, we thy unworthy creatures humbly acknowledge that we have abundantly taſted of this patience and lenity of thine. To what an enormous height were our ſins arrived e'er thou beganſt to viſit them! and when thou couldſt no longer forbear, yet maſtering thy power, thou haſt not proportioned thy vengeance to our crimes, but to thy own gracious deſign of reducing and reclaiming us. Lord, had the firſt ſtroke of thy hand been exterminating, our guilts had juſtified the method; but thou haſt proceeded by ſuch eaſie and gentle degrees, as witneſs how much thou deſiredſt to be interrupted, and ſhew us, that all that ſad weight we have long groaned under, hath been accumulated onely by our own incorrigibleneſs. 'Tis now, O Lord, theſe many years that this Nation hath been in the furnace, and yet our droſs waſtes not but increaſes; and it is owing onely to thy unſpeakable mercy, that we, who would not be purified, are not conſumed; that we remain a Nation, who ceaſe not to be a moſt ſinfull, and provoking nation. O Lord, let not this long-ſuffering of thine ſerve onely to upbraid our obſtinacy, and enhanſe our guilt; but let it at laſt have the proper effect on us, melt our hearts, and lead us to repentance. And oh, that this may be the day for us thus to diſcern the things that belong to our peace! that all who are (yea, and all who are not) caſt down this day in an external humiliation, may by the operation of thy mighty Spirit have their ſouls laid proſtrate before thee in a ſincere contrition! O thou who canſt out of the very ſtones raiſe up children unto Abraham, work our ſtony flinty hearts into ſuch a temper as may be malleable to the impreſſions of thy grace, that all the ſinners in Sion may tremble; that we may not by a perſevering obſtinacy ſeal to our ſelves both temporal and eternal ruine; but inſtead of our mutinous complaining at the puniſhments of our ſins, ſearch and try our ways, and turn again to the Lord. O be thou pleas'd to grant us this one grand fundamental mercy, that we who ſo impatiently thirſt after a change without us, may render that poſſible and ſafe by this better and more neceſſary change within us; that our ſins may not as they have ſo often done, interpoſe and eclipſe that light which now begins to break out upon us. Lord, thy dove ſeems to approach us with an olive-branch in her mouth, O let not our filth and noiſomneſs chaſe her away; but grant us that true repentance which may atone thee, and that Chriſtian charity which may reconcile us with one another. Lord, let not our breach either with thee or among our ſelves be incurable, but by making up the firſt prepare us for the healing of the latter. And becauſe, O Lord, the way to make us one fold is to have one ſhepherd, be pleaſed to put us all under the conduct of Him to whom that charge belongs; bow the hearts of this people as of one man, that the onely contention may be who ſhall be moſt forward in bringing back our David. O let none reflect on their paſt guilts as an argument to perſevere, but repent, and to make their return ſo ſincere as may qualifie them not onely for his but thy Mercy. And, Lord, be pleas'd ſo to guide the hearts of all who ſhall be intruſted with that great concernment of ſetling this nation, that they may weigh all their deliberations in the balance of the Sanctuary, that conſcience, not intereſt, may be the ruling principle, and that they may render to Cæſar the things that are Cæſar's, and to God the things that are God's; that they may become healers of our breaches, and happy repairers of the ſad ruines both in Church and State: and grant, O Lord, that as thoſe ſins which made them are become National, ſo the repentance may be National alſo, and that evidenc'd by the proper fruits of it, by zeal of reſtoring the rights both of thee and thine Anointed. And do thou, O Lord, ſo diſpoſe all hearts, and remove all obſtacles, that none may have the will, much leſs the power, to hinder his peaceable reſtitution. And, Lord, let him bring with him an heart ſo intirely devoted to thee, that he may wiſh his own honour onely as a means to advance thine. O let the precepts and example of his Bleſſed Father never depart from his mind; and as thou wert pleas'd to perfect the one by ſuffering, ſo perfect the other by acting thy will; that He may be a bleſſed inſtrument of replanting the power inſtead of the form of Godlineſs among us, of reſtoring Chriſtian vertue in a profane and almoſt barbarous Nation. And if any wiſh him for any diſtant ends, if any deſire his ſhadow as a ſhelter for their riots and licentiouſneſs, O let him come a great but happy defeat to all ſuch, not bring fewel, but cure, to their inordinate appetites; and by his example as a Chriſtian, and his Authority as a King, ſo invite to good, and reſtrain from evil, that he may not onely releaſe our temporal, but our ſpiritual bondage, ſuppreſs thoſe foul and ſcandalous vices which have ſo long captivated us, and by ſecuring our inward, provide for the perpetuating our outward peace. Lord, eſtabliſh thou his throne in righteouſneſs, make him a ſignal inſtrument of thy glory and our happineſs, and let him reap the fruits of it in comfort here, and in bliſs hereafter; that ſo his earthly Crown may ſerve to enhanſe and enrich his heavenly. Grant this, O King of Kings, for the ſake and interceſſion of our Bleſſed Mediatour, Jeſus Chriſt.
